Memoir in Strype.

9. Away; be gone; go forth.

Artesis, that best knowest

How to draw out, fit to this enterprise,

The prim'st for this proceeding, and the number

To carry such a business; forth, and levy

Our worthiest instruments.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me

From forth the streets of Pomfret.

Shakespeare.

Some forth their cabins peep,

And trembling ask what news, and do hear so

As jealous husbands, what they would not know.

Donne.

FORTH.* n. s. [Su. Goth. fort, a common way; Welsh, fford; Cornish, fird; Germ. furt.] A way; "a forthe, or a cart-way." Ort. Vocab. 1514. Not now in use.

FORTHCO'MING.† adj. [forth and coming. Saxon, forþ-cuman.] Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost; not suffered to escape.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

But why do they lodge there? —
That they may be safe and forth-coming.
Beaum. and Fl. Martial Maid.

TO FORTH'NK.* v. a. [for and think; Germ. for-thencan.] To repent of; "to be sorry for," Prompt. Parvulorum; to unthink.

Of it be not too bolde,
Lest thou forththink it when thou art too olde.
Old Interlude of Youth.

Then gan he think, perforce with sword and targe
Her forth to fetch, and Proteus to constraine:
But soon he gan such folly to forthinke again.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. xii. 14.

FORTH'SSUING. adj. [forth and issue.] Coming out; coming forward from a covert.

Forthissuing thus, she gave him first to wield
A weighty ax, with truest temper steel'd,
And double edg'd.
Pope, Odys.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [forth and right.] Strait forward; without flexions. Not in use.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seem'd as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind.
Sidney.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself.
Sidney.

Arrived there, they pass'd in forthright;
For still to all the gate stood open wide.
Thither forthright he rode to rouse the prey.
Spenser, F. Q. Dryden.

FORTHRIGHT. n. s. A straight path.
Hero's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders.
Shakespeare, Tempest.

FO'RTHWARD.* adv. In our old authors this word is used for forward.

He promyseth to them that goo forthwarde and profyte in it [penaunce] joye.
Bp. Fisher, Ps. 23.

FORTHWITH. adv. [forth and with.] Immediately; without delay; at once; strait.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous sights
And dreams, gan now to take more sound repast.
Spenser.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate.
Hooker.

Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire.
Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,
The rattling drums.
Daniel, Civil Wars.

The winged heralds, by command
Of sov'reign pow'r, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held
At Pandemonium.
Milton, P. L.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived.
South.

FO'RTHY.* adv. [Sax. forðr.] Therefore. A common word with Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer. Now obsolete.

Thomalin, have no care forthy;
Moele will have a double eye,
Ylike to my flocke and thine.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. March.

Faire lady, through foule sorrow ill bedight,
Great pity is to see you thus dismay'd,
And marre the blossom of your beauty bright;
Forthy appease your grief and heavy plight,
And tell the cause of your conceived payne.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 14.

FO'RTIETH. adv. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail
To be the fortieth man in an entail?
Donne.

Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FO'RTIFIABLE.† adj. [fortifiable, French.] What may be fortified. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

FORTIFICATION. n. s. [fortification, French; from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœnicians, though an unwarlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Broome, on the Odyssey.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgements, might dispense some advantage. Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote. Gov. of the Tongue.

FO'RTIFIER. n. s. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

TO FORTIFY. v. a. [fortifier, French.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunstan he strongly fortifies. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
He fortified the city against besieging. Eccles. i. 4.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.

To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned. Ralegh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face.
Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

TO FO'RTIFY.† v. n. To raise strong places. Dr.

Johnson cites the following passage from Milton as an illustration of this definition; but the verb here is active, and means to strengthen the dark abyss by the works constructed.

Thou art impow'r'd
To fortify thus far, and overlay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss. Milton, P. L.

FO'RTILAGE. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort; a block-house.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win. Spenser.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the straight. Spenser on Ireland.

FOR

FORTIN. n. s. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hanmer.

Thou hast talk'd
Of palisadoes, fortins, parapets. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FORTITUDE. n. s. [fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The better fortitude
Of patience, and heroick martyrdom
Unsung. Milton, P. L.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell!
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

FORTLET. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort.

FORTNIGHT. n. s. [contracted from fourteen nights, peopepcyne niht, Saxon.] It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day seven night. So Tacitus, "Non dierum numerum ut nos, sed noctium computant." The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnights' space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, till about a fortnight before. Swift.

FORTRESS. n. s. [forteresse, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Spenser on Ireland.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill;
Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave. Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose conquering name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet make these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

To FORTRESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To guard; to fortify.

Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harm. Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuit, French; fortuitus, Lat.] Our own word was originally fortuit. Chaucer uses it in his translation of Boethius. So late as in 1656 fortuitous was thought, according to Heylin, new and uncouth. Fortuit was not then disused. Sir K. Digby employs that word.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Ray.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,

FOR

Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring. Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

FORTUITOUSNESS. n. s. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUITY. n. s. [from fortuit, Fr. and Eng.] See the etym. of FORTUITOUS.] Chance; accident.

The only question, which the adversaries to Providence have to answer is, How they can be sure, that those deserved judgements were the effect of mere fortuity, without the least intervention on the part of the Lord of the universe?

Forbes on Incredulity, p. 79.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakespeare, Coriol.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryden, Knight's Tale.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing miss. Dryden.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wise, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. s. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

FORTUNE. n. s. [fortuna, Lat. fortune, Fr.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. The good or ill, that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among so brave a people you are they
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Success, good or bad; event.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give. Dryden, State of Innocence.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power
Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour. Dryden, Virg. Past.

FOR

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit.

Dryden.

He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune.

Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heiress rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing.

Prolog. to Orphan.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her,
and take care to plant themselves in her view.

Spectator.

When miss delights in her spinnet,

A fiddler may a fortune get.

Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who men's fortunes in their faces read,

To find out mine, look not, alas, on me;

But mark her face, and all the features heed;

For only there is writ my destiny.

Cowley, Mistress.

To FORTUNE.* v. a. [old Fr. fortunier, "prosperer," Lacombe; Lat. fortunio.]

1. To make fortunate. This is a very old English expression; and is still sometimes used in conversation for endowing with a fortune.

Well could he fortune the ascendant
Of his images for his patient.

Chaucer's Doctor of Physick, C. T. Prolog.

2. To dispose of fortunately or not.

Right thus to Mars he said his orison:

O stronge god, that hast—

Of armes all the bridel in thine hond,

And them fortunest us thee list devise,

Accept of me my pitous sacrifice.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

3. To presage. Not in use.

Fortune fortun'd the dying fate of Rome,

Till I her consul sole consol'd her doom.

Dryden, Jun.

To FORTUNE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To befall;
to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass;
to light upon.

It fortun'd, as fair it then befell,

Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,

Of ancient time there was a springing well,

From which fast trickled forth a silver flood.

Spenser, F. Q.

It fortun'd the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning.

Knolles.

I'll tell you as we pass along,

That you will wonder what hath fortun'd,

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

Here fortun'd Curl to slide.

Pope, Dunciad.

• Had he once fortun'd upon the least notion of that excellent manner.

Lockyn, Sculpt. p. 45.

Not th' imperious shew

Of the full fortun'd Caesar ever shall

Be brook'd with me.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

FORTUNEBOOK. n. s. [fortune and book.] A book consulted to know fortune, or future events.

Thou know'st a face, in whose each look

Beauty lays ope love's fortunebook;

On whose fair revolutions wait

The obsequious motions of love's fate.

Crashaw.

FORTUNEHUNTER.† n. s. [fortune and hunt.] A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortunehunters and fortune stealers.

Spectator.

The tranquillity and correspondence of the company begins to be interrupted by the arrival of Sir Taffety Trippet, a fortunehunter, whose follies are too gross to give diversion, and whose vanity is too stupid to let him be sensible that he is a publick offence.

Tatler, No. 47.

You let loose another species of avarice, that of the fortunehunter.
Burke, Speech on the Bill for Rep. of the Marriage Act.

FOR

FORTUNELESS.* adj. [fortune and less.]

2. Without an estate; without a portion.

To FORTUNETELL. v. n. [fortune and tell.]

1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling.

Shakespeare.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you.

Shakespeare.

The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortune telling.

Walton, Angler.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd

The mystick figures of her hand,

He tipples palmestry, and dices

On all her fortunetelling lines.

Clowdland.

FORTUNETELLER. n. s. [fortune and tell.] One who cheats common people by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-far'd villain,

A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller.

Shakespeare.

A Welshman being at a sessions-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot?

Dyppa, Rules for Devotion.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller.

L'Esrange.

Long ago a fortuneteller

Exactly said what now befell her.

Swift.

To FORTUNIZE.* v. a. [from fortune.] To regulate the fortune of. A word perhaps peculiar to Spenser.

Wisedome is most riches: fooles therefore

They are, which fortunes doe by vows devize;

Sith each unto himself his life may fortunize.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 30.

FORTY. adj. [peopeptiz, Saxon.] Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

He that upon levity quits his station, in hopes to be better,
'tis forty to one loses.

L'Esrange.

FORUM. n. s. [Latin.] Any publick place.

The forum was a publick place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before their proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend.

Watts on the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,

And near a forum flank'd with marble shines,

Where the bold youth, the numerous fleets to store,

Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar.

Pope.

To FORWANDER. v. n. [for and wander.] To wander wildly and wearily.

The better part now of the ling'ring day

They travelled had, when as they far espy'd

A weary wight forwandering by the way.

Spenser, F. Q.

FORWANDERED.* adj. [for and wander.] Lost; bewildered.

And being thus alone, and all forsake,

Amid the thicke, forwander'd in despair,

As one dismay'd.

Mir. for Mag. p. 447.

FORWARD.† adv. [pepeapb, Sax. Su. Goth. for, before, forward, and M. Goth. wairts, towards.
"Vox in omnibus dialect. Celto-Scyth. conspicua."
Serenius.] Towards; to a part or place before;
onward; progressively.

When fervent sorrow slaked was;
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead, and forward forth doth pass. Spenser, F. Q.
From smaller things the mind of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hooker.
He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth off his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon, Essays.

FORWARD. adj. [from the adverb.]

1. Warm; earnest; not backward.

They would that we should remember the poor, which I also was forward to do. Gal. ii. 10.

You'll still be too forward. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.
Unskill'd to dart the pointed spear,
Or lead the forward youth to noble war. Prior.

3. Ready; confident; presumptuous.

Old Bute's form he took, Anchises squire,
Now left to rule Ascanius by his sire;
And thus salutes the boy, too forward for his years. Dryden.

4. Not reserved; not over-modest.

'Tis a per'ous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

5. Premature; early ripe.

Short Summer lightly has a forward Spring. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

6. Quick; ready; hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent; anteriour; opposed to posterior.

Let us take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can, effect them. Shakespeare.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.

My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is i' the rear of our birth. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

TO FORWARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them;
so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Whenever I shine,
I forward the grass and I ripen the vine. Swift.

2. To patronise; to advance.

FORWARDER. n. s. [from forward.] He who promotes any thing. Sherwood.

FORWARDLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Eagerly;
hastily; quickly.

The sudden and surprising turns we ourselves have felt,
should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Atterbury.

FORWARDNESS. n. s. [from forward.]

1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker.

It is so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bribe to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Hooker.

The great ones were so forwardness, the people in fury, entertaining this airy phantasm with incredible affection. Bacon.

2. Quickness; readiness.

VOL. II.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness: that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him. Wotton.

3. Earliness; early ripeness.

4. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, from their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance. Addison on Italy.

FORWARDS. adv. Straight before; progressively;
not backwards.

The Rhodian ship passed through the whole Roman fleet, backwards and forwards several times, carrying intelligence to Drepanum. Arbutnot on Coins.

TO FORWASTE. v. a. [for and waste.] To desolate; to destroy. Not now in use.

That infernal fiend with foul uprose
Forwasted all their land. Spenser, F. Q.

Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,
Forwasted all. Spenser, F. Q.

TO FORWEARY. v. a. [for and weary.] To dispirit with labour.

By your toil,
And labour long, through which ye hither came,
Ye both forwearied be; therefore a while
I rede you rest, and to your bowers recoil. Spenser, F. Q.

Whose labour'd spirits,
Forwearied in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shakespeare, K. John.

FORWORD.* n. s. [Sax. forwyrð, and forwyrðb.]

A promise; what was before said or agreed to.
Not now in use.

He that wise was and obedient
To kepe his forward by his free assent. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

FOSS. n. s. [fossa, Latin; fos, Welsh; foss or fos, Cornish; fosse, old French.] A ditch; a moat.

Let Titius
Command the company that Pontius lost,
And see the fosses deeper. Beaumont and Fl. Valentinian.

The sheep-clad sunmits, roughly crown'd
With many a frowning foss and airy mound. Warton, Ode xxi.
In the same Cartulary, many boundaries, ways, and fosses, are specified in the neighbourhood of Wiltton. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 66.

FO'SSET. See FAUCET.

FO'SSWAY. n. s. [foss and way.] One of the great Roman roads through England, so called from the ditches on each side.

FO'SSIL. adj. [fossilis, Latin; fossile, French.]

Our own adjective was formerly, and is now often written fossile.] Which may be dug out of the earth.

Learned men long conceived it a bituminous and fossile body.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 10.
The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest such as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent seas. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Fossil or rock salt, and sal gemm, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal, being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FO'SSIL. n. s. In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils; under which are comprehended metals and minerals. Locke.

Many fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped. Bentley.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole.

F O S

Hill, Mat. Med.

Those bodies which will melt in the fire are called minerals, the rest fossils.

Pemberton.

FOSSILIST.* n. s. [from fossil.] One who studies the nature of fossils; one who collects fossils.

If I may be allowed to assume the liberty, in which fossilists are often indulged.

Phil. Transact. vol. 50. P. ii. (1759.) p. 526.

It is well shaded by tall ash-trees, of a species, as Mr. Jones the fossilist informed me, uncommonly valuable.

Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

TO FOSTER.† v. a. [portman, Saxon; fostra, Iceland. probably from the Gr. βόσκα, to feed.]

1. To nurse; to feed; to support; to train up.

Our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd

With that dear blood, which it hath fostered.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

That base wretch,

Bred but on alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,

With scraps o' th' court.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children. Tit. Andronicus.

Fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood.

Davies on Ireland.

No more let Ireland brag her harmless nation

Fosters no venom, since that Scots plantation.

Cleaveland.

The son of Mulciber,

Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains,

A shepherd and a king at once he reigns.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To pamper; to encourage.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father.

Sidney.

3. To cherish; to forward.

Ye fostering breezes, blow;

Ye softening dews, ye tender showers descend.

Thomson.

TO FOSTER.* v. n. To be nursed together; to be trained up together.

Other great houses there be of the English in Ireland, which through licentious conversing with the Irish, or marrying, or fostering with them, have degenerated.

Spenser on Ireland.

FOSTER.* n. s. [old Fr. "foster, a park-keeper."

Kelham. So Barret gives our own word; "foster, a keeper of a forest." Alv. 1580. Used also by Chaucer and the romance-writers.] A forster; an inhabitant of the forest. See also FOSTERSHIP.

Lo! where a grisly foster forth did rush.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 17.

* A foster in the wood he met.

Bevis of Hampton.

FOSTERAGE. n. s. [from foster.] The charge of nursing; alterage.

Some one adjoining to this lake had the charge and fosterage of this child.

Raleigh, History.

FOSTERBROTHER.† n. s. [porten broðer, Saxon.]

One bred at the same pap; one fed by the same nurse.

I am tame and bred up with my wrongs,

Which are my foster-brothers.

Beaumont, and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

FOSTERCHILD. n. s. [porten cild, Saxon.] A child nursed by a woman not the mother, or bred by a man not the father.

The fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their foster-fathers.

Davies on Ireland.

The goddess thus beguil'd,

With pleasant stories, her false fosterchild.

Addison, Ovid.

FOSTERDAM. n. s. [foster and dam.] A nurse; one that performs the office of a mother by giving food to a young child.

There, by the wolf were laid the martial twins:

Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung;

The fosterdam loll'd out her fawning tongue.

Dryden, Æn.

F O T

FOSTEREARTH. n. s. [foster and earth.] Earth by which the plant is nourished, though it did not grow at first in it.

In vain, the nursing grove

Seems fair a while, cherish'd with foster-earth;

But when the alien compost is exhaust,

Its native poverty again prevails!

Philips.

FOSTERER.† n. s. [from foster.]

1. A nurse; one who gives food in the place of a parent.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers; the rich men selling, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children: in the opinion of the Irish fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood.

Davies on Ireland.

2. An encourager; a forwarder.

The fosterer of shooting is labour.

Ascham, Taxophilus.

The fosterers and cherishers of truth.

Barrow, vol. i. S. 10.

I have neither followers, nor fosterers.

Swift, Lett. to Lady B. G.

FOSTERFATHER. n. s. [portepapen, Saxon.] One who gives food in the place of the father.

In Ireland fosterchildren do love and are beloved by their fosterfathers, and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred.

Davies on Ireland.

The duke of Bretagne having been an host and a kind of parent or fosterfather to the king, in his tenderness of age and weakness of fortune, did look for aid this time from king Henry.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Tyrreus, the fosterfather of the beast,

Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist.

Dryden, Æn.

FOSTERING.* n. s. [Sax. portung.] Nourishment.

My spirit hath his fostering in the Bible.

Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

FOSTERLING.* n. s. [Sax. porteppling.] A foster-child; a nurse-child.

I'll none o' your light-heart fosterlings, no inmates.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

FOSTERMENT.* n. s. [from foster.] Food; nourishment. Not now in use.

Cockeram.

FOSTERMOTHER.† n. s. [portepmober, Sax.] A nurse.

That child, that receiveth nutriment from his fostermother, will go near to sympathize with her in condition.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634.) p. 127.

FOSTERNURSE. n. s. [foster and nurse. This is an improper compound, because foster and nurse mean the same.] A nurse.

Our fosternurse of nature is repose,

The which he lacks.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FOSTERSHIP.* n. s. [from foster, a forester. See FOSTER.] The office of a forester; which is the old word for forestership.

Adam — held, by the charter of Hugh earl of Chester, in the name of a fostership, MS. Harl. 1505, a blunder, I presume, for forestership.*

Churton, Life of Sir R. Sutton, p. 406. n.

FOSTERSON. n. s. [foster and son.] One fed and educated, though not the son by nature.

Mature in years, to ready honours move;

O of celestial seed! O fosterson of Jove!

Dryden, Virg.

FOSTRESS.* n. s. [from foster.] A nurse.

Glory of knights, and hope of all the earth,

Come forth, your fostress bids; who from your birth

Hath bred you to this hour.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

FO'THER.* n. s. [Sax. foðer, as ixtiza foðpa, sixty loads; German, fuder, a cart-load, fuhren, to carry.] A load; a large quantity. Fudder is so used in the north of England. A fother of lead is still a term for a certain weight, about as much as a cart would carry.

With him there was a plowman, was his brother,
That had ylaid of dong ful many a föther.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

FOUGADE. n. s. [French.] In the art of war, a sort of little mine in the manner of a well, scarce more than ten feet wide and twelve deep, dug under some work or fortification, and charged with barrels or sacks of gunpowder to blow it up, and covered over with earth. Dict.

FOUGHT. The preterite and participle of fight.

Though unknown to me, they sare fought well,
Whom Rupert led, and who were British born. Dryden.

FOUGHTEN.† [The passive participle of fight. Rarely used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Milton. But it was common. Bishop Lowth objected to this participle, as not agreeable to the analogy of derivation, which obtains in irregular verbs in ght. It is the Teut. vechten.] Contested; disputed by arms.

As in this glorious and well-foughten field.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

In seven brave foughten fields.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

The sad sports we riot in,

Are tales of foughten fields, of martial scars,
And things done long ago. Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

On the foughten field

Michael and his angels, prevalent
Encamping, plac'd in guard their watches round
Cherubick waving fires.

Milton, P. L.

FOUL.† adj. [Su. Goth. ful; M. Goth. fuls; Fr. Theotisc. ful; Sax. ful. See TO FILE and FILTH.]

1. Not clean; filthy; dirty; miry. Through most of its significations it is opposed to fair.

My face is foul with weeping.

Job, xvi. 16.

It's monstrous labour when I wash my brain,

And it grows fouler.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

He that can travel in deep and foul ways, ought not to say that he cannot walk in fair.

Tillotson.

The stream is foul with stains

Of rushing torrents and descending rains.

Addison.

2. Impure; polluted; full of filth.

With foul mouth,

And in the witness of his proper ear,

To call him villain.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

Kill thy physician, and the fec bestow

Upon the foul disease.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Intemperance and sensuality debase men's minds, clog their spirits, and make them gross, foul, listless and unactive.

Tillotson.

3. Wicked; detestable; abominable.

Jesus rebuked the foul spirit.

St. Mark, ix. 25.

He hates foul leavings and vile flattery,

Two filthy blots in noble gentery.

Spenser, Hubb. Tule.

This is the grossest and most irrational supposition, as well as the foulest atheism, that can be imagined.

Hale.

Satire has always shone among the rest,

And is the boldest way, if not the best.

To tell men truly of their foulest faults,

To laugh at their vain deeds, and vainer thoughts. Dryden.

4. Not lawful; not according to the established rules.

By foul play were we heav'd thence,

But blessedly help'd hither.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

5. Hatred; ugly; loathsome.

Th' other half did woman's shape retain,

Most loathsome, filthy, foul, and full of vile disdain.

Spenser, F. Q.

Hast thou forgot

The foul witch Syocess, who with age and envy

Was grown into a hoop!

Shakespeare, Tempest.

Foul sights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul sights do not much offend. Dacon.
All things that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.

6. Disgrateful; shameful.

Too well I see and rue the dire event,

That with sad overthrow and foul defeat

Hath lost us heav'n.

Milton, P. L.

Who first seduc'd them to that foul revolt?

Milton, P. L.

Reason half extinct,

Or impotent, or else approving, sees

The foul disorder.

Thomson, Spring.

7. Coarse; gross.

You will have no notion of delicacies, if you table with them: they are all for rank and foul feeding, and spoil the best provisions in cooking.

Felton on the Classics.

8. Full of gross humours, or bad matter; wanting purgation or mundification.

You perceive the body of our kingdom,

How foul it is; what rank diseases grow,

And with what danger near the heart of it.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

9. Not bright; not serene.

It will be foul weather to-day; for the sky is red and louring.

St. Matt. xvi. 3.

Who's there besides foul weather?

One minded like the weather, most inquisitely.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Be fair or foul, or rain or shine,

The joys I have profess'd, in spite of fate are mine. Dryden.

10. With rough force; with unseasonable violence.

So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd,

Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:

As ships, though never so obsequious, fall

Foul in a tempest on their admiral.

Waller.

In his sallies their men might fall foul of each other.

Clarendon.

The great art of the devil, and the principal deceit of the heart, is to keep fair with God himself, while men fall foul upon his laws.

South.

11. [Among scamen.] Entangled: as, a rope is foul of the anchor.

12. [Among seamen.] Unfavourable; contrary to the course of the ship; as, a foul wind.

13. [Among seamen.] Dangerous; as, the foul ground of a road, sea-coast, or bay, i. e. abounding with shallows, or rocky, or in any respect dangerous.

TO FOUL. v. a. [Fylan, Saxon.] To daub; to blemish; to make filthy; to dirty.

Sweep your walks from autumnal leaves, lest the worms draw them into their holes, and foul your gardens.

Evelyn.

While Traulus all his ordure scatters,

To foul the man he chiefly flatters.

Swift.

She fouls a smock more in one hour than the kitchen-maid doth in a week.

Swift, Direct. to Servants.

TO FOULDER.* v. n. [Fr. fouldroyer, "to cast or dart thunderbolts; hence also to bear down with great violence all that comes in the way." Cotgrave. Mr. Church, a commentator on Spenser, is for substituting smouldring in the example, and for dismissing fouldring as an useless repetition, because thunder occurs just before it. This is not to be admitted. The poet's fouldering heat is burning heat.] To emit great heat.

Loud thunder with amazement great

Did rend the rattling skyes with flames of fouldring heat.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. ii. 20.

FOULFACED. adj. [foul and faced.] Having an ugly or hateful visage.

If black scandal, or foulfac'd reproach,

Attend the sequel of your imposition,

FOU

Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

FO'ULFEEDING.* adj. [foul and feeding.] Gross; of coarse food.

There is an appetitus caninus, that passing by wholesome viands, falls upon unmeet and foul-feeding morsels.

Rp. Hall, Fashions of the World.

FO'ULLY. adv. [from foul.]

1. Filthily; nastily; odiously; hatefully; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully.

We in the world's wide mouth

Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The letter to the protector was gilded over with many smooth words; but the other two did foully set forth his obstinacy, avarice and ambition. Hayward.

O brother, brother! Filbert still is true;

I foully wrong'd him: do, forgive me, do. Gay.

2. Not lawfully; not fairly.

Thou play'st most foully for't. Shakspeare.

FOULMOUTHED. adj. [foul and mouth.] Scurrilous; habituated to the use of opprobrious terms and epithets.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foulmouth'd man as he is, and said he would cudgel you.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

It was allowed by every body, that so foulmouthed a witness never appeared in any cause. Addison.

My reputation is too well established in the world to receive any hurt from such a foulmouthed scoundrel as he. Arbutnot.

Now singing shrill, and scolding oft between,

Scolds answer foulmouth'd scolds; bad neighbourhood I ween. Pope.

FO'ULNESS. n. s. [from foul.]

1. The quality of being foul; filthiness; nastiness.

The ancients were wont to make garments that were not destroyed but purified by fire; and whereas the spots or foulness of other cloaths are washed out, in these they were usually burnt away. Wilkins, Math. Magic.

2. Pollution; impurity.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,

No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shakspeare.

There is not so chaste a nation as this, nor so free from all pollution or foulness: it is the virgin of the world. Bacon.

3. Hatred; atrociousness.

Consul, you are too mild:

The foulness of some facts takes thence all mercy. B. Jonson.

It is the wickedness of a whole life, discharging all its filth and foulness into this one quality, as into a great sink or common shore. South.

4. Ugliness; deformity.

He by an affection sprung up from excessive beauty, should not delight in horrible foulness. Sidney.

He's fallen in love with your foulness, and she'll fall in love with my anger. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The fury laid aside

Her looks and limbs, and with new methods tried
The foulness of th' infernal form to hide. Dryden, Æn.

5. Dishonesty; want of candour.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity and all falseness or foulness of intentions; especially to that personated devotion, under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

FO'ULSPOKEN.* adj. [foul and spoken.] Contumelious; slanderous.

Foulspeken coward, that thunder'st with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing dost perform!

Titus Andronicus.

FOUND. The præterite and participle passive of find.

I am sought of them that asked not for me: I am found of them that sought me not. Is. lxxv. 1.

Authors now find, as once Achilles found,

The whole is mortal if a part's unsound. Young.

TO FOUND. v. a. [fundare, Latin; fonder, French.]

1. To lay the basis of any building.

It fell not; for it was founded upon a rock. Math. vii.

He hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Ps. xxiv. 2.

2. To build; to raise.

These tunes of reason are Amphion's lyre,

Wherewith he did the Theban city found. Davies.

They Gabian walls, and strong Fidenæ rear,

Nomentum, Bola with Pometia found,

And raise Colatian tow'rs on rocky ground. Dryden, Æn.

3. To establish; to erect.

This also shall they gain by their delay

In the wide wilderness; there they shall found

Their government, and their great senate choose,

Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd.

Milton, P. L.

He founding a library, gathered together the acts of the kings and prophets. 2 Mac. ii. 13.

4. To give birth or original to: as, he founded an art; he founded a family.

5. To raise upon, as on a principle or ground.

Though some have made use of the opinion of some schoolmen, that dominion is founded in grace; were it admitted as the most certain truth, it could never warrant any such sanguinary method. Decay of Piety.

A right to the use of the creatures is founded originally in the right a man has to subsist. Locke.

Power, founded on contract, can descend only to him who has right by that contract. Locke.

The reputation of the Iliad they found upon the ignorance of his times. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

6. To fix firm.

Fleance is escap'd.

— Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect,
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

TO FOUND. v. a. [fundere, Latin; fondre, French.]

To form by melting and pouring into moulds; to cast.

A second multitude

With wonderous art founded the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross.

Milton, P. L.

FOUNDATIO. n. s. [fondation, French.]

1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The stateliness of houses, the goodness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which ministrereth unto the other nourishment, is in the bosom of the earth concealed. Hooker.

That is the way to make the city flat,

To bring the roof to the foundation,

To bury all. Shakspeare, Coriol.

O Jove, I think,

Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,

Where they should be reliev'd. Shakspeare, Coriol.

I draw a line along the shore;

I lay the deep foundations of a wall,

And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden, Æn.

2. The act of fixing the basis.

Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,

Since their foundation, came a nobler guest. Tickell.

3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.

If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds. Tillotson.

That she should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is a foundation in nature for it. Locke.

4. Original; rise.

Throughout the world, even from the first foundation thereof, all men have either been taken as lords or lawful kings in their own houses. Hooker.

5. A revenue settled and established for any purpose, particularly charity.

He had an opportunity of going to school on a foundation. Swift.

6. Establishment; settlement.

FOUNDATIONSLESS. * adj. [foundation and less.] Without foundation.

A flattering, fallacious, foundationless, because unconditionate, hope; which the bigger it swells, the more dangerous it proves. Hammond, Works, iv. 506.

FOUNDER. n. s. [from found.]

1. A buider; one who raises an edifice; one who presides at the erection of a city.

Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as seas to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town. Waller.

Nor was Procneste's founder wanting there,
Whom fame reports the son of Mulciber. Dryden, Æn.

2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.

The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founders charity in the dust laid low. Dryden.

This hath been experimentally proved by the honourable founder of this lecture in his treatise of the air. Bentley.

3. One from whom any thing has its original or beginning.

And the rude notions of pedantick schools
Blaspheme the sacred founder of our rules. Roscommon.

When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,
The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the centre with his flaming dart
Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art. Dryden, Æn.

King James I. the founder of the Stuart race, had he not confined all his views to the peace of his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles. Addison, Freeholder.

Nor can the skilful herald trace
The founder of thy ancient race. Swift.

4. [Fondeur, French.] A caster; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds.

Founders add a little antimony to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so pewterers to their pewter, to make it sound more clear like silver. Grew, Museum.

To FOUNDER. v. a. [fondre, French.] To cause such a soreness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.

Phœbus's steeds are founder'd,
Or night kept chain'd below. Shakspeare, Tempest.

I have founder'd nine score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight: but what of that? he saw me and yielded. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood. Dorset.

Brutes find out where their talents lie:
A bear will not attempt to fly;
A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five-barr'd gate. Swift.

If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and founder'd into the bargain. Swift, Direct. to the Groom.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

To FOUNDER.† v. n. [from fond, French, the bottom.]

1. To sink to the bottom.

New ships, built at those rates, have been ready to founder in the seas with every extraordinary storm. Raleigh, Ess.

2. To fail; to miscarry.

In this point
All his tricks founder; and he brings his physick
After his patient's death. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

3. To trip; to fall. Applied to a horse.

His horse for fear began to turn
And lepe aside, and foundrid as he lepe. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

It chaunst sir Satyreus his steed at last,
Whether through foundring, or through sodein feare,
To stumble, that his rider nigh he cast. Spenser, F. Q.

FOUNDEROUS. * adj. [fondre, Fr. "detruire, ruiner,"

Borel. Cotgrave renders fondriere "a bog or quagmire."] This word occurs in our acts of parliament concerning the high-ways. Whoever indicts or presents a road, swears that it is founderous, or in a founderous state. This implies failing, not equal to use, ruinous.

I have travelled through the negotiation, and a sad founderous road it is. Burke, Lett. on a Regicide Peace, l. iii.

FOUNDERY. n. s. [fonderie, Fr. from found.] A place where figures are formed of melted metal; a castinghouse.

FOUNDLING. n. s. [from found of find.] A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.

We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow. Sidney.

I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own,
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance. Dryden, Juv.

A piece of charity practised by most of the nations about us, is a provision for foundlings, or for those children who are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents. Addison.

The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had sought his suff'rings to redress;
She prays the gods to take this foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art. Gay, Trivia.

FOUNDERESS.† n. s. [from founder.]

1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes, causes, or begins any thing. Mr. Mason is ridiculously angry with Dr. Johnson for shortening founderess in the example of the next definition from Spenser, and also contends that foundress, in the example from Dryden, is only a poetical contraction. He has offered no other example either of founderess or foundress. The word foundress is common in both senses.

Forgetfull of himselfe, his birth, his country, friends, and all,
And only minding (whom he mist) the foundress of his fall. Warner, Albion's England.

Pride—became the first precedent of God's lessening his family, and the foundress of hell. Osborne, Advice to a Son, p. 28.

2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.

For of their order she was patroness,
Albe Charissa was their chiefest founderess. Spenser, F. Q.

For zeal like hers, her servants were to show;
She was the first, where need requir'd to go;
Herself the foundress, and attendant too. Dryden.

The great foundress of the Pictists, Madame de Bourignon. Tatler, No. 226.

Against the north wall of the north cross is erected a stone monument for Sir John Trussell, and Maud his wife, who were the founder and foundress of this church. Ashmole, Berk. ii. 489.

FOUNT.† } n. s. [fons, Lat.; fontaine, French; fontana, low Lat. fountainou, anc. Prov.]

1. A well; a spring.

He set before him spread
A table of celestial food divine,
Ambrosial fruits fetcht from the tree of life;
And from the fount of life ambrosial drink. Milton, P. R.

2. A small bason of springing water.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
Can a man drink better from the fountain finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf. Bp. Taylor.
Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;
But whilst within the crystal fount he tries
To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise. Addison.

3. A jet; a spout of water.

Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkleth or spouteth water; the other a fair receipt of water, without fish, or slime, or mud. Bacon.

4. The head or first spring of a river.

All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenour of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends. Dryden.

5. Original; first principle; first cause.

Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness.

Common Prayer.

You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains. Peacham.

This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, not only the fountain of habits and fashions, and good breeding, but of morally good or bad manners to all England. Sprat, Serm.

6. [In printing.] A set or quantity of characters or letters. See FONT.

FO'UNTAINHEAD.* n. s. [fountain and head.] Original; first principle.

Above our atmosphere's intestine wars,
Rain's fountain-head, the magazine of hail.

Young, Night. Th. 9.

FO'UNTAINLESS. adj. [from fountain.] Having no fountain; wanting a spring.

So large

The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert, fountainless and dry. Milton, P. R.

FO'UNTFUL. adj. [fount and full.] Full of springs.

But when the fountful Ida's top they scap'd with utmost haste,
All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks. Chapman, Iliads.

78 FOUPE.† v. a. To drive with sudden impetuosity. A word out of use, Dr. Johnson says. He would not have said, that it ever was in use, if he had consulted the editions of the book, from which he cites the example. The first edition of Camden's Remains in 1605 reads soupe. A very incorrect edition of 1637 reads foupe, but it is corrected in the improved one of 1674. See TQ SOUP. Dr.
Ash gravely admits foupe into his vocabulary.
The following is the passage, in which the mistaken word occurs, as given by Dr. Johnson, but now with more than one correction. To soup is to draw, to breathe out.

We pronounce, by the confession of strangers, as [sweetly, smoothly, and moderately, as any of the northern nations, who [are noted to] foupe [soupe] their words out of the throat with fat and full spirits. Camden, Rem. on Languages.

FOUR.† adj. [peper, Sax. fiduor, Goth. quatuor, Lat.] Twice two.

Just as I wish'd, the lots were cast on four;
Myself the fifth. Pope, Odyssey.

FOURBE. n. s. [French.] A cheat; a tricking fellow.
Not now in use.

Jove's envoy, through the air,
Brings dismal tidings; as if such low care
Could reach their thoughts, or their repose disturb!
Thou art a false imposter, and a fourbe. Denham.

FOURFO'LD. adj. [four and fold.] Four times told.
He shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he had no pity.
2 Sam. xii. 6.

FOURFO'OTED. adj. [four and foot.] Quadruped;
having four feet.

Augur Astylos, whose art in vain
From fight dissuaded the fourfooted train,
Now beat the hoof with Nessus on the plain. Dryden.

FO'URRIER.* n. s. [Fr. fouquier, Cotgrave.] An harbinger.

The duke of Buckingham's revolt was the preparative and fouquier of the rest. Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 24.

FOURSCORE. adj. [four and score.]

1. Four times twenty; eighty.

When they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain, having lost fourscore of their ships, and the greater part of their men. Bacon, War with Spain.

The Chiois were first a free people, being a commonwealth, maintaining a navy of fourscore ships. Sandys.

The Liturgy had, by the practice of near fourscore years, obtained great veneration from all sober Protestants.

Clarendon.

2. It is used elliptically for fourscore years in numbering the age of man.

At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;

But at fourscore it is too late a week.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Some few might be of use in council upon great occasions, till after threescore and ten; and the two late ministers in Spain were so till fourscore. Temple.

FOURSQUA'RE.* adj. [four and square.] Quadrangular;
having four sides and angles equal.

The temple of Bel was invironed with a wall carried four- square, of great height and beauty; and on each square certain brazen gates curiously engraven. Raleigh, Hist.

FOURTE'EN. adj. [peopeptyn, Saxon.] Four and ten;
twice seven.

I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer als.

Shakespeare,

FOURTE'ENTH. adj. [from fourteen.] The ordinal of fourteen; the fourth after the tenth.

I have not found any that see the ninth day, few before the twelfth, and the eyes of some not open before the fourteenth day. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FOURTH. adj. [from four.] The ordinal of four; the first after the third.

A third is like the former: filthy bags!

Why do you shew me this? A fourth? start eye!

What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?

Shakespeare.

FO'URTHLY. adv. [from fourth.] In the fourth place.

Fourthly, plants have their seed and seminal parts uppermost, and living creatures have them lowermost. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FOURWHE'ELED. adj. [four and wheeled.] Running upon twice two wheels.

Scarce twenty fourwheel'd cars, compact and strong,
The massy load could bear, and roll along. Pope, Odys.

FO'UTRA. n. s. [from foutre, French.] A fig; a scoff;
a word of contempt. Not used.

A foutra for the world, and worldlings base.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FO'UTRE.* adj. [Fr. foutu, "a scoundrel, a fellow of small account." Cotgrave.] Despicable; colloquially used, in contempt; as, he is a foury fellow. It is used by Scottish writers.

FOWL. † n. s. [jugel, fahl, Saxon; fugl, Icel. and Su. Goth. from flyga, to fly, whence the Sax. flugan, and the German flugel, wing; voghel, Teut. vogel, Germ.] A winged animal; a bird. It is colloquially used of edible birds, but in books of all the feathered tribes. Fowl is used collectively: as, we dined upon fish and fowl.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their male subjects, and at their controuls. Shakespeare.

Lucullus entertained Pompey in a magnificent house: Pompey said, this is a marvellous house for the summer; but methinks very cold for winter. Lucullus answered, do you not think me as wise as divers fowls, to change my habitation in the winter season. Bacon, Apophthegms.

This mighty breath
Instructs the fowls of heaven. Thomson, Spring.

To FOWL. † v. n. [from the noun.] To kill birds for food or game.

Such persons as may lawfully hunt, fish, or fowl, have only a qualified property in these animals. Blackstone.

FO'WLER. n. s. [from fowl.] A sportsman who pursues birds.

The fowler, warn'd
By those good omens, with swift early steps
Treads the crimp earth; ranging through fields and glades, Offensive to the birds. Philips.

With slaughter'ring guns th' unwear'd fowler roves,
When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves. Pope.

FO'WLING.* n. s. [from fowl.] The act of catching birds with birdlime, nets, and other devices; the employment of shooting birds; and also falconry or hawking.

FO'WLINGPIECE. n. s. [fowl and piece.] A gun for the shooting of birds.

'Tis necessary that the countryman be provided with a good fowlingpiece. Mortimer.

FOX. † n. s. [fox, Saxon; vos, vosch, Dutch; fox, Su. Goth. foxa, to deceive; Icel. the same, and fox, false. Hence, perhaps, the name of the animal.]

1. A wild animal of the canine kind, with sharp ears and a bushy tail, remarkable for his cunning, living in holes, and preying upon fowls or small animals.

The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb. Shakespeare.

He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holds of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.

O how the old fox stunk, I warrant thee,
When the rank fit was on him. Otway, Venice Preserved.

3. Formerly a cant expression for a sword.

O signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox!

He's hurt too, he cannot go far, I made my father's old fox fly about his ears. Beaumont and Fletcher, Philaster.

The whinard of the house of Shrewsbury is not like it, nor the twohanded fox of John Falstaff, which hewed in under fourteen out of seven principal assailants!

Gayton on D. Quix. p. 87.

To FOX.* v. s. [Su. Goth. foxa, to deceive.] To stupefy; to make drunk.

The Dutch—by reason of their custom of immoderate bibbing, and so often being foxed, were by the best nations of Europe pointed at as gazing foxes. Transl. of Boccaccio, (1626), p. 51.

The drunkard that should offer to justify his beastliness by affirming, that he never foxes himself but with one sort of wine.

Boyle against Cust. Swearing, p. 34.

FO'XCASE. n. s. [fox and case.] A fox's skin.

One had better be laughed at for taking a foxcase for a fox, than be destroyed by taking a live fox for a case. L'Estrange.

FO'XCHASE. n. s. [fox and chase.] The pursuit of the fox with hounds.

See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place or out;
Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a foxchase, wise at a debate. Pope.

FO'XERY.* n. s. [from fox.] Behaviour like that of a fox. An old forgotten word, but full as good as foxship given by Dr. Johnson.

And wrie [hide] me in my foxerie. Chaucer, Rom. R. 6795.

FO'XEVL. n. s. [fox and evil.] A kind of disease in which the hair sheds.

And of them both did foy and tribute raise. Spenser, F. Q.

FOY.* n. s. [probably from the Teut. foey, an agreement, a compact.] A feast given by one who is about to leave a place. In Kent, according to Grose, a treat to friends "either at going abroad or coming home."

F R A

He is a passionate lover of morning draughts, which he generally continues till dinner-time; a rigid exactor of negroes, and collector general of joys and bibberies (beverage.)

England's Jests, Character of a Bad Husband, (1687.)

FO'YSON.† See FOISON.

To FRACT. v. a. [fractus, Latin.] To break; to violate; to infringe. Found perhaps only in the following passage.

His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit.

Shakespeare, Timon.

FRACTION. n. s. [fraction, Fr. fractio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.

The surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin.

Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

2. A broken part of an integral.

The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed. Shakespeare.
Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, consisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction.

Arbutnot on Coins.

FRACTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number; comprising a broken number.

We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers.

Cocker's Arithmetick.

FRACTIOUS.* adj. [perhaps from fractus, Lat.] Cross; peevish; fretful: as, a fractious child.

FRACTURE. n. s. [fractura, Latin.]

1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.

That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.

But thou wilt sin and grief destroy,
That so the broken bones may joy,
And tune together in a well-set song,
Full of his praises,
Who dead men raises;
Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong.

Herbert.

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected.

Sharp, Surgery.

To FRACTURE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break a bone.

The leg was dress'd, and the fractured bones united together.

Wiscum, Surgery.

2. To break any thing.

Behold his chair, whose fractur'd seat infirm
An aged cushion hides.

Shenstone, Economy, P. iii.

FRAGILE. adj. [fragile, French; fragilis, Latin.]

1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.

To ease them of their griefs,
Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage.

Shakespeare, Timon.

The stalk of jay is tough, and not fragile. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,

'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line.

Denham.

A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile.

Glanville.

2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.

Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,
And fragile arms, much instrument of war,

F R A

Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
Before mine eyes thou wast.

P. R.

FRAGILITY.† n. s. [fragilitas, French.]

1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.

To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.

Fear the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune.

Kneller, Hist.

3. Frailty; instability to fault.

All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility.

Wotton.

FRA'GMENT: n. s. [fragmentum, Latin.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.

He who late a sceptre did command,
Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand.

Dryden.

Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davidis, has shewn us this way to improvement.

Watts on the Mind.

If a thin or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread of fragment should not keep its colour.

Newton, Opticks.

Some on painted wood

Transfix'd the fragments, some prepar'd the food. Pope, Odys.

FRA'GMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. A word not elegant, nor in use.

She, she is gone; she's gone: when thou know'st this,
What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought;
He knows it too too much that thinks it nought.

Donne.

FRAGOR.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. A noise; a crack; a crash. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the first of the examples from Sandys; in whose writings alone I find it in this sense, and who was certainly fond of the word. Sir T. Herbert uses it in a very different sense, that of fragrance.

To earth's extent his winged lightning flies,
Pursued by hideous fragors; though before
The flames descend, they in their breaches roar.

Sandys, Job, p. 54.

The clouds in storms of rain descend;

The air Thy hideous fragors rend.

Sandys, Ps. 77.

Arms clashing, trumpets, from the rising sun

Horrible fragors, heard by all.

Sandys, Christ's Pass. Notes, p. 111.

2. A sweet smell; a strong smell. A word not justifiable in this sense.

Gardens here for grandeur and fragour are such as no city in Asia outvies.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 165.

[The music] by its fragor is oft discovered by the careless passenger.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 363.

FRA'GRANCE. } n. s. [fragrantia, Latin.] Sweetness
FRA'GRANCY. } of smell; pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Ev'n separate he spies,

Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood

Half spy'd.

Milton, P. L.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats.

Johnson, Spect.

Nor doth he seem'd Narcissus to the eye,

Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy.

Garth.

Such was the wine, to quench whose fervent heat

Scarce twenty measures from the living stream

To cool one cup suffic'd, the goblet crown'd

Breath'd aromatick fragrancies around.

Pope, Odys.

FRA'GRANT.† adj. [fragrant, Fr. fragrans, Lat.]

Odorous; sweet of smell.

Fragrant the fertile earth

After soft showers; and sweet the coming on

Of grateful evening mild.

Milton, P. L.

The young willow's place
Upon her bank the various growth:
The dew is less blooming than her face;
Their scent less fragrant than her breath.
Frail.
FRAGRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FRAIL. † n. s. [old Fr. fraile, a basket, Ketham.]

1. A basket made of rushes.

A frail of figs. Barret's Alu. 1580.

What would you now give for her? some five frail

Of rotten figs, good godson?

Beaum. and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

Three frails of sprats carried from mart.

Beaum. and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

2. A rush for weaving baskets.

FRAIL. † adj. [old Fr. fraile, i. e. fragile, brittle; from fragilis, Lat. Cotgrave and Roquefort.]

1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,

As force without, fevers within can kill. Davies.

When with care we have raised an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fail in words.

Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

FRAILNESS. † n. s. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

Such is the frailness of our nature.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 54.

There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.

FRAILTY. † n. s. [from frail; Norm. French, freatité. Ketham.]

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shakespeare.

Nor shouldst thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:
Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel. Milton, S. A.

God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity: in this sense it has a plural.

Love did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.

That Christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives. Law.

FRAISCHÉUR. n. s. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.

Hither in summer evenings you repair,

To taste the fraichéur of the purer air. Dryden.

FRAISE. † n. s. [French.]

1. A pancake with bacon in it. See FROISE.

2. Fraises are pointed stakes in fortification.

TO FRAME. † v. a. [Sax. framman, to frame; Goth. framna, to produce.]

1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.

The double gates he findeth locked fast;

The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,

The other all with silver overcast. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To fit one to another?

They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do necessaries to their convenient use, than to fight. Abbot.

Hew timber, saw it, frame it, and set it together. Mortimer.

3. To make; to compose.

Then chusing out few words most horrible,

Thereof did verses frame. Spenser, F. Q.

As wine mingled with water is pleasant, and delighteth the taste; even so speech, finely framed, delighteth the ears of them that read the story. Macc. xv. 39.

Fight valiantly to-day;

And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;

For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakespeare.

4. To regulate; to adjust.

Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Tillotson.

5. To form to any rule or method by study of precept.

Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,

Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame

Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shakespeare, Coriol.

I have been a truant to the law;

I never yet could frame my will to it,

And therefore frame the law unto my will. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense, or from its own operations about them. Locke.

Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,

And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Granville.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies.

And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope, Odyssey.

How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years. Watts.

7. To contrive; to plan.

Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Clarendon.

8. To settle; to scheme out.

Though I cannot make true wars,

I'll frame convenient peace. Shakespeare, Coriol.

9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles. Bacon.

TO FRAME.  v. n.* To contrive.

Then said they, to him, Say now Shibboleth; and he said Shibboleth; for he could not frame to pronounce it right. Judges, xii. 6.

FRAME. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A fabric; any thing constructed of various parts or members.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!

Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milton, P. L.

Divine Cecilia came,

Investress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame,

Which hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came.

The labour of a god; and all along,

Tough iron plates were clench'd, to make it strong. Dryden.

F R A

We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Newton.

2. Any thing made so as to enclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame. Dryden, Jew.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton, Opticks.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman, that is like a German clock, Still a repairing, ever out of frame, And never going right. Shakespeare.

Your steady soul preserves her frame; In good and evil times the same. Swift.

The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if actions were predetermined. Hammond.

There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals. Arbutnot on Coins.

FRA'MEWORK.  n. s.* [from frame and work.] Work done in a frame.

Doubtless a staunch and solid piece of framework. Milton, Areopagitica.

FRA'MING.  n. s.* [from frame.] A joining together; as the framing of a house, i. e. the timber-work in it.

FRA'MPOLD. † adj. [This word is written by Dr. Hacket, frampul. I know not its original. Dr. Johnson.—It is written also frampul, or frampel, frampared, and framfold; for they all are evidently the same word. Ray thinks that, like forward, it comes from the Sax. fram, our from.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.

Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: she leads a very frampold life with him. Shakespeare.

The frampul man could not be pacified. Hacket, Life of Abp. Williams.

Is Pompey grown so malapert, so frampel? Beaumont and Fl. Wit. at Sev. Weapons.

I pray thee, grow not frampull now. B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

Like faithless wife, that by her frampared guise, Peevish demeanour, sullen and disdain;

Doth inly deep the spright melancholize

Of her aggrieved husband. Moré, Song of the Soul, i. iii. 40.

As if a child should govern the house, because he will be frampold, and disquieted, otherwise!

Thorndike on Forbearance, &c. (1670), p. 83.

FRA'NCHISE. n. s. [franchise, French.]

1. Exemption from any onerous duty.

2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.

They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them. Dodder on Ireland.

The gracious charter the same franchises yields

To all the wildernesses of woods and fields. Dryden.

3. District; extent of jurisdiction.

F R A

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be troubled with the payment of their own franchises. Spenser on Ireland.

To FRA'NCHISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.

I lose no honour

In seeking to augment it; but still keep

My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear. Shakespeare, Macb.

2. To possess a right or privilege.

To speak we franchis'd are,

Because we serv'd for peace. Mr. for Mag. p. 477.

FRA'NCHISEMENT.  n. s.* [from franchise.] Release; freedom.

To work Irena's franchisement,

And eke Grantorto's worthy punishment. Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 36.

FRANCI'SCAN.  n. s.* [from Francis, the founder of the order.] A monk of the order of St. Francis.

Many reformations have been from time to time of the Franciscans. Weever, Fun. Mon.

Dante places, in his Inferno, the Conte de Monte feltro, notwithstanding his having taken the habit of a Franciscan.

Bowle, Note on Milton.

FRANCI'SCAN.  adj.* Relating to persons of the order of St. Francis.

I found and visited the famous Galileo, grown old, a prisoner to the Inquisition, for thinking in astronomy otherwise than the Franciscan and Dominican licensers thought!

Milton, Areopagitica.

FRA'NGIBLE. † adj. [frangible, Fr. from frango, Lat.]

Fragile; brittle; easily broken.

Though it seem the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will shew itself very frangible. Boyle.

FRA'NION. † n. s. [Of this word I know not the derivation. Dr. Johnson.—It is not peculiar to Spenser, whom alone Dr. Johnson cites, but is used with the same epithet by Heywood. It may be merely a cant expression; or perhaps may be referred to the Goth. frijon, Sax. fræon, to love, whence our friend.] A paramour; a boon companion.

First, by her side did sit the bold Sansloy, Fit mate for such a mincing minion, Who in her looseness took exceeding joy; Might not be found a franker franion, Of her lewd parts to make companion. Spenser, F. Q.

He's a frank franion, a merry companion. Heywood, Edw. IV. (1600), sign. c. 5.

FRANK. † adj. [franc, Fr.]

1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.

The moister sorts of trees yield little moss, for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs. Bacon.

They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others. Sprat, Serm.

'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing. L'Estrange.

2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.

I shall have reason

To shew the love and duty, that I bear you,

With franker spirit. Shakespeare, Othello.

3. Without conditions; without payment.

Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift, And he will care for all the rest to shift. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

We will that all the Jews, that either before or since have been taken and led away,—shall be sent frank and free. Dennie, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 25.

4. Not restrained; licentious. Not in use.

Might not be found a franker franion. Spenser, F. Q.

5. Fatted; in good condition. [from franc, old Fr.

a place to feed hogs in.] This seems to be the primary sense.

together, they were once again, and they took up
together, they were once again, and they took up

FRANK. n. s. [from frank, a frank or sty.] See the last sense of the adjective, frank.

1. A place to feed hogs; a sty.
Where sups he? Dost he bid bear feed in the old sty?
He feeds like a boar in a sty. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

2. A letter which pays no postage.
You'll have immediately, by several franks, my epistle to Lord Cobham. Pope to Swift.

3. A French coin.
To FRANK. n. s.

1. To shut up in a frank or sty. Hanmer.
In the sty of this most bloody bear,
My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold. Shakespeare.

2. To feed high; to fat; to cram.
Junius, and Ainsworth.
The husbandmen and farmers never frank them [hogs]
above three or four months.

Holingshead, Descript. of Brit. B. 3. p. 1096.
Our desire is rather to frank up ourselves with that which we should abhor. Abp. Sande, Sermon, fol. 155. b.

3. To exempt letters from postage.
My lord Ossory writes to you to-morrow; and you see I send this under his cover, or at least franked by him. Swift.
Gazettes sent gratis down, and frank'd
For which thy patron's weekly thank'd. Pope.

FRANKALMOIGNE. n. s. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank almone, or frankalmoigne, which, according to Britton, is a tenure by divine service.

Ayliffe, Parergon.
FRANKCHASSE. n. s. [from frank and chase.] A free chase; the liberty of free chase.

A forest is of so princely a tenure, that, according to our laws, none but the king can have a forest; if he chance to pass one over to a subject, 'tis no more forest, but frank-chase.

Howell, Lett. iv. 16.
FRA'NKINCENSE. n. s. [from frank and incense; so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it continues to be in many parts. We are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and as to the tree which produces it.

Hill.
Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frankincense. Isod.
I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India.

Brewerwood on Languages.
Black ebony only will in India grow,
And od'rous frankincense on the Sabean bough.

Dryden, Virg.
Cedar and frankincense, an od'rous pile,
Flam'd on the hearth, and wide perfume'd the isle. Pope.

FRANKISH. n. s. [from the Franks] Relating to the Franks.

Farinond after his coming out of Germany with his Franks or French people anciently of that country, and entering into Gallia, took he and his people unto their own Frankish or French tongue, to wit, a kind of Teutonic, which, after the speakers thereof, had gotten this other name.

Versteegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

FRANKLIN. n. s. [from frank.] A gentleman; a gentleman of land. It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly Englished a gentleman servant. Not in use. So far Dr. Johnson.
But his definition is not correct, and the word is also common, though he cites only Spenser. A franklin is a freeholder of considerable property;
and the name has given rise to that of many families in England.

A spacious court they see,
Both plain and pleasant to be walk'd in,
Where them they meet a franklin fair and free. Spenser, F. Q.
A franklin: his outside is an ancient yeoman of England;
though his inside may give arms, (with the best gentleman,) and never see the herald. Overbury, Character, sign. O. 6.

There are many now grown into families, now called Franklin; who are men in the county of Middlesex, and other parts, magnis ditati possessionibus.

Waterhouse, Comment on Fortescue, p. 388.
There's a franklin in the wild of Kent, hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.
She can start our franklins' daughters,
In their sleep, with shrieks and laughter. B. Jonson, Entertainments.

FRA'NKLY. adv. [from frank.]

1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.
Oh, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. St. Luke, vii. 42.
By the toughness of the earth the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs.
Spectator.

2. Without constraint.
The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses;
and they, with the volunteers, who frankly listed themselves,
amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse.
Clarendon.

3. Without reserve.
He entered very frankly into those new designs, which were contrived at court. Clarendon.

FRA'NKNESS. n. s. [from frank.]

1. Plainness of speech; openness; ingenuousness.
When the comde duke had some eclarcissement with the duke, in which he made all the protestations of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared, with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him. Clarendon.

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship: his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards. Addison, Guardian.

2. Liberality; bountyousness.

3. Freedom from reserve.
He delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, word by word, what Alexander had told him touching the strange story. Shakespeare.

The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity.

FRANKPLEGE. n. s. [from frank and plege.] A pledge,
i. e. liber pleige, i. e. fidei iussor. A pledge or surety for a man. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the public peace, free, that every freeman, male, at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decennae, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franciplegii, view of frankpledge. Cowel.

FRANKS.* n. s. [Lat. Franci.]

1. People of Franconia in Germany; and the ancient French.

Part of these Sicambers, saith Sebastian Munster, leaving their habitation, where the Rhine entereth into the sea, went up higher, and inhabited about the river of Main, and called themselves Franks. And from these Franks the French or Frenchmen are descended; who seem to have been so called, for having chosen, in some sort, to live in more freedom and liberty than some other of the Germans did.

Versteegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 1.

2. An appellation given, by the Turks, Arabs, and Greeks, to all the people of the western parts of Europe.

FRA'NTICK. adj. [corrupted from phrenetic, phreneticus, Lat. phreneticus, Gr. See FRENETICK.]

1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and turbulently mad.

Far off, he wonders what makes them so glad;

Of Bacchus merry fruit they did invent,

Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Spenser, F. Q.

2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent.

Esteeming, in the frantick error of their minds, the greatest madness in the world to be wisdom, and the highest wisdom foolishness. Hooker.

To such height their frantick passion grows,

That what both love, both hazard to destroy. Dryden.

She tears her hair, and, frantick in her griefs,

Calls out on Lucia. Addison, Cato.

3. Simply mad.

The lover frantick,

Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. Shakespeare.

FRA'NTICKLY.† adv. [from frantick.] Madly; distractedly; outrageously.

What wise men do thinke of them that so frantickly on their ale-benches do prattle, it is easy to conjecture.

Bale, Leland's New Year's Gift.

Wie, he, how frantickly I square my talk. Shakespeare.

Yet still would they his sacred laws transgress—

Against their Saviour frantickly rebel. Sandys, Ps. 78.

FRA'NTICKNESS.† n. s. [from frantick.] Madness; fury of passion; distraction. Sherwood.

FRATERNAL. adj. [fraternel, French; fraternus, Lat.] Brotherly; pertaining to brothers; becoming brothers.

One shall rise

Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content

With full equality, fraternal state,

Will arrogate dominion, undivided,
Over his brethren. Shakespeare, Fal.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions; and upon their unsuccessfulness, the censures of the church, until he reform and return. Hammond.

Plead it to her,

With all the strength and heat of eloquence

Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison, Cato.

FRATERNALLY.† adv. [from fraternal.] In a brotherly manner. Cotgrave.

FRATERNITY. n. s. [fraternité, French; fraternitas, Latin.]

1. The state or quality of a brother.
2. Body of men united; corporation; society; association; brotherhood.

'Tis a necessary rule in alliances, societies, and fraternities, and all manner of civil contracts, to have a strict regard to the humour of those we have to do withal. L'Estrange.

3. Men of the same class or character.

With what terms of respect knaves and sots will speak of their own fraternity. South, Sermon.

FRATERNIZA'TION.* n. s. [from fraternize.] A sort of brotherhood. • See TO FRATERNIZE.

I hope that no French fraternization, which the relations of peace and amity with systematised regicide would assuredly, sooner or later, draw after them, even if it should overturn our happy constitution itself, could so change the hearts of Englishmen, as to make them delight in representations, and processions, which have no other merit than that of degrading and insulting the name of royalty. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

TO FRATE'RNIZE.* v. n. [Fr. fraterniser.] This word has been supposed to have been introduced, at the commencement of the French democratical revolution; when pretensions of universal brotherhood were made the cloak of universal villainy. But the word, both in French and English, is at least of two hundred years' age; for thus Cotgrave renders the French fraterniser, "to fraternize, to concur with, to be near unto, to agree as brothers." In the cant of modern philosophy, the verb has been actively employed.

FRA'TRICIDE.† n. s. [fratricide, Fr. fratricidium, Lat.]

1. The murder of a brother.

In an hour and a half we came to a small village called Sinie; just by which is an ancient structure on the top of an high hill, supposed to be the tomb of Abel, and to have given the adjacent country in old times the name of Abilene. The fratricide also is said by some to have been committed in this place. Maunderell, Journ. to Aleppo, p. 134.

2. One who kills a brother.

The infamous fratricide was presently thrown from his usurped greatness. L. Addison, West. Barbary, p. 16.

FRAUD.† n. s. [fraus, Lat. fraus, Cornish; fraude, French.]

1. Deceit; cheat; trick; artifice; subtilty; stratagem.

Our better part remains

To work in close design, by fraud or guile,

What force effected not. Milton, P. L.

None need the frauds of sly Ulysses fear.

If success a lover's toil attends,

Who asks if force or fraud obtain'd his ends. Pope.

2. Misfortune; damage.

At least our envious foe hath fail'd, who thought

All like himself rebellious, by whose aid

This inaccessible high strength, the seat

Of Deity supreme, was disposess'd.

He trusted to have said and done, and yet he was not Drown any, whom their place knows here and there.
To all his angels he proposed
To draw the proud king Abah into fraud
That he might fall in Ramoth.

FRAUDFUL, adj. [from fraud and ful.] Treacherous; artful; trickish; deceitful; subtle.

The welfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudful man.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He, full of fraudful art,
This well-invented tale for truth imparts.

Dryden, Zn.

FRAUDFULLY, adv. [from fraudful.] Deceitfully;
artfully; subtilly; treacherously; by stratagem.

FRAUDULENCE, n. s. [from fraudulentia, Lat.] De-

FRAUDULENCY, n. s. [from fraudulentia, Lat.] De-

We admire the providence of God in the continuance of Scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of hereticks always to deprave the same.

Hooker.

The malice, wickedness, and fraudulency of those spirits.
M. Casaubon, of Credulity, p. 35.

FRAUDULENT, adj. [from fraudulent, Fr. Cotgrave; fraudulentus, Latin.]

1. Full of artifice; trickish; subtle; deceitful.

He, with serpent tongue,
His fraudulent temptation thus began.
She mix'd the potion, fraudulent of soul;
The potion mantled in the golden bowl.

Milton, P. L.

Pope, Odys.

2. Performed by artifice; deceitful; treacherous.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent.

Milton, P. R.

FRAUDULENTLY, adv. [from fraudulent.] By fraud; by deceit; by artifice; deceitfully.

The prophete Jeremie pronounceth hym accursed, that doeth his mayster's busynesse fraudulently.

Woolton, Chr. Man. (1576,) sign. L. 8.

He that by fact, word, or sign, either fraudulently or violently, does hurt to his neighbour, is bound to make restitution.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

FRAUGHT, particip. pass. [from fraught, now
written freight. Dr. Johnson. But this participle is from the Teut. verb, vrachten, "vectare, vehere, et vectura onerare, implere navim, Sax. frachten."
Kilian.]

1. Laden; charged.

In the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there miscurried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught.

Shakespeare.

With joy
And tidings fraught, to hell he now return'd.

Milton, P. L.

And now approach'd their fleet from India, fraught

With all the riches of the rising sun,

And precious sand from southern climates brought.

Dryden.

2. Filled; stored; thronged.

The Scripture is fraught even with laws of nature.

Hooker.

By this sad Una, fraught with anguish sore,

Arriv'd, where they in earth their blood had spilt.

Spenser, F. Q.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out cere-

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Whoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the communicating and discoursing with another.

Bacon.

Hell, their fit habitation, fraught with fire,

Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain.

Milton, P. L.

Abdallah and Belshazzar were so fraught with all kinds of knowledge, and possessed with so constant a passion for each other, that their solitude never lay heavy on them.

Addison.

FRAUGHT, particip. pass. [from fraught, now
written freight. Dr. Johnson. But this participle
is from the Teut. verb, vrachten, "vectare, vehere, et vectura onerare, implere navim, Sax. frachten."

Dryden.

2. Filled; stored; thronged.

The Scripture is fraught even with laws of nature.

By this sad Una, fraught with anguish sore,

Arriv'd, where they in earth their blood had spilt.

Spenser, F. Q.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out cere-

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Whoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the communicating and discoursing with another.

Bacon.

Hell, their fit habitation, fraught with fire,

Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain.

Milton, P. L.

Abdallah and Belshazzar were so fraught with all kinds of knowledge, and possessed with so constant a passion for each other, that their solitude never lay heavy on them.

Addison.

FRAUGHTAGE, n. s. [from fraught.] Lading;
cargo. A bad word.

Our fraughtage, sir,

I have convey'd abroad.

On that persuasion am I returned, as to a famous and free port, myself also bound by more than a maritime law, to expose as freely what fraughtage I conceive to bring of no trifles.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

FRAY, n. s. [from frayer, to fright, French.]

1. A battle; a fight.

Time tells, that on that ever blessed day,
When Christian swords with Persian blood were dy'd,
The furious prince Tancredie from that fray
His coward foes chased through forests wide.

After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He left them to the fates in bloody fray

To toil and struggle through the well-fought day.

Pope.

2. A duel; a combat.

Since, if we fall before th' appointed day,
Nature and death continue long their fray.

The boaster Paris oft desir'd the day
With Sparta's king to meet in single fray.

Pope, Iliad.

3. A broil; a quarrel; a riot of violence.

I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays
Like a fine bragging youth.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

To FRAY, v. a. [from frayer, Fr.]

1. To fright; to terrify.

The panther, knowing that his spotted hide
Doth please all beasts, but that his looks them fray,
Within a bush his dreadful head doth hide,
To let them gaze, whilst he on them may prey.

So diversely themselves in vain they fray,
Whilst some more bold to measure him stand nigh.

Spenser, F. Q.

Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

These vultures prey only on carcases, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour to fray them away.

Gou. of Tongue.

2. [from frayer, Fr.] To rub; to wear.

Six round-about apoons with pockets, and four striped muslin night-rails very little frayed.

Taiter, No. 245.

3. To burnish, as a deer his head, by rubbing.

Cotgrave.

A deer is said to fray her head, when she rubs it against a tree.

Whalley, Notes on B. Johnson.

FRAYNG, n. s. [from fray.] Peel of a deer's horn,

For by his slot, his entrance and his port,
His frayings, fewness, he doth promise sport.

B. Johnson, Poet. Preface.

FREAK. † n. s. [freck, German, saucy, peevish; freak, Saxon, fugitive. Dr. Johnson.—Waghter defines the German freck by the Latin similis liber. i. e. too free, deducing it from the Sax. fneah, free. But may it not be from the Icel. freaka, to quicken motion, to hasten; Sax. fneaman, to dance?] 1. A sudden and causeless change of place. 2. A sudden fancy; a humour; a whim; a capricious prank.

O! but I fear the fickle freaks, quoth she,
Of fortune, and the odds of arms in field. Spenser, F. Q.
When that freak has taken possession of a fantastical head,
the distemper is incurable. L'Estrange.
She is restless and peevish, and sometimes in a freak will instantly change her habitation. Spectator.

To vex me more, he took a freak
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.

To FREAK. † v. a. [a word, I suppose, Scotch, brought into England by Thomson, Dr. Johnson says. The word is not Scotch. Nor is our language indebted to Thomson for it. It had been used, nearly a century before his time, by Milton. And Milton, who loved our ancient language, might adopt this verb from the old word frecken, a freckle or spot. See FRECKLE.] To variegate; to checker.

The white pink, and the pansy freak'd with jet.
Milton, Lycidas.

There farry nations harbour:
Sables of glossy black, and dark embrown'd,
Or beauteous, freak'd with many a mingled hue. Thomson.

FREAKISH. † adj. [from freak.] Capricious; humoursome.

Folly is freakish and humorous. Barrow, vol. i. S. i.
One grain of true sense and true wisdom, in real worth and use, doth outweigh loads of freakish wit.

It may be a question, whether the wife or the woman was the more freakish of the two; for she was still the same uneasy
fop. L'Estrange.

FREAKISHLY. adv. [from freakish.] Capriciously; humoursomely.

FREAKISHNESS. n. s. [from freakish.] Capriciousness; humoursomeness; whimsicalness.

To FREAM. v. n. [fremere, Latin; fremir, French.] To growl or grunt as a boar. Bailey.

FRECKLE. † n. s. [fleck, a spot, German; whence fleckle, freckle. Dr. Johnson.—Our old word is frecken or fraken. Thus in the ancient dictionary of Huloet: "Frecken, a mole or spot in the body or face." And thus Chaucer: "A few fraknes in his face yspreint," Kn. Tale. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, the word is Saxon; but he produces no proof.]

1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.
Buddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whence dark set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.

2. Any small spot or discolouration.
The cowdips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see;
Those be rubies fairy favours;
In those freckles live their favours. Shakespeare, Mid. N. Dream.

The farewell frosts and easterly winds now spot your tulips;
therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles. Evelyn.

FRECKLED. † adj. [from freckle.] Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots.
It is a freckled spot that groweth in the skin. Levi, xiii. 39.

Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With silken worms. Drayton, Cynthia.

The even mead that eye brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip
Wasting the sunny, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness. Shakespeare, Ham. V.

Now thy face charms every shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And, thy freckled neck display'd,
Envy breeds in every maid. Swift.

FRECKLEDNESS. † n. s. [from freckle.] The state of being freckled; as, "freckledness of the face." Sherwood.

FRECKLEFACED. † adj. [freckle and face.] Having a face full of freckles.

He that's freckle-fac'd. Beaumont and Fletcher, Two Nob. Kinsmen.

FRECKLY. † adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles. Sherwood.

FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredstole, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.

FREE. † adj. [fneah, fneo, Saxon; vry, Dutch; frija, Gothick. "Vox antiquissima." Serenius.]

1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependent.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any conditions of subjection. Temple.

Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains?
How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains. Prior.
Set an unhappy pris'ner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell!
Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton, P. L.

To gloomy cares my thoughts alone are free,
Ill the gay sports with troubled thoughts agree. Pope.

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to shew thy dangerous brow by night,
When evils are most free. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Temple.

The critics have been very free in their censures. Pollon.

I know there are two whose presumptuous thoughts
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem to find. Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous; frank.

Castello, I have doubts within my heart
Will you be free and candid to your friend? Othello, Dryden.

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.
'Tis not to make me jealous;
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter. Shakespeare, Othello.
Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior.

8. Liberal; not parsimonious: with of.
Glo'ster too, a foe to citizens
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as others spare. Pope, Horace Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope.

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.
We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon, New Atlantis.

10. Clear from distress.
Who alone suffers, suffers most i'th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

11. Guiltless; innocent.
Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryden.

12. Exempt: with of anciently; more properly from.

These
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denham.
Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.

Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.
The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body: with of.

He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden.
What dost thou make a shipboard? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea? Dryden.

14. Without expence; by charity, as a free school.
Countenance all legal, allowed, free grammar-schools, by causing, as much as in you lies, the youth of the nation to be bred up there. South, Sermon v. 48.

15. Accomplished; genteel; charming. [a very ancient application of free to our females; Su. Goth. and Icel. frid, handsome; Germ. frey. Ilse says, that fru once denoted, exclusively, a woman of rank. See Frey. Dr. Johnson overpasses the present sense of free.]

Payre yong Venus, fresh and free. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.
Now were they liegemen to this ladie free, [the fair Britomart.] Spenser, F. Q. li. i. 44.
I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great.
B. Jonson on Lucy, Countess of Bedford.

16. Ready; eager. We still use the phrase, free horse.

Straying the forest wide on course, free
[Spenser, F. Q. li. 12.]

To FREE, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of
If any, he, the trespass of the queen. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. Macan, ii. 22.

Canst thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand? Dryden.
Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.
It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniencies the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them. Charrillon.

Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryden.
Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd. Dryden, Virg.

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.
The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.
Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.

This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in the.
We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shakespeare.
Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.

5. To exempt.
For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.
FREEBO'OTER. n. s. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name; his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, better, as spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.
The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the seamen. Clarendon.

FREEBO'OTING. n. s. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and truest friend. Spenser on Ireland.

FREEBORN. n. s. [free and born. Sax. freo-beorn.]

Not a slave; inheriting liberty.
The chief captain answered, With a great voice, obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was freeborn. Acts 16.

This is true liberty, when freeborn men
Having to advise the publick, may speak free. Milton, Tr. from Euripides.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world! Dryden.
I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden, Dedication.
I shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame.

Who from consent and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law. Dryden.
[With things pretend to right.]

FREE

FREECHAPEL. n. s. [free and chapel.] Such chapel as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chapel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowel.

FREECOST. n. s. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South.

TO FREE-DENIZEN.* v. a. [free and denizen, or denison.] To make free.

No worldly respects can free-denizen a Christian here, and of "peregrinus" make him "civis." Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 202.

FREE-DENIZEN.* n. s. A citizen.

Plato thought it meet, that in every city or commonweal, as often as any good or harm did happen to any citizen or free-denison thereof, it should not be counted that man's good or harm only, but the good or harm of the whole city.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 619.

FREEDMAN. n. s. [free and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jostles, and will be preferr'd;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden, Juv.

FREEDOM.† n. s. [Sax. frýdom, freobom.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom.

Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!

Not that which bondmen from their masters find,

The privilege of doles; not yet t' inscribe

Their names in this or t'other Roman tribe:

That false enfranchisement with ease is found;

Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden, Pers.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our holy Sabbath have I sworn

To have the due and forgoit of my bond:

If you deny it, let the danger light

Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakespeare.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change

Their nature, and revoke the high decree

Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd

Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall.

Milton, P. I.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always choosing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

8. Assumed familiarity; a colloquial expression: in which sense the plural is used; as, he will not suffer any freedoms to be taken with him.

FREEROTTER. adj. [free and rot.] Not restrained in the march.

FREE

We will feast upon this feast,
Which now goes too freehold. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
FREHEARTED.† adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

A freehearted woman, and a chaute.

Spenser, Of the State of Man.

Sir Roger Aston, an Englishman born, but had his breeding wholly in Scotland, and had served the king many years as his barber; an honest and freehearted man.

Sir J. Weldon, Court of R. James, p. 4.

Love must freehearted be, and voluntary;

And not enchanted, or by fate constrain'd.

Davies.

FREHOLD. n. s. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or folkland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord.

Cowel.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record. Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it.

Addison, Freeholder.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FRE'HOLDER. n. s. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREELY.† adv. [from free. Sax. frælice.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependance.

2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The vilest persons breathing have passed their lives freely and jorundly, without the least misgiving or suspicion about their eternal concerns, who yet at length have met with a full payment of wrath and vengeance in the other world for all their confidence and jollity in this. South, Sermon, 36.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains

I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,

You would drink freely.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,

And censure freely who have written well.

Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in slaying than the Greeks in true varrying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread amongst men. Johnson.

The path to peace is virtue: virtue shows

Thyself may freely on thyself bestow;

Fortune was never working'd by the wife;

But set aloft by folly, naps the snare.

Dryden, Juv.

6. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who would, and fall who fell.

He dared us to chose with the liberty of reason; he told us they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely, and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use; nature freely and indifferently opens the bosom of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FREEMAN. n. s. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves, than that Caesar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgement which keeps us from choosing or doing the worse, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent, Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.

What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison on Italy.

FREEMANSON.* See MASON.

FREEMINDED. adj. [free and mind] Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon.

FREENESS. † n. s. [from free. Sax. frugneffe.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

Besides this largeness in the will of men And widged freeness, now let's think upon His understanding. More, Song of the Soul, ii. iii. 9.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuitiness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Sprat.

FREER.* n. s. [from free.] One who gives freedom. Sherwood.

FREESCHOOL. n. s. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeshool at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small freeshool; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPOKEN. † adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Merry one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of those that was at supper, and was a free-spoken tenant, said, Merry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

These free-spoken and unflinching men, that are the eyes of their country. Milton, Ann. Rem. Defence.

The free-spoken and forward, or these mercenary flatterers. Mary against Idolatry, Pref.

FREESTONE. † n. s. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building, and dug up in many parts of England; so called from its being of such a constitution, as to be dug up freely in any direction. Chambers.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Boissard.

I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakespeare, As You Like It.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestones, and always kept very neat. Addison on Italy.

FREETHINKER. n. s. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependence on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground. Swift, Arg. against abolishing Christianity.

FREETHINKING.* n. s. [free and think.] Contempt of religion; licentious ignorance.

Are we not grown drunk and giddy with vice, and vanity, and presumption, and freethinking, and extravagance of every kind? Bp. Berkeley, Sermon, Feb. 12, 1731.

We see France and Italy overrun with the worst kind of deism. There our travelling gentry first picked it up, for a rarity. And indeed, at first, without much malice. It was brought home in a cargo of new fashions; and worn, for some time, with that levity by the importers, and treated with that contempt by the rest, as suited and was due to the apishness of foreign manners; till a set of solemn blockheads, grown insolent by liberty, and malicious by unsuccessful attempts towards distinction, abused the indulgence of a free government, in reducing those vague impieties into a system. And so it was, that licentious ignorance came to be distinguished with the name of freethinking. Warburton, Sermon, in 1746.

FREETONGUED.* adj. [free and tongue.] Accustomed to speak freely and openly.

Where ministers depend upon voluntary benevolences, if they do but, upon some just reproof, gall the conscience of a guilty hearer; or preach some truth, which disrelieves the palate of a prepossessed auditor; how he straight flies out! and not only withholds his own pay, but also withdraws the contributions of others; so as the freetongued preacher must either live by air, or be forced to change his pasture. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, B. ii. c. 7.

FREEWARREN.* n. s. [free, and warren.] A privilege of preserving and killing game. See WARREN.

Freewarren is a franchise erected for preservation of beasts and fowls of warren. Blackstone.

FREEWILL. n. s. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Isaiah, viii. 13.

FREEWOMAN. n. s. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. Machiavelli.

TO FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [erison, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the penetrant and dissolving of common water. Bayle on the Creation.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motion of the sun. Newton.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

F R E

Orpheus with his lute made trees
And mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal,
And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.
To FREEZE.† v. a. pret. froze, and formerly freezed;
part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery Alp. Milton, P. L.
2. To kill by cold.
When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me,
Ev'n in his garments! Shakespeare, Rich. III.
My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakespeare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.
I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
What was that snaky-headed Gorgan shield,
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone?
Milton, Comus.

Death came on aмин,
And exercis'd below his iron reign;
Then upward to the seat of life he goes;
Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

To FREIGHT.† v. a. preter. freighted; part. fraught;
which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French. Dr. Johnson. Rather the Teut. vrachten. See To FRAUGHT. Icel. frackr,
"rudens, à fretten, onerare." Wachter.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.
The princes
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress. Prol.
Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
Who freight's a ship to venture on the seas;
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden, Juv.
Freighted with iron, from my native land
I steer my voyage. Pope, Odyssey.
2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.
I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and
The freighting souls within her. Shakespeare, Temest.

FREIGHT. n. s.
1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.
He clears the deck receives the mighty freight;
The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden, Æn.
2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER. n. s. [fretteur, French.] He who freights a vessel.
FREN.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology.
The Germ. fremd, Dutch, vriend, & Sax. fremb, signify an alien, a stranger. "from the preposition fram or fra, from." Ray. Chaucer thus uses fremde or fremed for strange. But the contemporary commentator on Spenser considers fren as a contraction of foreign: "Fremme, a stranger.
The word I thinke was first poetically put, and afterward used in common custome of speech for farone." Notes on the Shep. Cal. April.] A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.

F R E

But now from me his madding mind is start,
And wooes the widow's daughter of the glen;
So now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart;
So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
FRENCH.* n. s.

1. The people of France. [Franci, Lat.]
From the Franks the French or Frenchmen are descended, who seem to have been so called for having chosen in some sort to live in more freedom, and liberty, than some other of the Germans did. Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 1.
I come to the French, a people breathing liberty, by the very derivation of their name.
Behaving of the Peace of Germany, p. 110.

2. The language of the French.
The present French is composed of Latin, German, and the old Gaulick. Camden, Rem.
The English of Chaucer has a great mixture of French in it.
Tyrwhitt on the Lang. and Versif. of Chaucer.

FRENCH.* adj. Belonging to the character or language of the French.

Liveliness and assurance are, in a peculiar manner, the qualifications of the French nation. Addison, Spect. No. 435.
We have few Latin words among the terms of domestick use, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin. Johnson, Pref. to his Dictionary.

FRENCH Chalk. n. s.
French chalk is an indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.
French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as steatites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone.
Woodward.

FRENCH Grass.* n. s. Saint-foin; so named, as coming originally to this country from France.

FRENCH Horn.* n. s. [French, corne de chasse.] A musical instrument of the wind kind, used in hunting; and in modern times employed, with fine effect, in regular concerts.

As the road led them by degrees towards the extremity of the moor, they heard, at a distance, the sound of a French-horn; which a little revived Tugwell's spirits, though it revived at the same time the jeopardy he had been in amongst the stag-hunters. Graves, Spirit. Quir. x. 7.

To FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They nicker'd nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden, Rem.

Has he familiarly
Dislik'd your yellow starch, or said your doublet
Was not exactly frenchified. Beaumont and Fl. Qu. of Corinth.

FRENCHLIKE.* adj. [French and like.] Imitating
the French fashion.

His hair Frenchlike stares on his frighted head.
Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 7.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 394.

He himself impotent,
By means of his frenetick malady. Daniel, Civil Wars.

FRENZICAL.* adj. [from frenzy.] Approaching to madness.

The narrowness of her income, the coldness of her lover, the loss of her reputation, all contributed to make her miserable, and to encrease the frenzical disposition of her mind.
Orrery on Swift, p. 112.

FRENZY.† n. s. [φρενις; phrenitis, Latin; whence phrenetisy, phrenetsy, phrenzy, or frenzy; Fr. fren- naisie, frenesie. Chaucer writes our word frenseie.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison, Cato.

Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties.

Benley.

FRE'QUENCE.† n. s. [frequent, old Fr. frequentia, Latin.]

1. Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequent of degree,
From high to low throughout. Shakespeare, Timon.

I was encouraged with a sufficient frequent of auditors.
Bp. Hall, Spec. of his Life, p. 11.

2. Repetition.

I might here have done with the frequent; but let me add this one consideration more, that often inculcation of warning necessarily implies a danger. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 5.

He, in full frequent bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Milton, P. L.

FRE'QUENCY. n. s. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally intitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; its force and influence would be lost by the frequent of it. Atterbury.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou cam'st ere while into this senate: who
Of such a frequent, so many friends
And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee?
R. Jonson, Catiline.

A thousand demigods on golden seats,
Frequent and full. Milton, P. L.

TO FRE'QUENT. v. a. [frequent, Latin; frequenter, French.] To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to.

They in latter day,
Finding in it fit ports for fishers' trade,
Gave more the same frequent, and further to invade.

Spenser, F. Q.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto: our Saviour himself and the apostles frequented them. Hooker.

This fellow here, this thy creature,
By night frequent my house. Shakespeare, Timon.

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels. Bacon.

With tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air

Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton, P. L.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
And there what I before digested, vent. Denham.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden.

FREQUE'NTABLE. adj. [from frequent.] Conversable; accessible. A word not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Swamy.

FREQUENTA'TION.* n. s. [Fr. frequentation; Lat. frequentatio.] Resort; the act of visiting.

We are separated from other nations, to the end we be not polluted with sin by their frequentation and company.

Fresh on my memory. Braun, and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgement past remain

F R E

Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what is just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton, P. L.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresh date will longer stay. Dryden, Indian Emp.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in water. Denham.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milton, P. L.

Think not, 'cause men flatter say,
Y' are fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as is the morning star,
That you are so. Carew.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryden, Æn.

Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortur'd joints. Dryden.
Like a fresh tenant of Newgate, when he has refused the payment of garnish. Swift, Tale of a Tub.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

8. Florid; vigorous; chearful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him: take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon, Holy War.

Two swains,
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Popc.

9. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me,
Hast thou beheld a fresh gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks? Shakspeare.

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to the grave. Harvey on Consumptions.

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison, Spect.

FRESHFORCE.* n. s. [low Lat. frisca fortia.] In law, a force done within forty days. If a man be disseised of lands or tenements, within any city or borough; or deforced from them after the death of his ancestors to whom he is heir; or after the death of his tenant for life, or in tail; he may, within forty days after his title accrued, have his remedy

by an assize, or bill of fresh-force.
Cowel, and Chambers.

The space of forty days hath had with us divers applications, as in the assize of freshforce in cities and boroughs, &c.
Selden, on Drayton's Polyolb. § 17.

FRESHLY.† adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

They are now freshly in difference with them. Bacon.

FRESHWA'TERED. * adj. [fresh and water.] Supplied with fresh water.

That rocky pile thou seest, that verdant lawn
Fresh-water'd from the mountains. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

FRET. † n. s. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from phetan, to eat; others from phetpian, to adorn; some from phetra; Skinner more probably from fremo, for the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum. Dr. Johnson. — A more probable etymology perhaps, is the Saxon freoðan, or the Fr. frotter, to rub, to wear away; whence the figurative application of the word, to vex, to cause any agitation or commotion. We use to rub in the sense of to excite. Wicliffe writes frottyng for fretting. B. Jonson also uses froted for rubbed. In the first of the definitions, viz. a strait of the sea, fret, it may likewise be observed, is the Cornish word for it.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

Of this river the surface is covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage. Addison on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, dischargeth itself of heterogeneous mixtures. Derham.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The harp
Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice
Choral or unison. Milton, P. L.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Grew, Cosmolog. Sacra.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of the temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets,
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

The incredulous Pheac, having yet
Drank but one round, reply'd in sober fret. Tate, Juv.

You, too weak, the slightest loss to bear,
Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage. Creech, Juv.

Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope.

To FRET. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To agitate violently by external impulse or action.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

In the banks of rivers, with the washing of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Abbot.

Before I ground the object metal on the pitch, I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton, Opticks.

3. To hurt by attrition.

Antony
Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Fox, Acts and Mon. of Bishop Latimer.

Some friarly declamation against the excess of superfluity.

Bacon on a Libel in 1592.

Seek not proud riches, but such as thou may'st get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly; yet have no abstract nor friarly contempt of them.

Bacon, Ess.

FRIARSCOWL. n. s. [friar and cowl.] A plant. It agrees with arum, from which it differs only in having a flower resembling a cowl.

FRIAR'S Lantern.* n. s. The ignis fatuus, sometimes called Jack with a lantern; formerly believed to lead night-wanderers into marshes and waters.

She was pinch'd, and pull'd, she sed;

And he, by friar's lantern led,

Tells how the drudging goblin swet.

Milton, L'Allegro.

FRIARY.* n. s. [from friar, Fr. frerie.] A monastery or convent of friars.

As to the friaries, which were mendicants, and had nothing but their houses of habitation, I did endeavour, when I had the perusal of the Tower records, to find out the times of their foundations.

Letters, (Dugdale to A. Wood.) vol. i. p. 8.

FRIARY.* adj.

1. Like a friar.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow when he had friarly invented to signify his name, St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn field.

Camden, Rem.

2. Belonging to a friary.

It was fashionable for persons of the highest rank to bequeath their bodies to be buried in the friary churches.

Warton, Hist. Eng. P. i. 293.

To FRIVBLE.* v. n. [probably from the Teut. frivel, or Fr. frivole, frivolous.]

1. To trifle.

Though cheats, yet more intelligible

Than those that with the stars do fribble.

Hudibras.

2. To totter, like a weak person.

Wretched Nocturnus, her feeble keeper; how the poor creature frubbles in his gait!

Taller, No. 49.

F R I

FRI'BBLE.* adj. [Fr. frivole.] Trifling; silly; frivolous.

The superficial, trivial, and frigid manner, in which that fribble minister treated this important branch of administration. Brit. Crit. Jan. 1798.

FRI'BBLE.* n. s. A frivolous, contemptible fellow; a silly fop.

FRI'BBLER. n. s. [from the verb.] A trifler.

A fribbler is one who professes rapture for the woman, and dreads her consent. Spectator.

FRI'BORGH, or FRI'DBURGH.* n. s. [Goth. frid, peace, and borgur, security; Saxon, freo-borþe, free-borough.] The same as frankpledge; friborþ being in use in the Saxons' time, the other since the conquest. See FRANKPLEDGE. Cowel.

A man who could not find the security of some tithing or friborþ for his behaviour, was, upon account of this universal desertion, called Friendless man; [and] was by our ancestors condemned to death. Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

FRI'FACE.* n. s. [Lat. frigus, frigid. This is a word much older in our language than fricassee.]

1. Meat sliced, and dressed, with strong sauce. Hotter than all the roasted cooks you sat To dress the fricace of your alphabet.

Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 80.

2. An unguent, prepared by frying several materials together.

Some on't there they pour'd into his ears,
Some in his nostrils, and recover'd him:
Applying but the fricace.

B. Jonson, For.

A lord that is a leper,
A knight that has the bone-ache, or a squire
That hath both these, you make 'em smooth and sound
With a bare fricace of your medicine. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

FRICASSE'E.* n. s. [French.] A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce.

Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing dogs,
Their stinking cheese, and fricacy of frogs!
He'd raise no fables, sing no flagrant lye,
Of boys with custard choak'd at Newberry.

King.

Soups, and olios, fricassees, and ragouts.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 7.

To FRI'CASSEE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in fricassee.

Common sense and truth will not down with them, unless it be hashed and fricased. Echard, Observ. (1696,) p. 63.

Sirloins and rumps of beef offend my eyes,
Pleas'd with frogs fricaseed.

Bramston.

FRICA'TION. n. s. [fricatio, Latin.] The act of rubbing one thing against another.

Gentle fricatio draweth forth the nourishment, by making the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this fricatio I wish to be done in the morning. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Resinous or unctuous bodies, and such as will flame, attract vigorously, and most thereof without fricatio, as good hard wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FRIC'TION. n. s. [friction, Fr. frictio, from frico, Latin.]

1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction, percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion? Newton, Opticks.

2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

3. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloths.

F R I

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.

FRI'DAY. n. s. [Frige-dæg, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Freya, a Saxon deity.

An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer,

And seldom shall we see a Friday clear.

Dryden.

To FRIDGE.* v. n. [Sax. frician, to dance.] To move quickly.

The little motes or atoms that fridge and play in the beams of the sun. Hallywell, Melampusron. (1681,) p. 3.

FRI'DSTOLE.* n. s. A sanctuary; the seat of peace. See FRED.

FRIEND.* n. s. [viend, Dutch; freond, Saxon; from freon, to love; so the Goth. frijons, a friend, frijan, to love.] This word, with its derivatives, is pronounced friend, friendly: the i totally neglected.

1. One joined to another in mutual benevolence and intimacy: opposed to foe or enemy.

Friends of my soul, you twain

Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain. Shakespeare.

Some man is a friend for his own occasion, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble. Ecclus. vi. 8.

God's benison go with you, and with those

That would make good of bad, and friends of foes.

Shakespeare.

Wonder not to see this soul extend
The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend.

Dryden.

2. One without hostile intentions.

Who comes so fast in silence of the night?

— A friend.

— What friend? your name? Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. One reconciled to another: this is put by the custom of the language somewhat irregular in the plural number.

He's friends with Cæsar,

In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free.

Shakespeare.

My son came then into my mind; and yet my mind

Was then scarce friends with him. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I am friends with all the world, but thy base malice.

Braun, and Fl. Wife for a Month.

If she repent, and would make me amends,

Bid her but send me hers, and we are friends.

Carew.

4. An attendant; or companion.

The king ordains their entrance, and ascends

His regal seat, surrounded by his friends.

Dryden, Æn.

5. Favourer; one propitious.

Aurora riding upon Pegasus, sheweth her swiftness, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions.

Peacham.

6. A familiar compellation.

Friend, how camest thou in hither?

St. Matt. xxii. 12.

What supports me, do'st thou ask?

The conscience, friend, t'have lost mine eyes o'erly'd.

In liberty's defence.

Milton, Sonnet.

7. Formerly a cant expression for a paramour of either sex.

Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Never come in visor to my friend,

Nor woo in rhyme.

Shakespeare, Lou. L. Lost.

8. A FRIEND in Court. This is an old expression for one who is supposed to possess sufficient interest to serve another.

Friends in court are better is

Than penny is in purse, certis.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 3340.

FRI

A friend to the court is better than a penny in purse.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

I tell thee, person, if I get her, reckon
Thou hast a friend in court; and shalt command
A thousand pound, &c. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

To FRIEND.† v. a. [from the noun.] To favour;
to befriend; to countenance; to support.

So Fortune friends the bold. Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 7.

I know that we shall have him well to friend. Shakespeare.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That, for the fault's love, is th' offender friended. Shakespeare.

If ever fortune friend us with a barque,

Largely supply us with all provision.

Beaum. and Fl. Sea Voyage.

FRIENDED. adj. Well disposed; inclined to love.

Not friended by his wish to your high person,
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends. Shakespeare.

FRIENDLESS.† adj. [Sax. fræonbleas.]

1. Wanting friends; wanting support; without countenance; destitute; forlorn.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Woe to him that is alone, is verified upon none so much as upon the friendless person. South.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,

Oh friendless and forsaken virtue fly. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

To what new clime, what distant sky,

Forsaken, friendless, will ye fly? Pope.

2. FRIENDLESS Man. The Saxon word for him whom we call an outlaw, because he was, upon his exclusion from the king's peace and protection, denied all help of friends.

A man who could not find the security of some tithing or frithorh for his behaviour, was, upon account of this universal desertion, called Friendless man.

Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

FRIENDLIKE.* adj. [friend and like. Sax. fræonb-lic.] Having the disposition of a friend.

But soon my soul had gathered up her powers,
Which in this need might, friendlike, give her aid.

Drayton, Legend of Matilda.

FRIENDLINESS.† n. s. [from friendly.]

1. A disposition to friendship.

Such a liking and friendliness as hath brought forth the effects. Sidney.

They love discreetly,

And place their friendliness upon desert.

Beaum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

2. Exertion of benevolence.

Let all the intervals be employed in prayers, charity, friendliness and neighbourhood, and means of spiritual and corporal health. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

FRIENDLY.† adj. [from friend. Sax. fræonblic.]

1. Having the temper and disposition of a friend; kind; favourable; benevolent.

They gave them thanks, desiring them to be friendly still unto them. 2 Mac. xii. 31.

Thou to mankind

Be good, and friendly still, and oft return! Milton, P. L.

How art thou

To me so friendly grown above the rest

Of brutal kind? Milton, P. L.

Let the Nassau-star in rising majesty appear,

And guide the prosperous mariner

With everlasting beams of friendly light. Prior.

2. Disposed to union; amicable.

Like friendly colours found our hearts unite,

And each from each contract new strength and light. Pope.

3. Salutory; homogenous.

Not that Nephelæ, which the wife of Thesea

In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,

Is of such power to stir up joy as this,

To life to friendly, or to cool to thirst. Milton, Comus.

FRI

4. Favourable; convenient.

At the approach of night,

On the first friendly bank he throws him down,
Or rests his head upon a rock till morn. Addison, Cato.

FRIENDLY.† adv. [Sax. fræonblice.]

1. In the manner of friends; with appearance of kindness; amicably.

Thou hast spoken friendly unto this handmaid. Rust, ii. 13.

Here between the armies

Let's drink together friendly, and embrace;

That all their eyes may bear those tokens home

Of our restored love and amity. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I urg'd him gently,

Friendly, and privately, to grant a partage

Of this estate to her who owns it all.

Beaum. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

2. Concurrently; in union.

A lady,

In whom all graces that can perfect beauty,
Are friendly met. Beaum. and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

FRIENDSHIP.† n. s. [Sax. fræonbryce.]

1. The state of minds united by mutual benevolence; amity.

There is little friendship in the world, and least of all between equals, which was wont to be magnified: that that is,
is between superiour and inferiour, whose fortunes may comprehend the one the other. Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

2. Highest degree of intimacy.

My sons, let your unseemly discord cease,
If not in friendship, live at least in peace. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

3. Favour; personal kindness.

His friendships, still to few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind. Swift.

Raw captains are usually sent only preferred by friendship, and not chosen by sufficiency. Spenser on Ireland.

4. Assistance; help.

Gracious, my lord, hard-by here is a hovel:
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest;
Repose you there. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

5. Conformity; affinity; correspondence; aptness to unite.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, in mixing together those colours of which we would make trial.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

FRIEZE. n. s. [drap de frise, Fr.] A coarse warm cloth, made perhaps first in Friesland.

If all the world

Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,

Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,

The All-giver would be unthank'd. Milton, Comus.

The captive Germans of gigantic size,

Are rank'd in order, and are clad in frieze. Dryden, Pers.

He could no more live without his frieze-coat than without his skin. Addison, Guardian.

See how the double nation lies,

Like a rich coat with skirts of frieze;

As if a man, in making posies,

Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

FRIEZE.† } n. s. [Fr. frize; probably from the Lat.

FRIZE. } phrygia, an embroiderer.] A large flat member which separates the architrave from the cornice; of which there are as many kinds as there are orders of columns. Horris.

No jutting frieze

Buttress, nor coigne of ransome, but this bed

Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle. Shakespeare.

Nor did there want

Cornice or frieze with busy sculptures gray;

The roof was fretted gold. Milton, P. L.

Polydore designed admirably well, as to the practical part, having a particular genius for friezes. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

FRIEZE. † adj. [from frieze, Fr. frieze.] Shagged or napped with frieze; as, "garments fryzed only on the one side." Hulot.

FRIEZELIKE. adj. [frieze and like.] Resembling a frieze.

I have seen the figure of Thalia, the comic muse, sometimes with an entire headpiece and a little friezelike tower, running round the edges of the face, and sometimes with a mask for the face only. Addison on Italy.

FRI'GAT. n. s. [frigate, French; fregata, Italian.]

1. A small ship. Ships under fifty guns are generally termed frigats.

The treasure they fought for was, in their view, embezzled in certain frigats. Raleigh, Apology.

On high rais'd decks the haughty Belgians ride,
Beneath whose shades our humble frigats go. Dryden.

2. Any small vessel on the water.

Behold the water work and play
About her little frigat, therein making way. Spenser, F. Q.

FRIGEF'CTION. n. s. [frigus and facio, Lat.] The act of making cold.

To FRIGHT. v. a. [frhtan, Sax.] To terrify; to disturb with fear; to shock with fear; to daunt; to dismay. This was in the old authors more frequently written affright, as it is always found in the Scripture.

The herds
Were strongly clapp'rous in the frighted fields. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Such a numerous host
Fled not in silence through the frighted deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
Confusion worse confounded. Milton, P. L.

Cherubick watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton, P. L.
Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit,
With innocence guarded,
With virtue rewarded.

I make of my sufferings a merit. Dryden, Albion and Alb.
The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty. Locke.

Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He frights the nations. Thomson, Autumn.

FRIGHT. n. s. [from the verb.] A sudden terrour.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by night,
And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.

To FRIGH'TEN. v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.
The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frigh'ten the valleys and infest the wood. Prior.

FRIGH'TFUL. adj. [from fright.]

1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terrour.
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy,
Thy schooldays frightful, desp'rate, wild, and furious. Shakspeare.

Without aid you durst not undertake
This frightful passage o'er the Stygian lake. Dryden, Æn.

2. A cant word among women for any thing unpleasant.

FRIGH'TFULLY. adv. [from frightful.]

1. Dreadfully; horribly.
This will make a prodigious mass of water, and look frightfully to the imagination; 'tis huge and great. Burnet.

2. Disagreeably; not beautifully. A woman's word.
Then to her glass; and Betty, pray,
Don't I look frightfully to-day? Swift.

FRIGH'TFULNESS. † n. s. [from frightful.] The power of impressing terrour.

All this serveth chiefly to cover the frightfulness of mortality. Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull, p. 5.

FRIGID. † adj. [frigidus, Lat.]

1. Cold; wanting warmth. In this sense it is seldom used but in science.

In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zones the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

2. Wanting warmth of affection.

3. Impotent; without warmth of body.

4. Dull; without fire of fancy.

If one considers with how great affectation they utter their frigid conceits, commiseration immediately changes itself into contempt. Tatler, No. 184.

If justice Phillip's costive head

Some frigid rhymes disbursts,

They shall like Persian tales be read,

And glad both babes and nurses.

Swift.

FRIGIDITY. n. s. [frigiditas, Lat.]

1. Coldness; want of warmth.

2. Dulness; want of intellectual fire.

Driving at these as at the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon phrenzy than frigidity. Pope.

3. Want of corporeal warmth.

The boiling blood of youth hinders that serenity which is necessary to severe intensesness; and the frigidity of decrepitude is as much its enemy, by reason of its dulling moisture. Glanville, Sceptis.

4. Coldness of affection.

FRIGIDLY. † adv. [from frigid.] Coldly; dully; without affection.

The life of Erasmus, which deserves the finest pen, has been wretchedly and frigidly written by Knight; although, indeed, the materials he has collected are curious and useful.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

FRIGIDNESS. n. s. [from frigid.] Coldness; dulness; want of affection.

FRIGORIFICK. † adj. [frigorificus, frigus, and facio, Lat.] Causing cold. A word used in science, Dr. Johnson says; and, it may be added, well applied by himself to general use.

Frigorifick atoms or particles mean those nitrous salts which float in the air in cold weather, and occasion freezing. Quincy.

The hand of death is upon me; a frigorifick torpor encroaches upon my veins. Johnson, Rambler, No. 120.

The fatal influence of frigorifick wisdom. Johnson, Rambler, No. 139.

To FRILL. v. n. [friller, French.] To quake or shiver with cold. Used of a hawk: as, the hawk frills. Dict.

FRILL. † n. s. A border on the bosom of a shirt, plaited or furled; any thing collected into gathers. See To FURL.

FRIM. † adj. [Saxon, freom, strong.] Flourishing; luxuriant. It is used in the north of England for thriving; as, a frim tree.

My plenteous bosom strew'd

With all abundant sweets; my frim and lusty flank

Her bravery then displays, with meadows hugely rank.

Drayton, Polyb. 8. 13.

FRINGE. † n. s. [friggio, Italian; frange, French.]

1. Ornamental appendage added to dress or furniture. It is in conversation used of loose and separate threads.

Those offices and dignities were but the fringes or fringes of his greatness. Watson.

The golden fringe ev'n set the ground on flame,

And drew a precious trail. Dryden, Flower and Leaf.

The shadows of all bodies, in this light, were bordered with three parallel fringes, or bands of coloured light, whereof that which was contiguous to the shadow was broadest and most luminous; and that which was remotest from it was narrowest, and so faint as not easily to be visible.

F R I

Newton, Opt.

2. The edge; margin; extremity.

The fringe or combes of hell.

The sun — gilds the fringes of a cloud.

Mountagu, App. to Cas. p. 237.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § iii. ch. 1.

To FRINGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fringes; to decorate with ornamental appendages.

Either side of the bank, fringed with most beautiful trees, resisted the sun's darts.

Sidney.

Of silver wings he took a shining pair,

Fringed with gold.

Fairfax.

Here, by the sacred bramble ting'd,

My petticoat is doubly fring'd.

Swift.

FRINGEMAKER. * n. s. [fringe and maker.] A manufacturer of fringe.

A player, hired for the purpose by the corporation of fringemakers, acted his part in a new comedy, all covered with silver fringe.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 2.

FRINGY. * adj. [from fringe.] Adorned with fringes.

Lord of my time, my devious path I bend

Through fringy woodland, or smooth-shaven lawn.

Shenstone, Eleg. 21.

FRIPPER. * n. s. [Fr. frippier. A better word than frippere, which Dr. Johnson gives us solely on his own authority. Both, however, are in Sherwood's old dictionary, where they are termed fripier and fripere.] A dealer in old things; a broker.

This little island of England, notwithstanding the continual waste and havoc that hath been made, since the days of king Henry the eighth, by gloves, bookbinders, frippers, and others; or the continual purloining and conveying of old books beyond the seas; hath at this day remaining, if they were all brought together, more Latin manuscripts than any country else that is of a far greater extent.

James, on the Corrupt. of Script. Councils, &c. (1688), p. 530.

FRIPPERER. * n. s. [from frippier, French.] One who deals in old things vamped up.

Sherwood.

FRIPPERY. † n. s. [fripserie, French; fripperia, Ital.]

1. The place where old clothes are sold.

We know what belongs to a fripserie.

Shakspeare.

Lurana is a fripserie of bankrupts, who fly thither from Druina to play their after-gane.

Howell, Voc. For.

2. Old clothes; cast dresses; tattered rags.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,

Whose works are e'en the fripserie of wit;

From brocade is become so bold a thief,

As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it.

B. Jons. m.

The fighting-place now seamen's rags supply,

And all the tackling is a fripserie.

Donne, Poems, p. 144.

Ragfair is a place near the Tower of London, where old clothes and fripserie are sold.

Pope.

3. Trumpery; trifles.

You will gather more advantage by listening to them, than from all the nonsense and fripserie of your own sex.

Swift.

They tell me it [the Philosophick Dictionary] is fripserie, and blasphemy, and wit.

Gray, Lett. to his Mother.

FRIPPERY. * adj. Trifling; contemptible.

My master's bo-peep with me,

With his sly popping in and out again,

Argued a cause, a fripserie cause. Beaum. and Fl. The Chancery.

That city, though the capital of a dutchy, made so fripserie an appearance, that instead of spending some days there, as had been intended, we only dined, and went on to Parma.

Gray, Lett. to his Mother.

FRISEUR. * n. s. [French.] A hair-dresser. See

To FRIZZ.

Who now can peasant-styles endure?

Go, boy, and bid the best friseur

At six precise be wi' me:

My hair in wires exact and nice, &c.

Poems by Gent. of Oxford, 1757, p. 19.

F R I

To curl the grove, &c. was surely to derogate from the dignity of the high office and character of his genius, who is degraded to a friseur.

Warton, Notes on Milton.

To FRISK. † v. n. [frizzare, Italian. Dr. Johnson.—

I should rather pronounce the old Fr. frisque, lively, brisk, jolly, as the parent of our word.

V. Cotgrave and Roquesfort in V. FRISQUE.]

1. To leap; to skip.

Put water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it somewhat hard; and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk and sprinkle up in a fine dew.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The fish fell a frisking in the net.

L'Estrange.

Whether every one hath experimented this troublesome intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus importune the understanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not.

Locks.

2. To dance in frolick or gaiety.

We are as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk i' the sun,

And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd,

Was innocence for innocence; we knew not

The doctrine of ill-doing.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

About them frisking play'd

All beasts of th' earth.

Milton, P. L.

A wanton heifer frisk'd up and down in a meadow, at ease and pleasure.

L'Estrange.

Watch the quick motions of the frisking tail,

Then serve their fury with the rushing male.

Dryden, Virg.

So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,

And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god.

Dryden.

Off to the mountains airy tops advanc'd,

The frisking satyrs on the summits danc'd.

Addison.

Those merry blades,

That frisk it under Pindus' shades.

Prior.

Peg faints at the sound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's isle,

To catch a monkey by a wile,

The mimic animal amuse;

They place before him gloves and shoes;

Which when the brute puts awkward on,

All his agility is gone:

In vain to frisk or climb he tries;

The huntsmen seize the grinning prize.

Swift.

FRISK. * adj. [French, frisque.] Lively; jolly;

blithe.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Fain would she seem all frize and frolick still.

Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 6.

B. Jonson, Masques.

FRISKER. n. s. [from frisk.] A wanton; one not constant or settled.

Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;

Now I will wear I cannot tell what:

All new fashions be pleasant to me;

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;

What should I do but set cock on the hoop?

Camden.

FRISKET. * n. s. A part of a printing-press; a frame of iron, very thin, covered with parchment or paper, cut in the necessary places, that the sheet, which is between the great tympan and frisket, may receive the ink, and that nothing may hurt the margins.

The frisket, thy preventing grace,

Keeps us from many a sullied face.

Poem at the end of Watson's Hist. of Printing.

FRISKFUL. * adj. [frisk and full.] Full of gaiety.

F R I

His sportive lambs,
This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee

Inserted 'tween her mind and eye, become the pranks
And friskings of her madness.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.
As if religion were nothing else but a dancing up and down upon the same piece of ground, and making several motions and friskings on it. Cudworth, Sermon, p. 58.
FRISKY. adj. [frisque, French; from frisk.] Gay;
airy. A low word.

To FRISSELE.* See To FRIZZLE.

FRIT. n. s. [among chymists.] Ashes or salt baked or fried together with sand. Dict.

FRITH. n. s. [fretum, Latin.]

1. A strait of the sea where the water being confined is rough.

What desperate madman then would venture o'er
The frith, or haul his cables from the shore? Dryden, Virg.
Batavian fleets

Defraud us of the glittering finny swarms
That heave our friths, and crowd upon our shores. Thomson.

2. A kind of net. I know not whether this sense be now retained.

The Wear is a frith, reaching through the Ose, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopt from issuing out again. Carew.

FRITH.* n. s. [Welsh, ffrith, ffridd, a plantation, a small field taken out of a commop, a tract enclosed from the mountains, and sometimes a woodland; Gael frith, a wild mountainous place, a forest.]

1. A woody place; a forest.

Overholt and heath, as thorough frith and fell.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 11.

Miller.

FRITINANCY. n. s. [from fritinnio, Latin.] The scream of an insect, as the cricket or cicada.

The note or fritinancy thereof is far more shrill than that of the locust, and its life short. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FRITTER. n. s. [friture, French.]

1. A small piece cut to be fried.

Maids, fritters and pancakes ynow see ye make;

Let Slut have one pancake for company sake. Tusser.

2. A fragment; a small piece.

Sense and putter! have I lived to stand in the taunt of one that makes fritters of English.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, as glass or sugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but break-eth all about into shivers and fritters; the motion, upon the pressure, searching all ways, and breaking where it findeth the body weakest. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

F R I

The ancient errand knights
Won all their ladies hearts in fights;
And cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into amorous twitters.

Hudibras.
Ainsworth.

3. A cheesecake; a wig.

To FRITTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut meat into small pieces to be fried.

2. To break into small particles or fragments.

Joy to great chaos! let division reign!
My racks and tortures soon shall drive them hence,
Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense.

Pope, Dunciad.

How prologues into prefaces decay,

And these to notes are fritter'd quite away. Pope, Dunciad.

FRIVO'LITY.* n. s. [Fr. frivoleté.] Triflingness. Both the French and English words are modern.

The admiral was no stranger to the frivolity, as well as falsehood, of what he urged in his defence. Robertson.

FRIVOLOUS. adj. [frivolus, Latin; frivole, Fr.]
Slight; trifling; of no moment.

It is frivolous to say we ought not to use bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and presume all such bad as it pleaseth themselves to dislike. Hooker.

These seem very frivolous and fruitless; for, by the breach of them, little damage can come to the commonwealth.

Spenser.

She tam'd the brindled lioness,

And spotted mountain park; but set at nought

The frivolous bolt of Cupid. Milton, Comus.

Those things which now seem frivolous and slight,

Will be of serious consequence to you,

When they have made you once ridiculous. Roscommon.

All the impeachments in Greece and Rome agreed in a notion of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever person they impeached, however frivolous the articles, or however weak the proofs. Swift.

I will not defend any mistake, and do not think myself obliged to answer every frivolous objection. Arbuthnot.

FRIVOLOUSLY.† adv. [from frivolous.] Triflingly;
without weight.

You employ your important moments, methinks, too frivolously, when you consider so often little circumstances of dress and behaviour. Guardian, No. 128.

FRIVOLOUSNESS.† n. s. [from frivolous.] Want of importance; triflingness.

The idleness, frivolousness, or profaneness of the spirits of men. More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

The impertinency and frivolousness of the end and occasion.

Spencer on Prodig. p. 231.

Who is it that here appeals to the frivolousness and irrationality of our dreams to shew, that the soul owes the perfection of rational thinking to the body?

A. Baxter on the Soul, ii. 187.

To FRIZZ.* v. a. [friser, or frizer, Fr.] To curl;
to crisp. This is the word of modern friseurs.
But frizzle is old.

The servants in the family were employed to frizz out a tyeperiwig. Smollett.

To FRIZZLE.† v. a. [friser, Fr.] To curl in short curls like nap of frieze.

Who can excuse this broidered and frizzled hair?

Harmer, Transl. of Bana's Sermon. (1587,) p. 172.

Therefore the maids, and Roman matrons all,
A shadowing veil before their face did wear,
Their heavenly hew did throw no man to thrall;
They were content with plain and decent gear,
They huff it not with painted frizzled hair.

Mir. for Mag. p. 255.

The humble shrub

And bush, with frizzled hair implicit.

They frizzled and curl'd their hair with hot irons.

Milton, P. L.

Hobbes on Frivolousness.

I daff'd my shoe, and swear

Therein I spy'd this yellow frizzled hair.

Gay, Pastoral.

F R O

FRI'ZZLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A curl; a lock of hair crisped.

To rumple her laces, her friesles, and her bobbins.

Patrick on Canticles, Annot. ch. vii. ver. 5.

FRI'ZZLER. n. s. [from fizzle.] One that makes short curls.

FRO. adv. [of fro, Saxon.]

1. Backward; regressively. It is only used in opposition to the word to; to and fro, backward and forward, to and from.

The Carthaginians having spoiled all Spain, rooted out all that were affected to the Romans; and the Romans, having recovered that country, did cut off all that favoured the Carthaginians: so betwixt them both, to and fro, there was scarce a native Spaniard left.

Spenser.

As when a heap of gather'd thorns is cast,
Now to, now fro, before th' autumnal blast,
Together clung, it rolls around the field.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. It is a contraction of from: not now used.

They turn round like grindlestones,
Which they dig out fro' the delves,
For their bairns' bread, wives and selves.

B. Jonson.

FROCK. n. s. [fior, Fr.]

1. A dress; a coat.

That monster, custom, is angel yet in this,
That to the use of actions fair and good,
He likewise gives a frock or livery,
That aptly is put on.

prose-examples which I add.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We fairies, that do run

By the triple Hecate's team,

From the presence of the sun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frollick.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Whether, as some sages sing,

The frollick wind that breathes the Spring,

Zephyr with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a Maying;

There on beds of violets blue,

And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,

Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,

So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire.

Milton, L' Allegro.

Who ripe, and frollick of his full-grown age,

Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields,

At last betakes him to this ominous wood.

Milton, Comus.

The gay, the frollick, and the loud.

Waller.

Then to be free, and frollick, and flourishing in the highest degree.

Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655.) p. 241.

Swift.

While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er
Her frollicks, and pursues her tail no more.

Swift.

To Fro'lick. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks; to play tricks of levity and gaiety.

Manly spirit and genius plays not tricks with words, nor frollicks with the caprices of a frothy imagination.

Glanville.

Then to her new love let her go,

And deck her in golden array;

Be fust at every fine show,

And frollick it all the long day.

Rowe.

FRO'lickly. † adv. [from frollick.] Gaily; wildly.

Coming to see you, I was set upon,

I and my men, as we were singing frollickly,

Not dreaming of an ambush of base rogues.

Beaumont and Fl. Lover's Progress.

FRO'licksome. † adj. [from frollick.] Full of wild gaiety.

His highness bespoke him a new suit and cloak,

Which he gave for the sake of this frollicksome joke.

Old Ballad of the frolicksome Duke, &c. Percy, i. ii. 16.

FRO'licksomeness. n. s. [from frollicksome.] Wildness of gaiety; pranks.

FRO'licksomenely. adv. [from frollicksome.] With wild gaiety.

FROM. † prep. [ffram, Saxon and Scottish; fram, Gothick. "From means merely beginning, and nothing else. It is simply the Anglo-Saxon and Gothick noun frum, beginning, origin, source, fountain, author." H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. i. 342.]

any cause by that which is contrary to it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
12. Out of. Noting the ground or cause of any thing.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
They who believe that the praises which arise from valour are superiour to those which proceed from any other virtues, have not considered. Dryden, Æn. Ded.

From far the town and lofty tow'rs survey. Dryden, Æn.
27. FROM high.
Then heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high.
Dryden.
28. FROM thence. Here from is superfluous.
In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one publick interest; and from hence have always arisen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations. Clarendon.
29. FROM whence. From is here superfluous.
While future realms his wandering thoughts delight,
His daily vision, and his dream by night,
Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly. Pope, Statius.
30. FROM where.
From where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendent woods,
Us to these shores our filial duty draws. Pope, Odyssey.
31. FROM without.
When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant it with women as well as with men, that it may spread into generations, and not be piec'd from without. Bacon.

Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour,
And canisters of consecrated flour. } Pope, Odys.

38. FROM off.

The sea being constrained to withdraw from off certain tracts of lands, which lay till then at the bottom of it. Woodward.

Knights, unhors'd may rise from off the plain,
And fight on foot their honour to regain. Dryden.

39. FROM out.

The king with angry threatenings from out a window, where he was not ashamed the world should behold him a beholder, commanded his guard and the rest of his soldiers to hasten their death. Sidney.

And join thy voice unto the angel-quire,
From out his secret altar touch'd with hallow'd fire. Milton, Ode Nativ.

Now shake from out thy fruitful breast the seeds
Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds. Dryden, Æn.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North and hyperborean seas,
Terror is thine; and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong. Dryden.

40. FROM out of.

Whatever such principle there is, it was at the first found out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth. Hooker.

41. FROM under.

He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought, extinguisht quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame. Milton, S. A.

42. FROM within.

From within
The broken bowels, and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ear alarm. Dryden, Georg.

FRO'WARD. prep. [fram and pearb, Saxon.] Away from; the contrary to the word towards. Not now in use.

As cheerfully going towards as Pyrocles went froward from- ward his death. Sidney.

leaves. Dict.

FRONT.† n. s. [from, Latin; front, French.]

1. The face.

His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.
They stand not front to front, but each doth view
The other's tail, pursu'd, as they pursue. Creech, Manilius.
It carried its author in its front. South, Serm. ix. 108.

The patriot virtues that distend thy thought,
Spread on thy front, and in thy bosom glow. Thomson.

2. The face, in a sense of censure or dislike: as, a hardened front; a fierce front. This is the usual sense.

Whence, and what art thou, execrable shape,
That dars't, though grim and terrible, advance
Thy miscreated front athwart my way! Milton, P. L.

3. The face as opposed to an enemy.

His foul esteem
Sticks no dishonour on our front. Milton, P. L.

His forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

4. The part or place opposed to the face.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land: our men had shot that thundered upon them from the rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank. Bacon.

5. The van of an army.

'Twixt host and host but narrow space was left,
A dreadful interval: and front to front
Presented stood, in terrible array. Milton, P. L.

6. The forepart of any thing, as of a building.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front; and uniform without, though severally partitioned within, and are on both sides of a great and stately tower, in the midst of the front. Bacon, Ess.

Palladius adviseth the front of his edifice should so respect the south, that in its first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The prince approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch, and on the front above
He fix'd the fatal bough. Dryden, Æn.

One sees the front of a palace covered with painted pillars of different orders. Addison on Italy.

7. The most conspicuous part or particular.

The very head and front of my offending
Hath this extent, no more. Shakespeare, Othello.

To FRONT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oppose directly, or face to face; to encounter.

You four shall front them in the narrow lane; we will walk lower: if they escape from your encounter, then they light on us. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with easy groans?
Shakespeare, Coriol.

Some are, either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation. Bacon, Essays.

I shall front thee, like some staring ghost,
With all my wrongs about me. Dryden, Don Sebast.

2. To stand opposed or overagainst any place or thing.

The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when this statue is erected, and a townhouse built at one end to front the church that stands at the other. Addison on Italy.

To FRONT. v. n. To stand foremost.

I front but in that file,
Where others tell steps with me. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FRONTAL.† n. s. [frontale, Latin; frontal, French.]1. Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed amongst the ancients of coolers and hypnoticks. Quincy.

We may apply intercipients upon the temples of mastick:
frontales may also be applied. Wiseman, Surgery.

The torpedo, alive, stupefies at a distance; but after death, produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontales in phrenesies.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. [In architecture] A little pediment over a small door or window.

3. A bandage worn on the forehead; a frontlet. V. Cotgrave in FRONTAL.

FRO'NTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.] In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cuspatel, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point. Quincy.

FRO'NTBOX. n. s. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!
That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,
Behold the first in virtue, as in face.

Pope.

FRONTIER.† n. s. [frontiere, French; Lat. frons and terra.]

1. The marches; the limit; the utmost verge of any territory; the border: properly that which terminates not at the sea, but fronts another country.

Draw all the inhabitants of those borders away, or plant garrisons upon all those frontiers about him.

Spenser, on Ireland.

I upon my frontiers here keep residence,
That little which is left so to defend.

Milton, P. L.

2. Formerly the forts built along the bounds of any territory.

In the frontiers made by the late emperor Charles the fifth, divers of their walles having given way.

Ives, Pract. of Fortification, (1589,) p. 21.

He'll tell —

Of palisadoes, parapets, frontiers.

Fitzgeoffrey, Notes from Blackfryers, (1617.)

FRONTIER.† adj. Bordering; conterminous.

And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds. Milton, P. L.

A place there lies on Gallia's utmost bounds,

Where rising seas insult the frontier grounds. Addison.

Spenser.

FRONTINIA'CK Wine.* n. s. [from a town of Languedoc in France, so called.] A rich wine.

He [K. James I.] drank very often, which was rather out of a custom than any delight; and his drinks were of that kind for strength, as frontinack-canary, high canary wine, trent wine, and Scottish ale.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, (1650,) p. 179.

Thou wouldst eat nothing but kids and fawns, carps and mullets, snipes and quails; and drink nothing but frontinack.

Raue, London's Precedent for Mercy, (1657.)

FRONTISPIECE. n. s. [frontispicium, id quod in fronte conspicitur, Lat. frontispice, French.] That part of any building or other body that directly meets the eye.

With frontispiece of diamond and gold
Embellish'd, thick with sparkling orient gems
The portal stone.

Milton, P. L.

Who is it has informed us that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontispiece?

Locke.

The frontispiece of the townhouse has pillars of a beautiful black marble, streaked with white.

Addison on Italy.

FRO'NTLESS.† adj. [from front.] Not blushing; wanting shame; void of diffidence.

F R O

To triumph in a lie, and a lie themselves have forged, is frontless. Folly often goes beyond her bounds; but impudence knows none.

B. Jonson, Discories.

Thee, frontless man, we follow'd from afar,
Thy instruments of death and tools of war.

Dryden, Iliad.

For vice, though frontless and of harden'd face,
Is daunted at the sight of awful grace.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

Strike a blush through frontless flattery.

Pope.

FRO'NTLET. n. s. [from frons, Latin; fronteau, French.] A bandage worn upon the forehead.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. Deut. vi. 8.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the influx.

Wiseman, Surgery.

FRONTROOM. n. s. [front and room.] An apartment in the forepart of the house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the backrooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow.

Moxon.

FRO'RPISH.* adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Peevish; froward.

His enemies — had still the same power, and the same malice, and a froppish kind of insolence, that delighted to deprive him of any thing that pleased him, and manifestly pleased itself in vexing him.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 968.

FRORE.† part. adj. [bevroren, Dutch; frozen.]

Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton, Dr. Johnson says. He had overlooked Philips; and his contemporary, T. Warton, has somewhere used it.

The parching air

Burns frore, and cold performs th' effect of fire.

Milton, P. L.

When the aged year

Inclines, and Boreas' spirit blusters frore,

Beware the inclement heavens.

Philips, Cyder, B. 2.

FRO'NE. part. adj. [bevroren, frozen, Dutch.]

Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.

My heartblood is well nigh fro'ne I feel,

And my galage grown fast to my heel.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FRO'RY.* adj. [from frore.]

1. Frozen.

Her up betwixt his rugged hands he tear'd,

And with his fro'ry lips full softly kist.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 35.

2. Covered with a froth resembling hoar frost.

She used with tender hand

The foaming steed with fro'ry bit to steer.

Fairfax, Tass. ii. 40.

FROST.† n. s. [Port, Saxon; and Dr. Johnson might have added that this word is in most of the northern languages; as frost, Germ. Dan. Sw. and Icel. vrost, Dutch; probably from the Lat. frigus, and that from the Gr. κρύος, cold, ice, the x being changed into f.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression.

South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

FRO

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope, Winter.
FROSTBITTEN. adj. frost and bitten. Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves are too much frostbitten. Montimer.
FROSTED. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

The rich brocaded silk unfold
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.

FROSTILY. adv. [from frosty.]
a. With frost; with excessive cold.
a. Without warmth of affection.

Construing, I rather should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. B. Jonson.

FROSTINESS. u. s. [from frosty.] Cold; freezing cold.

FROSTNAIL. n. s. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are straight only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails.

Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

FROSTWORK. n. s. [frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze. Blackmore.

No sooner did the warm aspect of good fortune shine out again, but all these exalted ideas of virtue and honour, raised, like a beautiful kind of frostwork, in the cold season of adversity, dissolved and disappeared.

Warburton on Prodiges, p. 17.

FROSTY. adj. [Sax. frotig.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Titus Andronicus.

The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.
A gnat, half starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. Hoary; grey-haired; resembling frost.

Where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the ear? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

FROTH. n. s. [frac, Danish and Scottish. Dr.

Johnson. — The Su. fra is also spume. These northern words correspond with the Gr. ἀφρός, foam, spray.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

The hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enrap the nimble thighs
Of his frothy foamy steed. Spenser, F. Q.

When wind expireth from under the sea, as it causeth some resembling of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton, P. R.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Blainville.

The scatter'd ocean flies
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud and mists. Dryden.

They were the froth my raging belly sent
When it boil'd up; I know not that I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

FRO

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness. Newton.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the lower froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage through a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Beaumont, Sermon.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.

Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tusser.

TO FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden, Don Sebast.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flatter and froth high. Grew.

TO FROTH.* v. a. To make to froth; as to froth
beer, i. e. to make it rise on the top.

Fill me a thousand pots, and froth 'em, froth 'em.
Beaumont and Fl. The Pilgrim.

FROTHILY. adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume. Sherwood.

2. In an empty, trifling manner.

FROTHINESS.* n. s. [from frothy.] Emptiness; triflingness.

The vanity of his conversation, and the profaneness and frothiness of his discourse. South, Sermon, viii. 264.

It would, doubtless, be as much more delightful as beneficial, if, when we meet, we were accustomed, instead of censures and reflections, news and impertinence, or frothiness and lightness, to discourse of some worthy and noble subject, becoming the genius and hope of a christian.

Lucas, Sermon on Prov. xlii. 20.

FROTHY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of different natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wasting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments?
What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue?

L'Estrange.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by falconers for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill. Skinner.

TO FROUNCE. v. a. [Fr. froncer, or fronser, "to plait," "to fold," "to wrinkle." Cotgrave, French,
Tent.] To frizzle or curl the hair about the face.

This word was at first probably used in contempt.
Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Spenser, F. Q.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly basket, or an overstaring frounced head. Archam, Schoolmaster.

F R O

Then, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil suited Morn appear;
Not trick'd and frowne'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton, Il Pens.

FROUNCE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkle, a plait; and thence, contemptuously, a fringe, or curl, or some ornament of dress. Bullokar notices the first meaning. See also FROUNCELESS.

What! shall I leave my state to pins and poking-sticks,
To farthingales and frounces? Beaum. and Fl. Mors. Thomas.

FROUNCELESS.* adj. [frounce and less.] Without wrinkle. Obsolete.

Her forehead frounceless all plain. Chaucer, Rom. R. 860.

FRO'UZY. adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fetid; musty.

Petticoats in frouzy heaps. Swift.

2. Dim; cloudy.

When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-colour'd red
Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FROW.* n. s. [fraw, German; frau, old French; vrowe, Dutch; all signifying a woman; fru, Su. Goth. a woman of rank; Lat. vira, a woman, a manly woman.] A woman; generally applied to Dutch or German women. In the north of England, a frow, according to Grose, is an idle, dirty woman.

They are now
Buxom as Bacchus' frowe, revelling, dancing. Beaum. and Fl. Wit at sev. Weapons.

A Dutch frowe's colour bath no grace,
Seen in a Roman lady's face. Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, p. 269.

Your alewives, like the German frowe, are all cheeks to the belly. Junius, Sin Stigmatized, p. 38.

FROW.* adj. Brittle. Used in Berkshire. It is frough, in the north. Ray, and Grose.

That [timber] which grows in gravel is subject to be frow (as they term it) and brittle. Evelyn, i. iii. § 5.

FROWARD.† adj. [frampearb, Saxon, i. e. from ward, in opposition to to ward. Thus the word was originally used for averse. "So froward is it from sadness," Chaucer, Rom. R. 4940, i. e. so far from it.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse; the contrary to toward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

'She's not froward, but modest as the dove:
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shakespeare.

Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Prov. ii. 15.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon, Essays.

'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty. J. Estrange.

Moluptuous occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FROWARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Peevishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Is. lvii. 17.

FROWARDNESS. n. s. [from froward.] Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother? how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands? South.

We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth and frowardness of age. Addison, Cato.

F R O

FRO'WER. n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Pamph.

To FROWN.† v. n. [frogner, old Fr. to wrinkle. Skinner. To this etymology Dr. Johnson accedes. But I do not find this French verb in the old glossaries. Moreover, frown has been better traced to the Goth. ufryn, grim or stern, by Serenius; which corresponds with the Greek ἀπὸς, bearing the sense of a severe or haughty look.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that she frowns; I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.

They choose their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare, Coriol.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.

—Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below. Pope.

To FROWN.* v. a. To drive back with a look of haughtiness or displeasure.

Ventidius fix'd his eyes upon my passage
Severely, as he meant to frown me back. Dryden, All for Love.

FROWN. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

FRO'WNGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?
A countenance more in sorrow than in anger. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

FRO'WY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouzy.

But if they with thy gotes should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frouzy fede,
Or with the weeds be gluttet. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FRO'ZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arm;
Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden, En.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth;
T' invade the frozen waggon of the North. Dryden, Ovid.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire. Dryden, Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair;
but his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto. Sidney.

Be not over frown, coy;
One beam of love will soon destroy
And melt that ice to floods of joy. Carew.

3. Void of heat of appetite.

Even here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

To FRU'BISH.* v. a. To furbish. Barret. This corruption also sometimes occurs in our old authors. See To FURBISH.

FRU'CTED.* adj. [Lat. fructus.] An heraldick term, given to all trees bearing fruit.

FRU'CTIFEROUS. adj. [fructifer, Lat.] Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

FRUCTIFICATION. n. s. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To FRU'CTIFY.† v. a. [fructifier, Fr.] To make fruitful; to fertilise.

Neither doth the earth bring furthe buddes, or leaves, or other frute, unless it receive moysture of the raine; nor the raine doeth fructify without earth.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1534,) sign. Ee. i. b. The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Howell, Voc. Pur.

Where e'er she looks, behold some sudden birth Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Granville.

To FRU'CTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown.

FRUCTUATION.* n. s. [from fructuous.] Product; fruit.

Knowing—with what superabundant population the first fructuation of an advancing society is loaded.

Pownall on Antiq. (1782,) p. 60.

FRU'CTUOUS.† adj. [fructueux, Fr. from fructify.]

This is one of our oldest words. Chaucer uses it. "Be fructuous," Parson's Prol.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn

Of interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Philips.

FRU'CTURE.* n. s. [Fr. fracture.] The fracture, use, fruition, possession, or enjoyment of. Cotgrave.

FRU'GAL. adj. [frugalis, Lat. frugal, Fr.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,
How Nature wise and frugal could commit
Such disproportions, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater so manifold to this one use.

Milton, P. L.

And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and maslin bread.

Harte.

If through mists he shoots his sullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a drizzling day.

Dryden, Virg.

FRUGALITY. n. s. [frugalité, Fr. frugalitas, Lat.]

Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink. Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too,
Those diff'ring virtues, meet in you.

Waller.

F R U

In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden, Fab. Dedic.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

FRU'GALLY.† adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

He would have us live soberly, that is to say, honestly, shamefacedly, chastely, temperately, and frugally.

Woolton, Christ. Manual, (1576,) sign. L. iii. b.

Mean time young Parimond his marriage press'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own. Dryden.

FRU'GGIN.* n. s. [Fr. fourgon.] An ovenfork, termed in Lincolnshire a fruggin. Cotgrave. The pole, with which the ashes in the oven are stirred. North. Grose.

FRUGI'FEROUS.† adj. [frugifer, Lat.] Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

Every frugiferous herb which is upon the face of the earth. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 8.

FRUIT.† n. s. [fructus, Lat. fruit, old Fr. fruit, modern; frwyth, Welsh.]

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.
See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own. Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth. Ephes. v. 9.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body. Deut. xxviii. 4.
Shall the women eat their fruit, and the children of a span long. Lament. ii. 20.

Can'st thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute,
When their swol'n bellies shall enlarge the fruit. Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories?
Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity? Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale when she remembered the fruits of denying. Sidney.
They shall eat of the fruit of their own way. Prov.

7. The desert after the meat.

Give first admittance to the ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

To FRUIT.* v. n. To produce fruit.

As it is three years before they fruit, I might as well at my age plant oaks, and hope to have the advantage of their timber. Ld. Chesterfield.

FRU'ITAGE. n. s. [fruitage, Fr.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines
Yield nectar.

Milton, P. L.

Greedily they pluck'd
The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that bituminous lake where Sodom smok'd.

Milton, P. L.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work? More.

FRU

FRUITBEARER. n. s. [fruit and bearer.] That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FRUITBEARING. adj. [fruit and bear.] Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mortimer.

FRUITERER. n. s. [fruitier, Fr.] One who trades in fruit,

I did fight with one Samson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's Inn. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain. Gay.

FRUITERY. n. s. [fruiterie, Fr.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Of, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ill, an oriental blast
Disastrous flies. Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUITFUL. adj. [fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.

If she continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney.

The Earth, "

Though in comparison of Heav'n, so small,
Nor glist'ring may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth. Milton, P. L.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,

That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next. Shakespeare.

3. Prolifick; childbearing, not barren.

Hear, Nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful:
Into her womb convey sterility. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Male he created thee, but thy consort
Female for race; then bless'd mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the Earth;
Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold. Milton, P. L.
I have copied Nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful. Gay, Pref. to the What d'ye Call it.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays. Addison.

FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolific.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal night,
And empty space did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. Shakespeare.
Fruitfully abound. Dryden.

FRUITFULNESS. n. s. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood. Raleigh, Hist.

2. The quality of being prolific, or bearing many children.

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden, Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FRU

FRUITGROVES. n. s. [fruit and groves.] Shades, or close plantations of fruit trees.

The faithful slave,

Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,
To tend the fruitgroves? Pope, Odys.

FRUITION. n. s. [old Fr. fruition, from fruer, Lat.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation. Hooker.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys, Paraph. of Ps.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorn'd, could find success;
Till by fruition, novelty destroy'd,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd. Granville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists: if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed. Rogers, Serm.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing; having the power of enjoyment. A word not legitimate.

To whet our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be, when there. Boyle.

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless. Raleigh, Hist.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are;
But let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare. Spenser, F. Q.
Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither;
Fruitless to me, though fruit be here t' excess. Milton, P. L.
The other is for entirely waving all searches into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless. Waterland.

3. Having no offspring.

Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiosity fruitlessly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth. Brown, Vulg. Err.
Walking they talk'd, and fruitlessly divin'd
What friend the priestess by those words design'd. Dryden.

FRUITLESSNESS.* n. s. [from fruitless.] Barrenness; unfruitfulness; vanity.

Christ whips our fruitlessness in the innocent fig-tree; like as the manner was among the Persians, when their great men had offended, to take their garments and beat them. Hales, Rom. p. 26.

Certainly the fruitlessness and inexcusableness of their vice [swearing] considered, almost no sinners have more to answer for. Boyle against Cust. Swearing, p. 120.

FRUIT-TIME. n. s. [fruit and time.] The Autumn; the time for gathering fruit.

FRUIT-TREE. n. s. [fruit and tree.] A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.

FRU

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruittree tops. Shakespeare.
They possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruittrees in abundance. Neh. ix. 25.
All with a border of rich fruittrees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound. Waller.

FRUMENTA'CIOUS. adj. [from frumentum, Latin.]
Made of grain. Dict.

FRUMENTA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. frumentatio.] A general dole of corn. Cockeram.

FRUMENTY.† n. s. [frumentée, Fr. Cotgrave; from frumentum, corn, Latin.] Food made of wheat boiled in milk.

Frumenty makes the principal entertainment of all our country wakes. Our country people call it firmity. It is an agreeable composition of boiled wheat, milk, spice, and sugar.

Dr. Gower, Mat. for Hist. of Cheshire, p. 10.

To FRUMP.† v. a. [this is an old word, occurring
both in Sherwood's and Cotgrave's dictionaries, and rendered by the French moquer, i. e. "to mock, flout, frump, scoff, deride; to gull; to frustrate; to disappoint;" so that one is led almost to believe it a corruption of the Fr. tromper, to deceive, to delude. Dr. Johnson barely notices the word, without etymology, or example, from Skinner and Ainsworth; but Skinner, as well as Minsheu, offers as the etymology the Teut. krum, crooked; or the verb krumpelen, i. e. krimpusen, to turn up the nose in contempt.] To mock; to insult.

I am abus'd and frump'd, sir.

Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

Was ever gentlewoman

So frump'd off with a fool? Beaum. and Fl. The Chances.

You must learn to mock too, frump your own father on occasion. Ruggles, Comedy of Ignoramus, (1650.) v. 2.

FRUMP.* n. s. [from the verb.] A joke; a flout;
a trick of mockery.

From hence this orator, this parcel of wit, flies out into a pleasant frump, as he thinks, but indeed an ugly, inhuman, loathsome ribaudrie.

Bp. Hall's Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 164.

You must look to be envied, and endure a few court-frumps for it. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Sweet widow, leave your frumps, and be edified.

Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

FRUMPER.* n. s. [from frump.] A mocker; a scoffer. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To FRUSH.† v. a. [fruisser, French.] To break, bruise, or crush. Hanmer.

I like thy armour well;

I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,

But I'll be master of it. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

They are sore frushed with sickness, or too farre withered with age. Holinshead, Descript. of Ireland, p. 29.

Rinaldo's armour frush'd and hack'd they had.

Fairfax, Tasso.

FRUSH. n. s. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running towards the heel, in the form of a fork. Farrer's Dict.

FRUSTRA'NEOUS. adj. [frustra, Lat.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.

Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so perspicuous, it is a marvel that any man should be zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it. More.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindnesses, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour. South.

FRY

To FRUSTRATE. v. a. [frustrar, Latin; frustrer, French.]

1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.

I survive
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raise out
Rotten opinion. Shakespeare, Ham. IV.

Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milton, P. L.

2. To make null; to nullify.

The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances. Spenser.

Now thou hast avenged
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent. Milton, P. R.

The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed. Atterbury.

FRUSTRATE.† part. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.

He is drown'd,

Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Shakespeare, Tempest.

The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian busied in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprise frustrate. Raleigh, Hist.

All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design. Dryden, Ovid.

2. Null; void.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that,
the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.

3. Disappointed; defeated; balked.

That my lord be not defeated and frustrate of his purpose.

Judith, xi. 11.

It is an axiom of nature that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate. Hooker.

Go to him, Dollabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrate, tell him he mocks us by
The pauses that he makes. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.

FRUSTRATION.† n. s. [Fr. frustration; Lat. frus-tratio.] Disappointment; defeat.

If inculpable frustration were intolerable, Barrow, vol. i. S. 1.
Vain heats and presumptuous conceits, to which no answer will be given but shame and frustration.

More on the Sev. Churches, Pref.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse. South.

FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing. Ainsworth.

FRUSTRATORY.† adj. [Fr. frustratoire, Cotgrave.]
That which makes any procedure void; that which vacates any former process.

Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal. Ayliffe.

FRUSTRUM. n. s. [Latin.] A piece cut off from a regular figure. A term of science.

FRUTICANT.† adj. [fruticans, Lat.] Full of shoots.

These we shall divide into the greater and more ceduous, fruticant and shrubby. Evelyn, Introd. § 3.

FRY.† n. s. [from froe, foam, Danish. Skinner, according to Dr. Johnson, who makes no further etymological remark. The word is probably from the Goth. fraiw, seed. Old French, "le frie des sal-mons," Kelham.]

1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.

FUB

- They come to us but as love draws;
He swallows us, and never chaws:
By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry.
Forthwith the sounds and seas, each creek and bay,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in sculls that oft Bank the mid-sea.
The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry.
So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans, attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way.
2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.
Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villany, are their kern continually supplied and maintained.
Them before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens sounding timbrels sung.
Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky.
The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt.
3. A swarm or heap of any materials.
A flood of mischief flows,
An heap of hurts, a frie of foule decays,
A flock of fears, and thralls a thousand waies.
FRY. n. s. A kind of sieve.
He dresseth the dust from malt, by running it through a fun or fry.
To FRY. v. a. [frigo, Lat. frigo, Welsh; frijck, Ersk.] To dress food in a pan on the fire.
To FRY. v. n.
1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.
2. To suffer the action of fire.
So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
3. To melt with heat.
Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And phoenix like, in that rich nest they die.
4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.
Oil of sweet almonds newly drawn, with sugar, and a little spice, spread upon bread toasted, is an excellent nourisher;
but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it.
Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shore,
That course be steer'd.
FRY. n. s. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.
FRYINGPAN. n. s. [from fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is dressed on the fire.
If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the fryingpan into the fire.
We understand by out of the fryingpan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse.
A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street with the twanking of a brass kettle or a fryingpan.
FRYTH. * See FAITH.
To FUE.† v. a. To put off; to delay by false pretences; to cheat. It is generally written foh. See FOB.
A hundred mark is a long loss for a poor, lone woman to bear! and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been

FUE

- Added off and added off from this day to the day; that it is a shame to be thought on.
Why Doll, why Doll, I say, my letter fudd too,
And no access without I mend my manners?
FUB.† n. s. A plump chubby boy, according to Ainsworth; applied also to a woman, as Mr. Malone observes. Written also fubs.
That same foule deformed fub.
FUCATE. * adj. [fucatus, Lat. from fucus Heb. puah, lead.] Painted; whence, disguised by false show.
In virtue nothing may be fucate or counterfeit.
FU CATED. adj. [fucatus, Latin.]
1. Painted; disguised with paint.
2. Disguised by false show.
FUCUS.† n. s. [Latin.]
1. Paint for the face. Not now in use.
Women chat
Of fucus this and fucus that.
Those who paint for debauchery should have the fucus pulled off, and the coarseness underneath discovered.
2. Disguise; false show.
No fucus, nor vain supplement of art,
Shall falsify the language of my heart.
3. [In botany.] The name of a genus of submarine plants. The Latin plural.
The various authors who have written upon the fuci have very unwarrantably divided the varieties, included in the denomination "vesiculosus," into numerous species.
Obs. on the Brit. Fuci by Dr. Goodenough, &c. Lin. Tr. iii. 19.
FUDDER of Lead. * Among the miners, a load of lead. See FOTHER.
To FUDGLE.† v. a. [of unknown etymology.] To make drunk.
Pao. He thinks there's no man
Can give him drink enough.
Host. That's none enough, I'll fuddle him,
Or lie i' the suds.
I am too fuddled to take care to observe your orders.
The table floating round,
And pavement faithless to the fuddled feet.
To FUDGLE. v. n. To drink to excess.
Men will be whoring and fuddling on still.
FUDGE. * interj. An expression of the utmost contempt, usually bestowed on absurd or lying talkers.
It probably was introduced in Goldsmith's time,
and is now common in colloquial language.
I should have mentioned the very impolite behaviour of Mr.
Burchell; who, during this discourse, sat with his face turned to the fire, and at the conclusion of every sentence, would cry out fudge!
FUEILLEMORTE. n. s. [French.] Corruptly pronounced and written philomat.
Fueillemorte colour signifies the colour of withered leaves in autumn.
FUEL.† n. s. [fuah, Norm. French, from feu, firo.] The matter or aliment of fire.
This shall be with burning and fuel of fire.
This spark will move a raging fire.
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with.
Mov'd by my charms, with them your love may cease
And as the fuel sinks the flame decreases.
To FUEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To feed fire with combustible matter.
And yet she cannot waste by this,
Nor long endure this torturing wrong.
For more corruption needsless
To fuel such a fever long.

FUG

- Never, alas! the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame.
The fuel'd chimney blazes wide. Cowley.
Thomson, Autumn.
2. To store with firing.
Some are plainly economical, as that the seat be well watered, and well fuelled. Wotton, Architecture.
- FU'ELLER.* n. s. [from fuel.] That which supplies fuel; that which kindles.
Shops of fashions,
Love's fuellers, and the rightest company
Of players. Donne, Poems, p. 238.
- FUGA'CIOUS.† adj. [fugax, fugacis, Latin.] Volatile.
[They] require some nutriment to supply the place of the fugacious atom. Hallywell, McLampr. (1881), p. 100.
A thing so fine and fugacious, as to escape our nicest search.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 43.
He had hastily snatched at some little fugacious pleasures.
Sterne, Sermon 2.
- FUGA'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [fugax, Latin.] Volatility; the quality of flying away.
- FUGA'CITY. n. s. [fugax, Latin.]
1. Volatility; quality of flying away.
Spirits and salts, which, by their fugacity, colour, smell, taste, and divers experiments that I purposely made to examine them, were like the salt and spirit of urine and soot. Boyle.
2. Uncertainty; instability.
- FUGH. interj. [perhaps from φύω.] An expression of abhorrence. Commonly foh.
A very filthy fellow: how odiously he smells of his country garlick! fugh, how he stinks of Spain! Dryden, Don Sebast.
- FU'GITIVE.† adj. [fugitif, French; fugitivus, Latin.]
1. Not tenable; not to be held or detained.
Our idea of infinity is a growing and fugitive idea, still in a boundless progression, that can stop no where. Locke.
Happiness, object of that waking dream,
Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.
2. Unsteady; unstable; not durable.
These momentary pleasures, fugitive delights.
Daniel, Cleopatra, (1596.)
3. Volatile; apt to fly away.
The vexed chymick vainly chases
His fugitive gold through all her faces. Crashaw, Poems, p. 77.
The more tender and fugitive parts, the leaves of many of the more sturdy vegetables, fall off for want of the supply from beneath: those only which are more tenacious, making a shift to subsist without such recruit. Woodward, Nat. Hist.
4. Flying; running from danger.
Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,
The fugitive Parthians follow. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
The Trojan chief
Thrice fugitive about Troy wall. Milton, P. L.
5. Flying from duty; falling off.
Can a fugitive daughter enjoy herself, while her parents are in tears? Richardson, Clarissa.
6. Wandering; runnagate; vagabond.
Putting off his glorious apparel, and discharging his company, he came like a fugitive servant through the mid-land unto Antioch, having very great dishonour for that his host was destroyed. 2 Macc. viii. 35.
They are still seeking change, restless, fickle, fugitive; they may not abide to tarry in one place long.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 185.
The most malicious surmise was countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician. Wotton.
7. Perishable; as, a fugitive piece; i. e. a little composition printed on a sheet, or less; a small pamphlet. Literary men of modern times have introduced this meaning, no doubt, from the circumstances usually attending such pieces of being soon forgotten, or

FUL

- soon lost; and have accordingly given occasion to collections of some fugitive performances, which ought not so to perish.
- FU'GITIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.]
1. One who runs from his station or duty.
Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon.
Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
Thy ling'ring. Milton, P. L.
We understand by some fugitives that he hath commanded
The generals to return with victory, or expect
A shameful death. Denham, Sophy.
2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.
Too many, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives there abiding. Spenser on Ireland.
Your royal highness is too great and too just, either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.
3. One hard to be caught or detained.
What muse but his can Nature's beauties hit,
Or catch that airy fugitive, call'd wit? Harte.
- FU'GITIVENESS.† n. s. [from fugitive.]
1. Volatility; fugacity.
That divers salts, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartshorn ascending in distillation. Boyle.
2. Instability; uncertainty.
The ludicrousness and fugitiveness of our wanton reason.
More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 1.
- FUGUE. n. s. [French; from fuga, Latin.] In musick, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same, or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner, the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harris.
The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descendant in lofty fugues. Milton on Education.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton, P. L.
Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

You should tread a course

Pretty and full of view.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; they taint business through want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

That must be our cure,

To be no more; sad cure; for who would lose,

Though full of pain, this intellectual being,

Those thoughts that wander through eternity? Milton, P. L.

Gay religions full of pomp and gold.

In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,

I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,

Though full of youthful health and void of pain.

Dryden.

And ever and anon the rosy red

Flash'd through her face, as it had been a snake

Of lightning through bright heaven fulmined.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. ii. 3.

To FULMINE.* v. n. To thunder; to speak with the resistless power, as it were, of thunder.

F U L

Thence to the famous orators repair,
Those ancient, whose resistless eloquence
Wielded at will that fierce democratic,
Shook the arsenal, and fulmin'd over Greece
To Macedon and Artaxerxes' throne.

Milton, P. R.

FU'LNNESS. n. s. [from full.]

1. The state of being filled so as to have no part vacant.

Your heave-offering shall be reckoned the fulness of the wine-press. Numb. xviii. 27.

Let the sea roar and the fulness thereof. Deut.

To the houses I wished nothing more than safety, fulness, and freedom. King Charles.

2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.

3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.

Your enjoyments are so complete, I turn wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness only wish their continuance. South.

4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.

The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclamations and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and unfeigned, as might well appear in the very demonstrations and fulness of the cry. Baron, Hen. VII.

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.

In thy presence is fulness of joy. Psalms.

He is the half part of a blessed man,

Left to be finished by such as she;

And she a fair divided excellence,

Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. Shakspeare, K. John.

6. Repletion; satiety.

I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

7. Plenty; wealth.

To lapse in fulness

Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood

Is worse in kings than beggars.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon, Essays.

9. Largeness; extent.

There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.

10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour of sound.

This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.

FU'LSOME.† adj. [from fulle, Saxon; fuls, Goth. stinking, foul.]

1. Nauseous; offensive.

I come to tell my lady,

There is a fulsome fellow would fain speak with her.

Beaumont and Fl. Rule a Wife, &c.

He that brings fulsome objects to my view,

With nauseous images my fancy fills,

And all goes down like oxymel of squills.

Roscommon.

Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,

How fulsome must it be to stay behind,

And die of rank diseases here at home? Olway, Orphan.

2. Rank; gross: to the smell.

White satyrion is of a dainty smell, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell. Bacon.

3. Lustful. The example, perhaps, more properly belongs to the preceding sense.

He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakspeare.

4. Tending to obscenity.

A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.

FU'LSOMELY.† adv. [from fulsome.]

F U M

1. Nauseously; rankly; obscenely.

Box is naturally dry, juicelesse, fulsomely and loathsomely smelling. Newton, Herbal to the Bible, (1587.)

Full gorges belk, if not much rather spew,

Most fulsomely. Davies, Wit's Pilgrim, sign. T. i.

2. Foully; not decently.

God was sore displeased with his people, because they builded, decked, and trimmed up their own houses, and suffered God's house to be in ruin and decay, to lie uncomely and fulsomely. Homilies, for rep. and keeping clean Churches.

FU'LSOMENESS.† n. s. [from fulsome.]

1. Nauseousness.

Others have described them by some diseases, to manifest the fulsomeness and loathsomeness thereof; pride, by an inflammation; luxury, by a fever; envy, by a leprosy.

Price, Creation of the Prince, (1610.) sign. B. i. b.

2. Foulness.

Taking away all such fulsomeness and filthiness, as through ignorance and blind devotion hath crept into the church these many hundred years. Homilies, for rep. Churches.

3. Rank smell.

4. Obscenity.

No decency is considered, no fulsomeness is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as dulness can supply it. Dryden.

FUMA'DO. n. s. [fumus, Latin.] A smoked fish.

Fish that serve for the hotter countries, they used at first to fume, by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, drying them with the smoke of a soft and continual fire, from which they purchased the name of fumadoes. Carew.

FU'MAGE. n. s. [from fumus, Latin.] Hearthmoney.

Dict.

FU'MATORY. n. s. [funaria, Lat. funeterre, Fr.] An herb.

Her fallow leas

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumatory,

Doth root upon.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

To FU'MBLE.† v. n. [foumelen, Dutch; fumla,

Su. Goth. "manibus ultro citroque pertentare, ut solent qui in tenebris obambulant." Ilire.]

1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.

His wither'd fist still knocking at death's door,

Fumbling and drivelling as he draws his breath,

For brief, the shape and messenger of death.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

Our mechanick theists will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.

It is continuing to fumble on the lute, though the musick has been long over. Warburton, Ded. to the Freethinkers.

2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.

Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden, Span. Friar.

3. To play childishly.

I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

4. To stutter; to hesitate in the speech; to fumble.

See To FABLE.

She fumbled out, "Thanks, good;" and so she died.

Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

He fumbleth in the mouth;

His speech doth fail.

Trag. of K. John, 1611.

To FU'MBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many farewells as he stars in heav'n,

With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,

He fumbles up all in one loose adieu.

Shakspeare.

His greasy bald-pate choir

Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony,

They told 'em false for fear.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

FU'MBLER. n. s. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FU'MBLINGLY.† adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

F U M

Many good scholars speak but fumblingly.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FUME. n. s. [fumée, French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
But straight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes. Shakspeare.
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.
In winter, when the heat without is less, breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the month in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South.
Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden, Pers.
Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprize,
And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
* Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon these things below, than they have, but in gross. Bacon.
To lay aside all that may seem to have a shew of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon, War with Spain.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, Fr. fumo, Lat.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd.
* By their great intercessor; came in sight
Before the Father's throne. Milton, P. L.

From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danced about her head. Dryden, A. n.
Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Tie up the libertines to a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
Silenus lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always hot in each extended vein. Roscommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning;
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. B. Jonson, Catiline.
Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Chapin, Phil. Franc.

The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race
Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The sluggish sleep beneath its sacred beam:
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson, Spring.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival fum'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:

F U M

He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around. Dryden.

To FUME. v. a.

1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.

Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume
by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carcw.

2. To perfume with odours in the fire.

She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came,
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryden.

3. Simply, to perfume.

Fume all the ground,
And sprinkle holy water. Fletcher, Faithf. Shepherdess.
Now are the lawn sheets fum'd with violets.
Marston, Com. of What You Will.

4. To disperse in vapours.

The heat will fume away most of the scent. Mortimer.

FU'ME. n. s. The dung of the deer.

By his slot, his entries, and his port,
His frayings, fewmets, he doth promise sport. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

FUME'ITE. n. s. [French.] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.

A haunch of ven'son made her sweat,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift.

FUMID. adj. [humidus, Latin.] Smoky; vaporous.

A crass and fumid exhalation is caused from the combat of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirit of aqua fortis. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FUMIDITY. n. s. [from fumid.] Smokiness; tendency to smoke. Dict.

To FU'MIGATE. v. n. [from fumus, Lat. fumiger,
French.]

1. To smoke; to perfume by smoke or vapour.

Would'st thou preserve thy famish'd family,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state. Dryden, Virg.

2. To medicate or heal by vapours.

FUMIGA'TION. n. s. [fumigatio, Latin; fumigation,
French; from fumigate.]

1. Scents raised by fire.

Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbutnot.
My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:
And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows' brains and pigeons' blood. Dryden.

2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.

FU'MING. n. s. [from fume.]

1. The act of scenting by smoke.

The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlick, or other unsavory things will drive moles out of the ground. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Fume; idle conceit.

O Fancie fond, thy fumings hath me fed!
The stinking stench of thing inclined best,
Hath poisoned all the virtues in my breast. Mir. for Mag. p. 250.

FU'MINGLY. adv. [from fume.] Angrily; in a rage.

That which we move for our better learning and instruction sake, turneth unto anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hooker.

FU'MISH. adj. [from fume.] Smoky; also hot, cholerick. Clotgrave in V. Franens, and Sherwood.

One loves soft music and sweet melody;

Another is perhaps melancholike;

Another fumish is, and cholerick. Mir. for Mag. p. 158.

FU'MITER. n. s. A plant.

F U N

Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vext sea; singing aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds. Shakespeare.

FU'MITORY.* See FUMATORY.

FU'MOUS. } adj. [fumeux, French; from fume.] Pro-
FU'MY. } ducing fumes.

From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fumy god from out his breast:
Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lucky play;
More lucky had it lasted 'till the day, Dryden, Æn.

FUN.* n. s. [A low cant word, Dr. Johnson says.
It is probably from the Sax, fægn, merry, glad.]
Sport; high merriment; frolicksome delight.
Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. More.

FUNA'MBULATORY.* adj. [Lat. funambulus.]

1. Narrow, like the walk of a rope dancer.
Tread softly and circumspectly in this funambulatory track and narrow path of goodness. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 1.
2. Performing like a rope-dancer.
There were funambulatory elephants, as we are informed by Suetonius. Chambers.

FUNA'MBULIST.* n. s. [Lat. funambulus; whether coined by the writer, in the following passage, who has thought proper to ridicule the style of Johnson, I know not.] A rope dancer.
What man will withhold from the funambulist the praise of justice, who considers his inflexible uprightness!
The Looker-on, No. 80.

FUNA'MBULO.* } n. s. [old French. funambule;
FUNA'MBULUS. } Lat. funambulus, from funis,
a rope, and ambulo, to walk.] A rope-dancer.
We see the industry and practice of tumblers and funam-bulos. Bacon, Disc. touching Helps for the Intell. Powers.
I see him walking not like a funambulus upon a cord, but upon the edge of a razor. Wotton, Rem. p. 365.

FUNCTION n. s. [functio, Latin.]

1. Discharge; performance.
There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life
Swift.
2. Employment; office.
The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.
You have paid the heav'ns your function, and the prisoner
the very debt of your calling. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Nor was it any policy, or obstinacy, or partiality of affection either to the men or their function, which fixed me.
King Charles.
This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her. Addison, on Italy.
Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pro-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury.
3. Single act of any office.
Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort,
be executed. Hooker.
They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet.
4. Trade; occupation.
Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits.
Shakespeare.
5. Office of any particular part of the body.
The bodies of men and other animals are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley, Serm.

F U N

6. Power; faculty: either animal or intellectual.

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton, S. A.

Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dang'rous art,
And pursues it all upon the peccant part. Pope.
Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life.
Arbuthnot.

FUNCTIONARY.* n. s. [from function.]

1. One who is charged with an office or employment.
2. That which performs any office.

FUND. n. s. [fond, French; funda, a bag, Latin.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expence is supported.
He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.
Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the watry tide. Dryden.
In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.
2. Stock or bank of money.
As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres.
Addison.

To FU'ND.* v. a. [from the noun.] To place money in the funds either of a company, a corporation, or the publick.

FUNDAMENT.* n. s. [old French, fundement;
Lat. fundamentum.]

1. Originally, foundation.
And yet, God wot, uneth the fundament Performed is. Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.
2. The back part of the body.
The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, &c. Hudibras, i. ii. 846.

FUNDAME'NTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Lat.] Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.
Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh, Ess.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of't, Shakespeare, Coriol.
Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift, Exam. r.
Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life.
Such we find they are, as can controul
The servile actions of our wav'ring soul,
Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ill all built on life, that fundamental ill. Prior.
Yet some there were among the sounder few,
Of those who less presum'd and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope.

FUNDAME'NTAL. n. s. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.

FUN

We propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably in respect of superstructures and consequences that arise from them. South.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.

FUNDAME'NTALLY. adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially; originally.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspective in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grew.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposite in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift.

FUNE'BRIAL.* adj. [funebre, Fr. funeris, Lat.] Belonging to funerals.

Their garlands—were convivial, festival, sacrificial, nuptial, honorary, funerbal. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 91.

Their funerbal garlands had little of beauty in them beside roses, while they made them of myrtle, rosemary, apium, &c. under symbolical intimations. Ibid.

FUNERAL.* n. s. [funerailles, French; funus, Latin; from funale, a torch or link made of a cord (funis) with wax or resin about it; funerals being anciently solemnized among the Romans, in the night time with torches. The word funeral, Mr. Malone says, was, agreeably to its French origin (funerailles), almost always used in the plural, previous to the Restoration. But this is not the case. The singular is found repeatedly in Barret's Alveary of 1580: "Friends come together to set forth the solemnization of his funeral." Again, in Sherwood's Dict. 1632. "A funeral," and "Of a funeral."] Dict.

1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
Come I to speak in Caesar's funeral. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

All things that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral. Shakspeare.

He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Mac. v. 10.

No widow at his funeral shall weep. Sandys.

2. The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.

The long fun'ral blacken all the way. Pope.

You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift, Direct. to the Chambermaid.

3. Burial; interment.

May he find his funeral
I th' sands, when he before his day shall fall. Denham.

FUNERAL.* adj.

1. Used at the ceremony of interring the dead.

Our instruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast. Shakspeare.

Let such honours
And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues
Are due, be first perform'd. Denham, Sophy.

Thy hand o'er towns the fun'ral torch displays,
And forms a thousand hills ten thousand ways. Dryden.

2. Mourning.

To converse with his friends and standers by so as may do them comfort, and ease their funeral and civil complaints. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, vi. § 3.

To FUNERATE. v. a. [Latin, funeratus.] To bury.

Cockram.

FUNERATION.* n. s. [Lat. funeratio.] The solemnization of a funeral.

In the rites of funeration they did use to anoint the dead body with aromattick spices and ointments, before they buried them. And so was it the Jewish custom to perform their funerals. Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. p. 41.

FUNE'REAL. adj. [funereus, Lat.] Suiting a funeral; dark; dismal.

But if his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Inhabitant of deep disastrous night,
Homeward with pious speed repass the main,
To the pale shade funereal rites ordain. Pope, Odyssey.

FUNE'ST.* adj. [funeste, Fr. funestus, Lat.] Doleful; lamentable.

The violent ends or downfalls of great princes, the subversion of kingdoms and estates, or whatever else can be imagined of funest or tragical. Phillips, Theat. Poet. Pref.

The bay is ominous of some funest accident. Evelyn, Syl. p. 396.

FUNGE.* n. s. [Lat. fungus.] A blockhead; a dolt; a fool.

A very idiot, a funge, a golden ass. Burton, Anal. of Mel. To the Reader.

They are mad, empty vessels, funges, beside themselves, derided. Burton, Anal. of Mel. p. 122.

FUNGO'SITY.* n. s. [old Fr. fungosité, from fungus, Lat.] Unsolid excrescence. Dict.

Eggs cast into the matrix of the earth, or certain little pustulæ and fungosities on its surface. Biblioth. Bibl. (Or. 1720.) i. 292.

FUNGOUS.* adj. [fungex, Fr. from fungus, Lat.] Excrescent; spongy; wanting firmness.

The second instrument of the voice is the tongue; and this, by reason of its fungous substance and volubility, is so meet and so principal an agent therein, that speech itself, and all the variety thereof, doth among all sorts of men go by the name of the tongue. Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 137.

It is often employed to keep down the fungous lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the escharottick medicines. Sharp, Surgery.

The meaner productions of the French and English press; that fungous growth of novels and of pamphlets. Harris, Hermes, B. 3.

FUNGUS. n. s. [Latin.] Strictly a mushroom: a word used to express such excrescences of flesh as grow out upon the lips of wounds, or any other excrescence from trees or plants not naturally belonging to them; as the agarick from the larch-tree, and auriculæ Judæ from elder. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce fungues, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot on Diet.

This eminence is composed of little points, or granula, called fungus, or proud flesh. Sharp.

FUN'ICLE. n. s. [funiculus, Lat.] A small cord; a small ligature; a fibre.

FUN'ICULAR. adj. [funiculaire, Fr. from funicle.] Consisting of a small cord or fibre.

FUNK.* n. s. A stink. A low word. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius deduces it from the Icel. funa, to putrify. Lye, from fonck, an old Flemish word, implying confusion, perplexity; and he adds, that "to be in a funk" is a common academical expression at Oxford. See the verb neuter, which Mr. Mason and others have illustrated by an academical epigram. Funk in the Pr. Parv. is a "lytell fyre."

To FUNK. v. a. [See the noun.] To poison with an offensive smell.

What with strong smoke, and with his stronger breath,
He funks Basketia and her son to death.

King, The Fumetary, C. iii.

To FUNK.* v. n. [from the noun.] To stink through fear.

The best part of the veal, and the Greek for hunc,
Is the name of a man that makes us funk.

Epigram on J. Burton, when Proctor at Oxford.

FU'NNEL. n. s. [infundibulum, Lat. whence fundible, fundle, funnel.]

1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundish.

If you pour a glit of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend.

Blackmore.

The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel.

Ray on the Creation.

2. A pipe or passage of communication.

Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air.

Addison.

FU'NNY.* adj. [from fun.] Comical; a northern word, and now common in colloquial language.

FU'NNY.* n. s. A low term for a light boat; a kind of wherry.

FUR.† n. s. [fourrure, French. Dr. Johnson. — Fourrure is derived by Du Cange from the low Lat. furrura, a clothing of skins. In like manner our word may be deduced from the low Lat. fiara, a hairy skin. But the word is perhaps of northern origin. Su. Goth. fodr, "subtegmen vestium," Serenius. The M. Goth. fodr is the sheath of a sword, and the Sax. foðer, a quiver; "because," according to Mr. Callander, "the first quivers, and sheaths for swords, were made of skins, as foder signifies vellis, pellis, [a skin;] Fr. feutre, [felt;] English, fur."] Dr. Johnson.

1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth, or covered for ornament.

December must be expressed with a horrid and fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of Capricorn.

Peacham on Drawing.

'Tis but dressing up a bird of prey in his cap and furs to make a judge of him.

L'Estrange.

And lordly gout wrapt up in fur,
And wheezing asthma, loth to stir.

Swift.

2. Soft hair of beasts found in cold countries, where nature provides coats suitable to the weather; hair in general.

This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf.

Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs;

And bids what will take all.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Such animals as feed upon flesh qualify it, the one by swallowing the hair or fur of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with.

Ray on the Creation.

3. Any moisture exhaled to such a degree as that the remainder sticks on the part.

Methinks I am not right in ev'ry part;

I feel a kind of trembling at my heart:

My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;

Besides a filthy fur upon my tongue.

Dryden, Pers.

F U R

To FUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To line or cover with skins that have soft hair.

How mad a sight it was to see Dametas, like rich tissue
fur'd with lambskins?

Sidney.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear;

Robes and fur'd gowns hide all.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;

You fur your gloves with reasons.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

2. To cover with soft matter.

To make lampblack, take a torch and hold it under the bottom of a latten basin; and, as it groweth to be fur'd and black within, strike it with a feather into some shell.

Peacham.

The sisters, mourning for their brother's loss,

Their bodies hid in bark, and fur'd with moss.

Dryden.

Their frying blood compels to irrigate

Their dry fur'd tongues.

Philips.

A dungeon wide and horrible; the walls

On all sides fur'd with mouldy damp, and hung

With clots of rosy gore.

Addison.

FUR. adv. [It is now commonly written far.] At a distance.

The white lovely dove

Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,

Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur.

Sidney.

To change a flounce, or add a furbelow.

Pope.

Furbelows and flounces have been disposed of at will.

Guardian, No. 149.

To FURBELOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with ornamental appendages of dress.

When arguments too fiercely glare,

You calm them with a milder air;

To break their points, you turn their force,

And furbelow the plain discourse.

Prior.

She was flounced and furbelow'd; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl.

Addison.

To FURBISH. v. a. [fourbir, Fr.] To burnish; to polish; to rub to brightness.

It may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,

And furbish new the name of John o' Gaunt.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines.

Jer. xlv. 4.

Some others who furbish up and reprint his old errors, hold, that the sufferings of the damned are not to be, in a strict sense, eternal; but that, after a certain period of time, there shall be a general gaol-delivery of the souls in prison, and that not for a farther execution, but a final release.

South.

As after Numa's peaceful reign,

The martial Ancus did the sceptre wield

Furbish'd the rusty sword again,

Resum'd the long-forgotten shield,

And led the Latins to the dusty field.

Dryden.

Inferior ministers, for Mars repair

His broken axle-tree, and blunted war;

And send him forth again, with furbish'd arms.

Dryden.

FUR

FUSIBILITY. n. s. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use. Wotton, Architecture.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.

FU'SIL. adj. [fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.]

1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

Some, less skilful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothick buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble. Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat.

The liquid ore be drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Perpetual flames,
O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Philips.

FU'SIL.† n. s.

1. A firelock; a small neat musquet. [Fr. fusil, formerly a fire-steel for a tinder-box. Cotgrave.]

2. [In heraldry; from fuseau or fusée, a spindle.] Something like a spindle.

Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle; in the ancient coat of Montague, argent three fusils in fesse gules. Peacham on Blazoning.

FUSILE'ER. n. s. [from fusil.] A soldier armed with a fusil; a musketeer.

FU'SION. n. s. [fusio, Latin; fusion, French.]

1. The act of melting.

2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.

Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames. Newton, Opticks.

FUSS.† n. s. [A low cant word, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, a regularly descended northern word; Sax. fur, prompt, eager; Su. Goth. and Cimbr. fus, the same; hence the Sax. fyrjan, to hasten, and the Su. Gbth. fysa, the same.] A tumult; a bustle.

End as it befits your station;
Come to use and application;
Nor with senates keep a fuss:
I submit, and answer thus. Swift.

To FU'SILE.* See TO FUZZLE.

FUST.† n. s.

1. The trunk or body of a column. [fuste, Fr. literally, a cask.]

F U S

The bases of a number of columns remain in their original position, and their broken fusts lie scattered around.

Drummond's Travels, Lett. xi. (1748.)

2. A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel. [Fr. fusté, taking of the cask.]

To FUST.† v. n. [from the noun. See also To FOIST.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.

Sure he, that made us with such large discourse

Looking before and after, gave us not

That capability of godlike reason

To fust in us unus'd.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

FU'STED.* adj. [Fr. fusté.] Mouldy; stinking.

His blown ware

Of fusted hops, now lost for lack of sale. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 5.

FU'STIAN.† n. s. [Fr. fustaine. From the low Lat. fustanum, according to Menage, formed from fustis, on account of the tree on which the cotton grows; from fustat, Arabick, according to Bochart, which means the city of Memphis, where cotton is produced in abundance.]

1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.

Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings? Shakespeare.

2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,

By dint of high heroick fustian.

Hudibras.

What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn. Dryden.

Fustian is thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other. Dryden.

Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the close,

Of rise to fustian, or descend to prose.

Smith.

FU'STIAN. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Made of fustian.

2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid. Used of stile.

When men argue, th' greatest part

O' th' contest falls on terms of art,

Until the fustian stuff be spent,

And then they fall to th' argument.

Hudibras.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylva, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse. Dryden, Drydenoy.

FU'STIANIST.* n. s. [from fustian.] One who writes bombast.

Preferring the gay rankness of Apuleius, Arnobius, or any modern fustianist, before the native Latinisms of Cicero.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

FU'STICK.† n. s. A sort of wood brought from the West-Indies, used in dying of cloth. Dict.

Next to galls old fustick increases the weight about $\frac{1}{4}$ in 12. Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 305.

To FU'STIGATE. v. a. [fustigo, Lat.] To beat with a stick; to cane. Dict.

FUSTIGATION.* n. s. [from fustigate. Fr. fustigation, Cotgrave.] An ancient custom of punishing with a cudgel; the act of beating with a stick; also, a penance enjoined by the Roman inquisition.

Fasting and fustigation may do something.

Tobin, Honey Moon, p. 41.

FUSTILARIAN. n. s. [from fusty.] A low fellow; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakespeare only.

Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilarian: I'll tickle your catastrophe. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FU'STILUG, or FU'STILUGS.* n. s. [from fusty.] This choice expression has some advantage over fustilarian in having been placed in our old dictionaries, as well as used by a very sensible writer! Sherwood and Cotgrave both give it; and the latter defines it, under the word coche, "a woman grown fat by ease and laziness." In the Exmouth dialect, fustilugs is "a big-boned person." A gross, fat, unwieldy person.

F U T

You may daily see such fustilugs walking in the streets, like so many tuns, each moving upon two pottle-pots.

Junius, Sin Stigmatized, (1639,) p. 39.

FU'STINESS. † n. s. [from fusty.] Mouldiness; stink. Sherwood.

FU'STY. adj. [from fust.] Ill-smelling; mouldy.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

The fusty plebeians hate thine honours. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,

From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shakespeare.

FUTILE. † adj. [futile, French; futilis, Latin.]

1. Talkative; loquacious.

One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal. Bacon.

2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

The word may have some allusion to the vessel called futile, used in the sacrifice of Vesta, of that narrow bottom that it could not stand, but was forced to be held up. Thus say, a man is futile; and, by alluding to a vessel, you call him a leaking, vain, dissolute fellow; a cracked vessel; he still runs out.

Wake, Rationale on Texts of Script. (1701,) p. 234.

The sons of earth, the vulgar crew,

Anxious for futile gains, beneath me stray,

And seek with erring step contentment's obvious way.

Shenstone, Ode after Sickness, (1749.)

FUTILITY. n. s. [futilité, French; from futile.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour. L'Estrange.

2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiack, and their mutual relations and aspects. Bentley.

FUTILOUS. * adj. [Lat. futilis.] Worthless; trifling.

Not now in use.

I received your answer to that futulous pamphlet.

Howell, Lett. ii. 48.

God implants no instincts in his creatures that are futulous and vain. Glanville, Sermon, p. 287.

FUTROCKS. n. s. [corrupted from foot hooks. Skinner.]

The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FUTURE. † adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.]

This word had formerly the Latin accent on the last syllable, of which Milton affords perhaps the latest example, P. L. x. 840.] That which will be hereafter; to come: as, the future state.

Glory they sing to the most High! good will

To future men, and in their dwellings peace. Milton, P. L.

He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,

And sings the future people from his hand. Addison, Ovid.

Do and have make the present time; did, had, the past; shall, will, the future. Louth, Introd. Eng. Grammar.

FUTUR. n. s. [from the adjective.] Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

Thy letters have transported me beyond

This ignorant present time; and I feel now

The future in the instant. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

FUTURELY. † adv. [from future.] In time to come.

F Y

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding; neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.

It more imports me

Than all the actions that I have foregone,
Or futurely can hope. Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

FUTURITION. † n. s. [old Fr. futurition.] The state of being to be; the condition of being to come to pass hereafter.

The time expressed denotes the futurition at the latter day.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. ix.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no? South, Sermon, i. 285.

FUTURITY. n. s. [from future.]

1. Time to come.

Nat my service past, nor present sorrows,

Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,

Can ransom me.

Shakespeare, Othello.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.

This great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,

Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity.

Pope, Statius.

3. The state of being to be; futurition.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate and intent mind, as it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas. Glanville, Scepia.

TO FUZZ. † v. n. [without etymology, Dr. Johnson says; but it may be referred perhaps to the same original as fizz is. See To Fizz.] To fly out in small particles.

FUZZBALL. n. s. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

TO FUZZLE. * v. a. [Gr. φυσάω, to swell out.] To make drunk. Sherwood.

Having liberally taken his liquor, my fine scholar was so fuzzed, that he was no sooner laid in bed, but he fell fast asleep. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 604.

FY. † interj. [This term of abhorrence is found in many languages, and is of great age in our own. Chaucer uses it; Wicliffe, the similar expression, fugh. Gr. φῦ; Lat. phy; old Fr. fy; Ital. and modern Fr. fi; Span. fai; Welsh, fiei; Flem. foei. Our own word is often written fie. The expression may be traced to the verb signifying hate or disgust; Sax. fian; Germ. fien; M. Goth. fijan; old Goth. fia.] A word of blame and disapprobation.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,

Whose wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay. Spenser.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A bawd, sir, fy upon him! Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!

Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton, Vac. Exerc.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?

Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:

Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:

My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaudies.

Taylor.

G A B

G† Has two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull; with the exception, however, of gaol and its derivatives, before the a in which the g is soft. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Where g is doubled, the sound before e is usually hard, as dagger, ragged, &c. but not in suggest; and in many words the single g before e has the hard sound, as in geese, get, eager, finger, longer, target, tiger, &c. The same may be said of g before i, whether doubled or not, in numerous instances; as giddy, gift, gild, gird, dig, digger, rigging, &c. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before h; as might. The Saxon L, 3, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

G.* In musick, one of the clefs; that of the treble or alt.

To GAB.* v. n. [a very ancient word in our own language, and found in many others, with much the same meaning; gaber, old French, to laugh at, from gab, mockery; begabba, Goth. gabba, Icel. the same, from gabb, a mock; gabban, Sax. to trifle, to joke, to talk a mere jargon; gabbare, Ital. to mock; ghab, Pers. a foolish or bitter expression. The Europ. word is to be traced, perhaps, to the Celt. gab, a beak; Irish, gab, a beak or mouth; whence gab for the mouth; and hence gabble.]

1. To talk idly; to prate.

I am no lubble, [blab.]
Ne though I say it, I n'am not lefe to gabbe.

Chaucer, Mill Tale.

2. To lie; to impose upon. "Gabbing, i. e. lying."
Bullockur, and Cockeram.

G A B

I deny that thilke thing be good, that annoyeth hym, that hath it. Gabbe I of this? Thou wilt saie naie.

Chaucer, Boeth. ii. 5.

I gabbe not; so have I joye and bliss!

Chaucer, Nuns-Pr. Tale.

GAB.* n. s. [from the verb.] Cant; loquacity; imposing language; as, "he has the gift of the gab." A colloquial expression.

GA'BARDINE.† See GABERDINE.

To GA'BBLE.† v. n. [gabbare, Ital. gabbieren, Dutch; gafsa, Icel. to babble. See also To GAB.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,

Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabbe like

A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes

With words that made them known. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Flocks of fowl, that when the tempests roar,

With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shore.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabbe like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house?

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Which made some think, when he did gabbe,

Th' had heard three labourers of Babel.

Hudibras.

Such a rout, and such a rabble,

Run to hear Jack Pudding gabbe.

Swift.

GA'BBLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabbe enough, and good enough.

Shakspeare, All's well.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabbe rises loud

Among the builders; each to other calls,

Not understood.

Milton, P. L.

GA'BLER.† n. s. [from gabbe.] A prater; a chattering fellow.

Sherwood.

GA'BEL.† n. s. [gabelle, Fr. gabello, Ital. gafel, Sax. a tribute, from giban, to give. Some etymologists deduce the word from the Heb. gab, a present; others from kabbalah, Arab. cabala or cavala, receipt.] An excise; a tax.

To lay upon them such gabels, taxes, and all manner of tributes, as should please the king to demand.

Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, (1618.) p. 1.

This may be done; if he impose new gabels or imposts upon his subjects.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, iii. § 3.

The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, and tobacco.

Addison on Italy.

G A D

GA'BELLER.* n. s. [from gabel.] A collector of taxes.

To their tumultuous burning the gabellers' goods I think I may, not unaptly, compare our burning the pope.

Wright, View of the late Troubles, (1685,) Pref.

GA'BERDINE.† n. s. [Span. gabardina; old Fr. and Span. gaban, a cloak of felt, a loose coat worn over another; Ital. gavardina, 'a frock, a shepherd's garment; Fr. galleverdine, "a long coat or cassock of coarse, and for the most part motley or parti-coloured, stuff." Cotgrave. Our word is usually written gaberdine.] A coarse frock; any mean dress. The coarse frock, which resembles a loose shirt, is still worn, instead of a coat, by our peasants in many places.

My best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gaberdine.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

The knight did straight submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:

Next he disrobd his gaberdine,
And with it did himself resign.

Hudibras.

GABION. n. s. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

His battery was defended all along with gabions, and casks filled with sand.

Knolles.

GA'BLE.† n. s. [Icel. gabl, the end of a thing; Goth. gibal. Du Cange deduces the low Lat. gabulum, frons edificii, from what he calls the Engl. gable-head.] The fore-front or end of a house coming down right. Bullokar. The gable, or gable-end of a house, is the upright triangular end; from the cornice, or eaves, to the top of its roof.

Chambers.

Glase the gable, and grave therein thy name.

Vision of P. Plowman.

I affect not these high gable-ends.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable-ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

GAD.† n. s. [gab, Saxon; gaddr, Icelandick, a club.]

1. A sceptre, or club.

To fawning dogs seven times I gave a bone,
And flung some scraps to such as nothing had;
But in my hands still kept the golden gad,
That serv'd my turne.

Mir. for Mag. p. 517.

2. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bags, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel.

Moxon, Mech. Exerciscs.

3 It seems to be used by Shakspeare for a stile or graver. [from gab, Sax. a goad.]

I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words,

Tit. Andronicus.

To GAD.† v. n. [derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterite of the old word azam, to go. Mr. Warton thinks that there was once the verb gade, a frequentative from go, from the circumstances of the old adjective gadling being formerly written gadelyng, and a going about from house to house being, in 1534, written gadyng.

G A D

See GADDING and GADLING.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

The virgins will be over finely apparelled and trymmed, and will nedes at overmuch libertie gooe faunginge and gaddinge abroad.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) sign. Dd. 4. b.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?—
—Where I have learnt me to repent.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad.

Eccles. xxv. 25.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And throng forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream, and shore.

Fairfax.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home.

Bacon.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;

To coort each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation.

Herbert.

Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echoes moan.

Milton, Lycidas.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their stings draw blood.

And drive the cattle gadding through the wood.

Dryden.

She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;

With furies frights her from her native home,

And drives her gadding, round the world to roam.

Dryden.

There's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl.

L' Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding.

Locke.

GA'NDER.† n. s. [from gad.] A rambler; one that runs much abroad without business; a gadder about.

Huloet.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame.

Eccles. xxvi. 8.

If she be a noted reveller, a gadder, a singer, a prunker, or a dancer, then take heed of her.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 567.

GA'DDING.* n. s. [from gad. Mr. Warton cites, from the register of a chantry in 1534, "Receyvid at the gadyng with Saynte Mary souge at Crismas," which he interprets "at the going about from house to house, &c." Note on Milton's Lycidas, ver. 40. "To gadde in procession," is among the articles censured by Bale in his Declaration of Bonner's Articles, 1554.] A going about; a pilgrimage.

The stations he speaketh of were no gaddings, but standings.

Fulke's Relentive, (1580,) p. 162.

GA'DDINGLY.† adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

Gaddingly, as they that went on pilgrimage.

Huloet.

GA'DFLY.† n. s. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad; it is called goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gab, and fly. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Goth. gadda, to prick; gadd, Swed. a sting.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breeze.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds.

Bacon.

Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a flight

Of angry gadflies fasten on the herd.

Thomson, Summer.

GA'DLING.* adj. [from gad. Gadeling, straggling. Hearne, Gloss. Rob. of Gloucester.] Straggling; in the vocabulary of Bullokar. Chaucer uses it as a substantive for an idle vagabond, a gadder about. Obsolete.

GA'ELICK.* } n. s. [from Gallia.] A dialect of the GA'LICK. } Celtick tongue.

I believe, without vanity, I may say I understand the Galic as well as any man living; for I wrote a Grammar and Dictionary of it. Shaw on the Authent. of Ossian's Poems, p. 24.

The young [in the Highlands] are indeed taught to read English, but often they read without understanding, and still prefer speaking Gaelic.

Dr. Jamieson on the Orig. of the Scottish Language.

GA'ELICK, or GA'LICK.* adj. Pertaining to the Gaelick language.

We may determine from the Galic names, which may even now be traced along the Tweed and the Merse.

Chalmers on the several People of Scotland.

GAFF.* n. s. [gaffe, Fr. "an iron hook, wherewith seamen pull great fishes into their ships." Cotgrave.] A harpoon or large hook. Ainsworth.

GAFF.* nas. A fool. See GOFF.

GA'FFER.* n. s. [gæfene, companion, Saxon, Dr. Johnson from Junius; others consider it a contraction of good father; and some of godfather, the sense of which word came to be extended to every man of some age. See Elstob on the Sax. Homil. of St. Gregory, p. 20.] A word of respect now obsolete, or applied only to a mean person.

For gaffer Treadwell told us by the bye,
Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry. Gay, Pastorals.

GA'FFLE.* n. s.

1. An artificial spur put upon cocks when they are set to fight. [gaflak, Icel. a kind of dart.]

2. A steel lever to bend cross-bows. [Sax. zaveloc.] The gaffle of a cross-bow. Sherwood.

GA'FFLOCK.* See GAVELOCK.

To GAG.* v. a. [from gaghel, Dutch, the palate, Minsheu; the past participle of the Sax. gæggian, to close up. Mr. H. Tooke.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
Our Spanish licensing gags the English press. Milton, Arcopagitica.

They might possibly by obstinacy harden, or by diversion gag, conscience; but they could not bribe and corrupt it. Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 121.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound. Pope.

GAG.* n. s. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Your monkish prohibitions, and expurgatorious indexes, your gags and snaffles. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

Some when the kids their dams too deeply drain,
With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain. Dryden.

Your women would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.

GA'GGER.* n. s. [from gag.] One who uses a gag to stop the mouth.

I undertook to answer that very worthless author, "the gagger of all Protestants' mouths for ever."

Mounlagu, App. to Cæs. (1625), Dedic.
Out of just indignation against this gagger and his fellows. Ibid.

GAGE.* n. s. [gage, French. Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of the Sax. verb gæggian, to close up; gage being that by which a man is bound to certain fulfilments. Mr. H. Tooke. — See, however, wage, which is the same word as gage, and is formed of the Lat. vas, vadis, a surety; Su. vad, the same; low Lat. vadiare, gagiare; Germ. wagen, to hazard, to engage; Su. Goth. waga, the same.]

1. A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

He, when the shamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory from him snatcht away. Spenser, F. Q.

There I throw my gage
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

They from their mothers' breasts poor orphans rend,
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southern, Oroonoko.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.

In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments, that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gage of its probability. Locke.

2. A measure; a rule of measuring.

One judges, as the weather dictates, right
The poem is at noon, and wrong at night;
Another judges by a surer gage,
An author's principles, or parentage. Young.

3. In naval language, when one ship is to windward of another, she is said to have the weather gage of her.

To GAGE. v. a. [gager, French.]

1. To wager; to depone as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

A moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

He found the Turkish merchants making merry: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knolles, History.

2. To bind by some caution or surety; to engage.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shakespeare.

3. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauged. See To GAUGE.

We shall see your bearing.
— Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to night. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

GA'GER.* n. s. [more properly gauger, Fr. gaugueur.] One whose business it is to measure vessels or quantities. See GAUGER. Sherwood.

To GA'GGLE.* v. n. [gagen, gagelen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — From the Icel. gagl, a cuckoo, Norw. a goose; a word from the sound. Srenius.] To make noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice,
And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce. King.

GA'GLING.* n. s. [from gaggle.] A noise made by geese.

You know how the gagging of geese did once preserve the capitol. Howell, Lett. iv. 1.

GA'ITY.† See GAYETY.

GA'ILY.† adv. [from gay.] See GAYLY.

1. Airily; cheerfully.

Gaily said of you.Barret, Alv. (1580.)Wights, who travel that way daily, Jog on by his example gaily.Swift, Pieces ascribed to him, ed. Barret, p. 135.Thomson was introduced, and being gaily interrogated about the state of his affairs, said, that they were in a more poetical posture than formerly.Johnson, Life of Thomson.

2. Splendidly; beautifully.

*Barret.*Some shew their gaily gilded trim
Quick glancing to the sun.*Gray, Ode I.*3. In the north of England, in good health and spirits; often also used with well; as, I am gaily well, which indeed is an old form of speech. See the next sense.

4. Very; in a great degree.

For this purpose, whereof we now write, this would have served gaily well.Willson, Arte of Rhetorike, (1553,) fol. 111. a.GAIN.† n. s. [gain, French. Dr. Johnson. — Su. Goph. gagh, emolument; Teut. gwin, gain, gewinnen, to make gain; Sax. pepinnan, to acquire.]

1. Profit; advantage: contrary to loss.

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ.*Phil. iii. 7.*Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general content.*Raleigh, Essays.*Havock and spoil, and ruin are my gain.*Milton, P. L.*It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains; for light gains make heavy purses; for light guins come thick, whereas great come but now and then.*Bacon, Essays.*This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains.*Temple.*Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,

Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well.

*Dryden.*Folly fights for kings or dives for gain.Pope.

2. Interest; lucrative views.

That, sir, which serves for gain,

And follows but for form,

Will pack, when it begins to rain,

And leave thee in the storm.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. Unlawful advantage.

Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?*2 Cor. xii. 17.*If pride, if envy, if lust of gain,

If mad ambition in thy bosom reign,

Thou boast'st, alas! thy sober sense in vain.

Fitzgerald.

4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.

To GAIN. v. a. [gagner, French.]

1. To obtain as profit or advantage.

Egypt became a gained ground by the muddy and limeous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land.*Brown, Vulg. Err.*What reinforcement we may gain from hope.Milton, P. L.

2. To win; not to lose.

A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king.Milton, P. L.

3. To have the overplus in comparative computation.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that.Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

4. To obtain; to procure; to receive.

I acceptance found, which gain'd

This answer from the gracious voice divine.

*Milton, P. L.*That side some small reflection gains

Of glimmering air, less vex'd with tempest loud.

*Milton, P. L.*If such a tradition were endeavour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment;

but much more difficult to conceive how ever it should come to be universally propagated.

*Tillotson, Sermons.*For fame with toil we gain, but lose with ease,

Sure some to vex, but never all to please.

Pope.

5. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.

I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king is gone from me.Dan. ii. 8.

6. To obtain whatever, good or bad.

Ye should not have loosed from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss.Acts, xxvii. 21.

7. To win against opposition.

They who were sent to the other pass, after a short resistance, gained it.Clarendon.

Fat fees from the defendant Umbrian draws,

And only gains the wealthy client's cause.*Dryden, Pers.*O love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,

And make my tongue victorious as her eyes.

Pope.

8. To draw into any interest or party.

Come, with presents, laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court.Dryden, Virg.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,

No woman does it better than yourself:

If you gain him, I shall comply of course.A. Philips.

9. To obtain as a wooer.

He never shall find out fit mate, but such

As some misfortune brings him, or mistake,

Or whom he wishes most shall seldom *gain*Through her perverseness, but shall see her gain'd

By a far worse.

Milton, P. L.

10. To reach; to attain.

The West still glimmers with some streaks of day:

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,

To gain the timely inn.*Shakespeare, Macbeth.*Death was the post, which I almost did gain:

Shall I once more be tost into the main?

Waller.

Sun! sound his praise

In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,

And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st.*Milton, P. L.*We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it.*Addison on Italy.*Thus sav'd from death, they gain the Phœstian shores,

With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars.

Pope, Odyssey.

11. To GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.

The court of Hanover should have endeavour'd to gain over those who were represented as their enemies.*Swift.*To GAIN. v. n.

1. To grow rich; to have advantage; to be advanced in interest or happiness.

Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions.Ezek. xxii. 12.

2. To encroach; to come forward by degrees: with on.

When watchful herons leave their wat'ry stand,

And mounting upward with erected flight,

Gain on the skies, and soar above the sight.*Dryden, Virg.*So on the land while here the ocean gains,

In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains.

Pope.

3. To get ground; to prevail against: with on.

The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice itself.Addison.

4. To obtain influence with: with on.

My good behaviour had gained so far on the emperor, that I began to conceive hopes of liberty.*Swift.*GAIN. adj. [an old word now out of use.] Handy; ready; dexterous.*Preface to the Accidence.GA'INABLE. [Fr. gaignable.] Capable of being gained.*Sherwood.GA'INAGE. n. s. [old Fr. gaignage; low Lat. gainagium, wainagium.] In our old writers, the profit that comes by the tillage of land, held by the baser kind of sokemen and villains.*Cowel.*The gainage of the ground in a great shireN^o old apparel that place.P. Plowman's Creed, (1550.)

GA'INER. n. s. [from gain] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a good conscience, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as seeing, if the composition be overhauled, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath. Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer. Denham, Sophy.
He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss. L'Estrange.

By trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of other countries as of our own nation. Addison, Freeholder.

GA'INFUL. † adj. [gain and full.]

1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. South.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.

The statute of 34th of Hen. 8. c. 38. intending to mar the Romish market of gainful dispensations, and injurious prohibitions, professeth to allow all marriages that are not prohibited by God's law. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, Add.

Nor knows he merchants' gainful care, Dryden, Horace.
Maro's muse commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, nor wholly bent
On what is gainful; sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels. Philips.

GA'INFULLY. adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS. n. s. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING. n. s. ['gainst and give.] The same as misgiving; a giving against: as gainsaying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting. Hunmer.

It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gaingiving as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

GA'INGLESS. † adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

So absolutely gainless to himself in his vilest capacity.

Hammond, Works, iv. 514.

It is a strange folly thus to pursue what is so utterly gainless.

Whole Duty of Man, ch. 6. § 14.

GA'INGLESSNESS. n. s. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of the work; miners buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged: no more is the insatiable miser. Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY. † adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously. Out of use.

She laid her child, as gainly as she could, in some fresh leaves and grass. More, Conj. Gabb. p. 133.

To GA'INSAÏ. v. a. ['gainst and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which gainsay one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker.

To facile then; thou didst not much gainsay;

Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton, P. J.

2. To deny any thing.

I never heard yet
That any of those bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

GA'INSAYER. n. s. [from gainsay.] Opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainsayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands. Hooker.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainsayers of

VOL. II.

Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people. Hooker.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainsayers. Hammond.

Others sought themselves a name by being his gainsayers, but failed of their purpose. Fell.

GA'INSAYING.  n. s.* [from gainsay.] Opposition.

They have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. St. Jude, ver. 11.

'GAINST. prep. [for against.] See AGAINST.

Treble, ye nations, who, secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms, that 'gainst ourselves we bore. Dryden

To GA'INSTAND. † v. a. ['gainst and stand.] To withstand; to oppose; to resist. A proper word, but not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Sidney. But, it may be added, this was evidently an established word, as it is found in the dictionaries of Huloet and Barret. Wicliffe also had long before employed it, in the form of aghenstonde, i. e. against and stand.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Sidney.

In Sodome was none found that did gainstande that furious and beastly multitude, which did compass about and besiege the house of Lot. Knight, Tr. of Truth, (1580.) fol. 80. b.

To GA'INSTRIVE.  v. a.* ['gainst and strive.] To withstand; to oppose.

The Fates gainstrive us not

Grimoald, in Senegas and Sonettes, pr. by Tottel, (1557.)

To GA'INSTRIVE.  v. n.* To make resistance.

On the spoile of women he doth live,
Whose bodies chaste, whenever in his powre,
He may them catch, unable to gainstrive,
He with his shamefull lust doth first deflowre,
And afterwarde themselves doth cruelly devowre.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 12.

GA'IRISH. † adj. So^d Dr. Johnson chooses to write the word garish, i. e. showy, splendid, &c. as well as its descendant garishness, gairichness. But neither Ascham, nor Shakspeare, nor Taylor, nor Milton, nor South, whom he cites, prefer this method of writing it. Other authors also, whom I shall cite, read garish. See therefore, GARISH, GARISHLY, and GARISHNESS.

GAIT. † n. s. [gat, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—Icek gata, a way, a road, from gau, to go. In the north of England, gate, or gait, is common for a path, passage, or road. Gate is the old way of writing this word.

1. A way: as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;

Be not denied access, stand at her door, Shakspeare.

With this field-dew consecrate,

Every fairy take his gait;

And each several chamber bless,

Through this palace with sweet peace.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

2. March; walk; progress.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,

And all her vain allurements did forsake. Spenser, F. Q.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,

That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

This palpable gross play hath well beguill'd

The heavy gait of night. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes, I know her by her gait. Shakspeare.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion.

Clarendon.

G A L

A third, who by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell. Milton, P. L.
Leviathans
Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait. Milton, P. L.
I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait. Milton, P. L.

GA'ITED.* adj. [from gait.] Having a particular gait, or method of walking.

You must send the ass upon the horse, for he is slow-gaited.
Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

And heavy-gaited toads lie in their way. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

GA'ITERS.* n. s. pl. [Fr. guêtres.] A kind of spatterdash. Both words are modern.

GALA.* n. s. [Spanish, finery; Ital. mirth.] A word which has been introduced into our language in modern times: as, a gala-day; that is, any day of show and festivity.

GALA'GE.† n. s. [old Fr. galoge.] A shepherd's clog; a wooden shoe. Not now in use. See GA-LOCHE.

My heartblood is well nigh frore, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

GALA'NGAL. n. s. [galange, French.] A medicinal root. The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste. Hill.

GALA'TIANS.* n. s. pl. [from Galatia, a province of Asia Minor.] Persons descended from the Gauls who invaded Greece, and settled in Lower Asia; to whom St. Paul addressed an Epistle.

O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth. Gal. iii. 1.

GA'LAXY.† n. s. [γαλαξία, Gr. galaxie, Fr. Chaucer uses this word.]

1. The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton, P. L.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleveland.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley.

2. Any splendid assemblage of persons or things.

There are stars of several magnitudes; some goodly and great ones, that move in orbs of their own; others small and scarce visible in the galaxy of the church; but all are stars, and no star is without some light. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 45.

Often has my mind hung with fondness and admiration over the crowded, yet clear and luminous, galaxies of imagery, diffused through the works of Bishop Taylor.

Dr. Parr, Tracts by Warburton, &c. p. 151.

GALBANUM.† n. s. [Sax. zalbannum; Gr. χαλβάνη, from the Heb. chalbenah.] A resinous gum.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil, as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant.

G A L

Hill, Materia Medica.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ecclus. xxiv. 15.

GALE.† n. s. [gahling, hasty, sudden, Germ. Dr. Johnson. — Icel. gola, a cold air; haf-gola, a gale or blast from the sea. Serenius. — Erse, gal, a blast of wind. It may perhaps be allied to the Su. Goth. and Icel. gala, to sing, or rather to bawl; to emit a kind of howl. This application of noise to the wind we still use; as, the wind sings, or howls.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale

Blows you to Padua here from old Verona? Shakspeare.

Winds

Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fan'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton, P. R.

Fresh gales and gentle air. Milton, P. L.

Unbrib'd green retreats,

Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

TO GALE.* v. n. [from the noun.]

1. In naval language, when two ships are near one another at sea, and there being but little wind blowing, one feels more of it than another, they say, the ship gales away from the other. Chambers.

2. To sing. [Sax. zalan, literally to sing.] Obsolete, except as far as it concerns nightingale.

In Chaucer's Court of Love, the nightingale is said to crie and gale: hence its name, nightgale, or nightingale. Tyrwhit on Chaucer.

GALE.* n. s. A plant, which grows upon bogs in many parts of England.

Gale from the bog shall yield Arabian balm,

And the grey willow wave a golden pilm. Crabbe, Birth of Flattery.

GA'LEATED. adj. [galvatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galvated eschinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing. Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkshood.

GALE'NICAL.* } adj. [from Galen, the ancient physician. Fr. Galenique.] Denoting the manner of considering and treating diseases according to the principles of Galen. Galenick is more frequently used as contradistinguished from chymical. See GALENISM.

He has been a packhorse in the practical and old Galenical way of physick. Life of A. Wood, p. 379.

GA'LENISM.* n. s. [Fr. Galenisme.] The doctrine of Galen.

Paracelsus, and after him Van Helmont, altered the whole body of medicine; exploded Galenism, and the whole Periprætic doctrine; and rendered medicine almost wholly chymical. Chambers.

GA'LENIST.* n. s. A physician that, in his way of practice, follows the method of Galen. Bullockar.

Let men dispute whether thou breathe or no;

Only in this be no Galenist: to make Courts' hot ambitious wholesome, do not take

A dram of country's dunness; do not add

Correctives, but, as chymiques, purge the bad.

Donne, Poems, p. 147.

G A L

GALERY'ULATE. adj. [from galerus, Latin.] Covered as with a hat.

GALILE'AN.* n. s. [from the province of Galilee, in Judea.]

1. A native or inhabitant of Galilee.

Thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto.

St. Luke, xiv. 70.

Are not all these which speak Galileans?

Acts, ii. 7.

2. One of a sect among the ancient Jews, denominated from Judas, or Theudas; a native of Gaulan in Upper Galilee; which taught doctrines contrary to subjection to the Roman empire.

There were present at that season some that told him of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices.

St. Luke, xiii. 1.

GA'LIOT. See GALLIOT.

GALL. n. s. [zeala, Sax. galle, Dutch.]

1. The bile; an animal juice; remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers!

Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall.

Shakespeare.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies. It's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet savour.

Harvey.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar.

Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Poison be their drink!

Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste!

Shakespeare.

She still insults and you must still adore;

Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.

Dryden, Juv.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people.

Spenser on Ireland.

5. Anger; bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight and shuns the blow.

Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [from the verb.]

This is the fatallest wound: as much superiour to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch.

Gov. of Tonguc.

7. [from galla.]

Galls or galnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have Oriental and European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astrigent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls: for all those excrescencies which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though less firm in their texture.

G A L

Will.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed.

Ray on the Creation.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them.

Derham.

To GALL. v. a. [galler, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point

With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;

But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.

Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things.

Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,

And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,

Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain.

Pope, Iliad.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;

And that my state being gall'd with my expence,

I seek to heal it only by his wealth.

Shakespeare.

If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses.

Ray on the Creation.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book.

Hooker.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we spy that it galleth them.

Hooker.

When I shew justice,

I pity those I do not know;

Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall.

Shakespeare.

All studies here I solemnly defy,

Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it.

Tillotson.

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them.

Sidney.

Light demilances from afar they throw,

Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe.

Dryden, Æn.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows.

Addison.

To GALL. v. n. To fret.

I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.

Shakespeare.

GA'LLANT.* adj. [galant, French, from gala, fine dress, Spanish.

G A L

The gallant garnishing, and the beautiful setting forth of it, [the city.] Robinson, Tr. of More's Utopia, (1551.) ii. 2.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gally with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. Is. xxxiii. 21.

The gay, the wise, the gallant, and the grave, Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Waller.

In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes. Gray, The Banl.

2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney.

But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth. Shakespeare.

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight. Digby on the Soul.

3. Fine; noble; specious.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;

But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,

Make gallant shew and promise of their mettle. Shakespeare.

4. Courty with respect to ladies.

He discoursed, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress. Clarendon.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,

The gay troops begin

In gallant thought to plume their painted wings. Thomson.

GA'LLANT.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.

The new proclamation.

— What is't for?

— The reformation of our travel'd gallants,

That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor. Shakespeare.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastius. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,

Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly spright. Dryden.

Gallants, look to't, you say there are no sprights;

But I'll come dance about your beds at nights. Dryden.

2. A brave, high-spirited, magnanimous man.

Dr. Johnson overpasses this meaning.

He shall recount his worthies, [in the margin, gallants.]

Nahum, ii. 5.

The mighty [in the margin, gallants] are spoiled.

Zech. xi. 2.

Those that entered France were resisted by Martel and thirty thousand French gallants. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 269.

3. A whoremaster, who carresses women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant.

Addison, Spect.

4. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage.

In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

To GALLA'NT.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To pay attention to the ladies.

At their first coming to town I was in a manner obliged to gallant them to the play. The World, No. 164.

GA'LLANTLY.† adv. [from gallant.]

1. Gayly; splendidly.

The market, being in center of the town, is gallantly and regularly built. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 40.

The brave imposture gallantly to dress. Beaumont, Psyche, xv. 267.

2. Bravely; nobly; generously.

You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman. Swift.

GA'LLANTNESS.* n. s. [from gallant.] Elegance; completeness in respect of some acquired qualification.

Hulnot.

From the Italian he will borrow his reservedness, not his jealousy and humour of revenge; from the French his horsemanship, and gallantness that way, with his confidence, and nothing else. Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 190.

GA'LLANTRY.† n. s. [gallanterie, French.]

1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery;

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all

The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.

dangling at their ears by half dozens. Parthenia Sacra, (1633.) p. 191.

2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.

That gallantry and greatness of soul, that constant garb of justice. More, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 373.

The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature. Glanville, Sceps. Preface.

Had we any spark of true gallantry and bravery of mind in us, we should despise all other kinds of life but this. Scott, Christian Life, i. 3.

3. A number of gallants.

Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to day. Shakespeare.

4. Courtship; refined address to women.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,

Invent new arts to make their charmers kind. Glanville.

That which we call gallantry to women, seems to be the heroic virtue of private persons; and there never breathed one man, who did not, in that part of his days wherein he was recommending himself to his mistress, do something beyond his ordinary course of life. Tuller, No. 94.

5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins. Swift.

GA'LLASS. n. s. [galace, French.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Dict.

My father hath no less Than three great argosies, besides two gallasses, And twelve tight gallies. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten gallasses. Addison on Italy.

GALLE'ON. n. s. [gallion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk or set on fire by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh, Apology.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof gallasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles. Bacon, War with Spain.

GA'LLERY.† n. s. [gallerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room. Dr. Johnson. Skinner deduces it from allerie, aller, i. e. to walk: Serenius, from the Su. Goth. galler, cancelli, i. e. balusters, or rails to compass in.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they become a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow. Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers, And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Spenser.

Your gallery

Have we pass'd through, not without much content.

Shakespeare.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas. Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known.

Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Graunt.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends.

Pope.

- GA'LLETYLE. n. s. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.

Make a compound body of glass and galletyle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

- GA'LLY. † n. s. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived, as some think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλέωτης, the sword-fish; and others from galleon, expressing in Syriack men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass, galleon, galliot. Dr. Johnson. — The old French language has galoie or galée for this word. The barbarous Greek γαλάα, or γαλία, is also a galley, which Meursius derives from the Ital. galea. The Goth. galeide is the same. It is most probable that the Greek γαλῆς, or γαλέη, a kind of fish, whence the γαλέωτης, or sword-fish, already mentioned, occasioned, from some resemblance to it, the transfer of the name to this kind of vessel.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, gallees, barks and brigandines. Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of gallees, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean. Bacon, New Atlantis.

Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Less in an open boat, or kind of galley. Raleigh, Hist.

On oozy ground his gallees moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the gallees for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure. South.

- GA'LLYFOIST.  n. s.* [from galley, and foist, a light vessel. See FOIST. Or it may be a corruption of the Span. gala, (joined to foist), signifying finery, show, pomp; galla, Ital. mirth, cheer.] A barge of state; and by our old authors applied to the lord mayor of London's barge.

He built, of cedar, barges or gallyfoists, their sterns being set with pearl and precious stone.

Shakewill on Providence, p. 409.

No plays, nor gallyfoists, no strange ambassadors to run and wonder at. Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit without Money.

He has performed such a matter, wench, that if I live, next year I'll have him captain of the gallyfoist, or I'll wait my will.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Kn. of the Burnt Pestle.

Out of my doors, you sons of noise and tumult, begot on an ill May-day, or when the gally-foist is aloft to Westminster!

B. Jonson, Epicure.

- GA'LLY-SLAVE. n. s. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the gallees.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor man, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy.

Bp. Bramhall.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission. Decay of Piety.

The surges gently dash against the shore,

Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar. Garth.

- GA'LLIARD.  adj.* [Fr. gaillard; which under the substantive gaillard, (for he notices not the adjective, which however is the more ancient word,) Dr. Johnson says, is imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius, and gay. The Spanish and Italian have the same adjective, viz. gagliardo, and gallardo, meaning brisk, frolic, &c. Whence, no doubt, the name of the dance, gagliarda, and gallarda, the latter of which has been defined "especie de danza y tañido de la escuela española, así llamada por ser muy ayrosa." Dicc. de la Leng. Castell. Acad. Espan. The Iceland. giacela, to allure, to entice, may perhaps be thought the original of gaillard. Certain it is, that the Scotch use galliard for wanton, which Dr. Jamieson deduces from the Sax. gal, lascivious, not without referring also to the northern verb.] Brisk; gay; lively; nimble.

Gaillard he was, as goldfinch in the shawe.

Chaucer, Coke's Tale.

What a thing to laugh at, to see a judge or serjeant at the law in a short coat garded and pounced after the galiarde fashion!

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 91.

- GA'LLIARD. † n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himself. Cleveland.

2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. [Span. gallarda; Ital. gagliarda. It is said to have consisted of five particular steps; and Sir John Davies, who calls it "a swift and wandering dance" as well as "a gallant dance betraying a spirit and virtue, masculine," bestows no less than fourteen lines in a description of this once favourite performance. Orchest. 1599. The cinque passi in gagliarda form no less than three distinctions in the Ballarino of F. C. da Sermoneta, Venet. 1581.] It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

There's nought in France

That can be with a nimble galliard won:

You cannot revel into dukedoms there. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards.

Bacon.

The triple's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard-time and measure-time are in the melody of one dance. Bacon.

- GALLIARISE. n. s. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watry sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown, Rel. Med.

GALLIARDNESS.* n. s. [from galliard.] Gaiety; cheerfulness.

His rest failed him, his countenance changed, his sprightly pleasance and galliardness abated.

Gayton on D. Quir. p. 206.

GALLICAN.* } adj. [Lat. Galicus; old French, GALLICK. } Gallique.] French.

Seditious documents — they have always impugned, for the defence and preservation of the Gallican regalities and liberties.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 263.

There was a time when the Gallican church understood her own liberty, and boldly asserted it.

Bp. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

She came

Rob'd in the Gallick loom's extraneous twine.

Shenstone, El. xviii.

GALLICISM. n. s. [gallicisme, French; from Gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech.

Felton on the Classics.

GALLIGASKINS. f. n. s. pl. [caligæ Gallo-Vasconum. Skinner.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language, Dr. Johnson says. The word, however, is in our old lexicography, without any ludicrous application. It is in Sherwood's Dict. 1632, and is explained by Cotgrave, under guer-guesses, viz. "great Gascon or Spanish hose."

My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue,
An horrid chasm disclose.

Philips.

I have sent my Coventry-blue waistcoat to the dyers, and bespoke me a brand-new pair of galligaskins to be made of beggar's velvet.

The Student, ii. 258.

GALLIMATTIA.* f. n. s. [Fr. galimatias, "gibberish, fustian language, pedlars' French." Cotgrave.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAUFREY.* f. n. s. [galimafrée, French.]

1. A hodge-podge, or hash of several sorts of broken meat: a medley.

Hanmer.

Another dish hath in it a loin of lamb, or kid, with a hard egg; another containeth a gallimaufrey of apples, nuts, figges, almonds, &c. dressed with wine.

Purchas, Pilgrim. (1617,) p. 222.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley.

They have made our English tongue a gallimaufrey, or hodge-podge of all other speeches.

Epist. Pref. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

They have a dance, which the wenches say is a gallimaufrey of gambols, because they are not in't. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The painter who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere gallimaufrey of his work.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. It is used by Shakspeare ludicrously of a woman.

Sir John affects thy wife.

— Why, sir, my wife is not young.

— He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor;

He loves thy gallimaufrey, friend.

Shakspeare.

GALLINA'CEOUS.* adj. [Lat. gallinaceus.] Denoting birds of the pheasant kind.

Spallanzani has remarked a circumstantial resemblance between the stomachs of gallinaceous fowls and the structure of corn-mills.

Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 15.

GALLIOT.* f. n. s. [galiotte, French.] A little galley, or sort of brigantine, built very slight, and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three patereroes. It can both sail and row; and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar.

Dict.

Barbarossa departing out of Hellespontos with eighty galleys, and certain galliois, shaped his course towards Italy.

Knolles.

GALLIPOT. n. s. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner. The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gallypot, is a fine painted pot.] A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipots, that had on the outsides apes, owls, and satyrs; but within, precious drugs.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

Hera phials in nice discipline are set;

There gallipots are rang'd in alphabet.

Garth.

Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man.

Spectator.

Thou that do'st Æsculapius deride,

And o'er his gallipots in triumph ride.

Fenton.

GALLIVAT.* n. s. [from galley.] A sort of small vessel used on the Malabar coast; a row-boat in India.

GALL-LESS.* adj. [gall and less.] Without gall or bitterness Saltless and gall-less be thy curse!

Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 39.

Ah! mild and gall-less dove,

Which dost the pure and candid dwellings love.

Cowley, on the Rest. of K. Ch. II.

A dove, a meek and gall-less creature.

Wh. Duty of Man, ch. 17. § 19.

GALLON.* f. n. s. [galo, low Latin, Dr. Johnson. — Our word is the old French, gallon. V. Lacombe. And that perhaps may be, by transposition, from the Lat. lagenæ. V. Du Cange in GALO. The Welsh galwyn is the same.] A liquid measure of four quarts.

Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopped.

Wiseman, Surg.

GALLO'ON.* f. n. s. [galon, French; perhaps from the Span. gala, finery.] A kind of close lace, made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

Oh! for a whip,

To make him galloon-laces;

I'll have a coach-whip.

Boam, and Fl. Philaster.

For some years last past the use of gold and silver galloon upon hats has been almost universal.

Tatler, No. 270.

TO GALLOP.* v. n. [galoper, French. Derived by all the etymologists, after Budæus, from καλπαζειν; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed. Dr. Johnson. — From the Su. Goth. leopa, to run, and the M. Goth. prefix ga. Serenius.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear

The galloping of horse: who was't came by

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

His steeds will be restrained,

But gallop lively down the western hill.

Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain

His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,

When halt surpris'd, and fearing to be seen,

The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen.

Dryden, Virg.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatn'd a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them.

Sidney.

They gan espy

An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Spenser, F. Q.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun

Gallops the zodiack in his glistering coach. Tit. Andronicus.
Whom doth time gallop withal?

— With a thief to the gallows. Shakespeare, As you like it.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GALLOP. n. s. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in, the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

Farrier's Dict.

GALLOPER. n. s. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

3. A light carriage for a small piece of ordnance.

GALLOPIN. n. s. [old Fr. gallopin, "an under cook or scullion in monasteries." Cotgrave.] A servant for the kitchen. Obsolete.

Dyot for the kytchen and gallopin. Archæolog. xv. 7.

To GALLOW. v. a. [aǧælpan, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies

Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

GALLOWAY. n. s. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

Spare yourself, lest you bejude the good galloway.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

If any member shall purchase a horse for his own riding above fourteen hands and an half in height, that horse shall forthwith be sold, a Scotch galloway bought in its stead for him, and the overplus of the money shall treat the club.

Guardian, No. 91.

GALLOWGLASS. n. s. An ancient Irish foot-soldier.
Some think that it was a soldier also who served on horseback.

It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen they [the Irish] call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armatura; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corslet, before the corslet was used, or almost invented.

Spenser on Ireland.

The gallowglass useth a kind of pike for his weapon. These men are grim of countenance, tall of stature, big of limbe, lusty of body, well and strongly timbered.

Stanhurst, Descript. of Ireland, ch. 8.

A puissant and mighty pow'r

Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,

Is marching hitherward in proud array.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P.II.

GALLOW. n. s. [It is used by some in the singular;
GALLWS. but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowses. Galgā, Gothick;

zealga, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus, furca, Latin; others from גלגל high; others from gallu, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from aǧælpan; the gallows, being the great object of legal terrour.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows:
in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O,
there were desolation of guilers and gallowses.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Shakespeare, Tempest.

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Hayward.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wasps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

2. A wretch that deserves the gallows.

Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy.

— Ay, and a shrew'd unhappy gallows too. Shakespeare.

GALLOWSFREE. adj. [gallowes and free.] Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowsfree by my consent,
And nothing suffer, since he nothing meant. Dryden.

GALLOWTREE. n. s. [gallowes and tree.] The tree of terroure; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more defame,

On gallowtrees, in honour of his dearest dame. Spenser, F. Q.

A Scot, when from the gallowtree got loose,
Drops into Styx, and turns a soland goose. Cleaveland.

GALLY. n. s. [from gall.] Of gall; bitter as gall.
Huloch.

He abhorreth all gally and bitter drinckes of sin.

Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 246.

GALLY-WORM. n. s. An insect, often found in our gardens, with a long body, composed of many rings, and furnished with a great number of feet; which,
when touched, has the power of rolling itself up into a ball.

GALOCHE. n. s. [French.] A wooden shoe or patten, made all of a piece without any latchet or tye of leather, and worn by the poor clown in winter. Cotgrave. The use of this shoe passed from the Gauls to the Romans, whence Gallicæ calones. Roquefort. The word is in our old lexicography for a kind of shoe, and is used by Chaucer. It afterwards became galloscho, or go- loscho, and is now pronounced and sometimes written galosh. Galoshes are now understood to be shoes, without buckles or straps, made to wear over other shoes in wet weather.

Ne were worthy to unboole his galoches. Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

To all this must be added the vast skill that is required in tendering a visit, with approved and modish accuracy; that it be done punctually — that the galoshes be left in their true and proper place — that the footboy be expert in observing his tutored distance! Echard, Observ. Cont. Clergy, p. 158.

GALSOME. adj. [from gall.] Angry; malignant.

Such accusations — any vulgar man who understands the language, at the first sight, may cry out upon, and condemn both of galsome bitterness and of wilful fraud and falsehood.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633,) p. 210.

GALVANICK. adj. Denoting the power of Galvanism. See GALVANISM.

All the Galvanic combinations, analogous to the new apparatus of Mr. Volta, which have been heretofore described by experimentalists, consist (as far as my knowledge extends) of series, containing at least two metallic substances, or one metal and charcoal, and a stratum of fluids; and it has been generally supposed, that their agencies are, in some measure, connected with the different powers of the metals to conduct electricity; but I have found, that an accumulation of Galvanic influence, exactly similar to the accumulation in the common pile, may be produced by the arrangement of single metallic plates or arcs, with different strata of fluids.

Davy, Phil. Transact. 1801, P. II. art. xx.

GA'LVANISM.* n. s. [so called from Galvani, celebrated for the experiments which he made in this branch of philosophy.] The action of metallic substances.

Although galvanism and electricity may be considered as the same principles, still, according to the present state of our knowledge, they may be thus distinguished. Galvanism is the portion of electricity, which forms a component part of the conducting body, in the act of undergoing a change in its capacity, from a greater to a lesser state; while electricity is the result of a temporary change in non-conducting bodies, inasmuch that their capacities become, by attrition, momentarily increased. Wilkinson, Elem. of Galvanism, (1804,) p. 302.

To GA'LVANIZE.* v. a. [from galvanism.] To affect by the power of galvanism.

I have tried galvanism in two cases of palsy, both hemiplegia, one a young lady, aged 20, the other a gentleman, aged 25; and, though neither of them were cured, they both received benefit, particularly the gentleman. After being galvanized for twenty minutes, they felt a glowing warmth the remainder of the day. The apparatus I used was a pile of twenty-four pair of plates, of five inches diameter.

Carpue on Electr. and Galvanism, (1803,) p. 106.

GALVANO'METER.* n. s. A measure for ascertaining the power of Galvanick operations.

GAMA'SHES.* n. s. pl. Short spatterdashes worn by ploughmen. North. Grose.

He wore a little brown capouch, girt very near to his body with a white towel; also a pair of breeches and gamashoes of the same coloured cloth, and on his head a clay-coloured cap; his gamashoes were lifted up half the leg.

Shalton, Tr. of D. Quixote, iv. 1.

GAMBA'DOES.† n. s. pl. [gamba, Ital. a leg.] Spatterdashes; boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

It has been my custom any time these sixteen years, as all the parish can testify, to ride in gambadoes.

Reasons of Mr. Bays changing his Religion, (1688,) Pref.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambadoes once a week.

Dennis's Letters.

To GA'MBLE.* v. n. To play extravagantly for money. A word of contempt. See GAMBLER.

She held out against all the obligations of fashion, and allurements of example; she had an inbred abhorrence of gambling.

Looker-on, No. 21.

GA'MBLER. n. s. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamester.] A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game and cheat them.

GA'MBOGE. n. s.

'Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America, and the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia.

Hill.

To GA'MBOL.† v. n. [Fr. gambiller, Dr. Johnson from Skinner. — Cotgrave renders gambiller, merely, "to wag the legs in sitting, as children use to do;" but gambader, "to turn heels over head, to make many gambols." Our own word was formerly gambald. "To fetch gambaldes, Fr. gambader, Lat. crura in sublime jactare. Gambalding horses, being full of prauisings or skipplings." Huloch. Barret also gives gambald for gambol in his dictionary. One "that can gambald or dance feat."

Barklay's Egloges, 1570. Egl. 2. The origin is evidently the Ital. gamba, the leg.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolics.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,
Gamboll'd before them.

Milton, P. L.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,
Gamboll'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green.

Dryden.

The monsters of the flood

Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,

And heavy whales in aukward measures play.

Pope.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madness

'That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,'

And I the matter will record, which madness

Would gambol from.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

GA'MBOL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that wou'd be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols.

L'Estrange.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,

And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god.

Dryden.

2. A frolic; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambols,

With such unsufferable rambles?

Hudibras.

GA'MBREL. n. s. [from gamba, gambarella, Italian.]

The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back.

Grew.

To GA'MBREL.* v. a. [from gamba.] To tie by the leg.

Lay by your scorn and pride, they're scurvy qualities,
And meet me, or I'll box you while I have you,
And carry you gambrell'd thither like a mutton.

Beaumont and Fl. Nice Valour.

GAME.† n. s. [gaman, Iceland. a jest; gaman, Goth. delight, joy.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game.

Shakespeare.

Let my son Martin disport himself at any game truly antique.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scriblerus.

2. Jest; opposed to earnest or seriousness.

Then on her head they set a garland green,

And crown'd her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game.

Spenser.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,

On my refusal to distress me more;

Or make a game of my calamities.

Milton, S. A.

4. A single match at play.

It is very wonderful to see persons of the best sense passing away a dozen hours together in shuffling and dividing a pack of cards, with no other conversation but what is made up of a few game phrases.

Addison, Spect. No. 93.

There is no man of sense and honesty, but must see and own, whether he understands the game or not, that it is an evident folly for any people, instead of prosecuting the old honest methods of industry and frugality, to sit down to a publick gaming-table, and play off their money one to another.

Bp. Berkeley, Ess. towards prev. the Ruin of Gr. Brit.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our time we stand,

And play the game into each other's hand.

Dryden.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other till they see an end of this.

Temple.

7. Field sports: as, the chace, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,

Under the colour of his usual game,

He shall here find his friends with horse and men,

To set him free from his captivity.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

What arms to use, or nets to frame }
Wild beasts to combat, or to tame, }
With all the myst'ries of that game. } Waller.
Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game, spied a company of bustards and cranes. L'Estrange.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton, P. L.

There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not which to follow. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chase. Arbuthnot.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game. Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman hounds that barb'rous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Pope.
Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
For, grow but wise, you rob me of my game. Young.

9. Solemn contests, exhibited as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Caesar is returning. Shakspeare.
Milo, when entering the Olympick game,
With a huge ox upon his shoulders came. Denham.

To GAME.† v. n. [gaman, Sax.]

1. To play at any sport.
2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.
Covetousness will tempt thee to cheat and cozen in gaming.

Wh. Duty of Man, ch. 9. § 7.
Gaming for any thing considerable is founded upon avarice;
and is, if not a direct, yet, what is much worse, a deliberate violation of the tenth commandment.

Detany, Serm. on Gaming.

GA'MECK. n. s. [game and 'cock.] A cock bred to fight.

They manage the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit. Locke.

GAME-EGG. n. s. [game and egg.] Eggs from which fighting cocks are bred.

Thus boys hatch game-eggs under birds of prey,
To make the fowl more furious for the fray. Garth.

GA'MEKEEPER. n. s. [game and keep.] A person who looks after game, and sees it is not destroyed.

GAME-LEG. n. s. [a corruption, according to Mr.
Malone, of the British gam, or cam, crooked, and leg.] A lame leg. Used in the north of England.

GA'MESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolicsome; gay;
sportive; playful; sportful.

Geron, though old, yet gamesome, kept one end with Cosma.
Sidney.

I am not gamesome; I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The gamesome wind among her tresses plays,
And curl'eth up those growing riches short. Fairfax.

This gamesome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained. Locke.

GA'MESOMENESS. n. s. [from gamesome.] Sportiveness; merriment.

GA'MESOMELY. adv. [from gamesome.] Merrily.

GA'MESTER. n. s. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.
A gamester, the greater master he is in his art, the worse man he is. Bacon.

Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;
The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
The whole estate. Dryden, Juv.

Could we look into the mind of a female gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattadores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves.

Addison, Guard. No. 120

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate;
What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels. Swift.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no super-riour. Law.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
The gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business strait. Bacon.

3. A merry frolicsome person.

You're a merry gamester,
My lord Sands. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

4. A prostitute. Not in use.

She's impudent, my lord,
And was a common gamester to the camp. Shakspeare.

GA'MING.* n. s. [from game. Sax. gaming.] The practice of gamesters.

I come, in the next place, to consider the ill consequences which gaming has on the bodies of our female adventurers. It is so ordered, that almost every thing which corrupts the soul, decays the body. Addison, Guard. No. 120.

Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind. Locke.

GA'MING-HOUSE.* n. s. A house where illegal sports are practised, and where gamesters carry on their employment.

The keeper of a gaming-house. Sherwood.
Gaming-houses are prohibited under severe penalties by several statutes. Chambers.

GA'MING-TABLE.* n. s. A table at which gamesters practise their art.

It is an evident folly for any people, instead of prosecuting the old honest methods of industry and frugality, to sit down to a publick gaming-table, and play off their money one to another. Bp. Berkeley, Essay, &c.

GA'MMER.† n. s. [of uncertain etymology; perhaps from grandmere, and therefore used commonly to old women. Dr. Johnson. — From good mother.
Ray. — From godmother, perhaps, [Sax. gemesæp,] like the contraction of gaffer from godfather; or from the Goth. gumma, a woman.] The compella-tion of a woman corresponding to gaffer: as,
Gammer Gurton's Needle; the name of an old play.

GA'MMON.† n. s.

1. The buttock of an hog salted and dried; the lower end of the stich. [Ital. gambone, from gamba;
and that perhaps from the Celt. gam, the ham or leg. Our own word was at first gambone.]

Then came halting Jone,
And brought a gambone
Of bacon that was ready. Skellon, Poems, p. 132.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold:
A rusty gammon of some sev'n years old. Dryden, Juv.

Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,
And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
That ere the first is out, the second stinks. Dryden, Pers.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The sounding gammon. Thomson, Autumn.

GA'MUT.† n. s. [gama, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Greek letter Γ, gamma, and ut, the name of a musical note. Guido Aretine distinguished the first note of his scale by the Greek letter, with a view, according to some, of shewing that the Greeks were the inventors of musick; but, as others think, of recording his own name by this, the initial letter of it.]

1. The first or gravest note in the modern or Guido's scale of musick.

2. The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort.

Shakspeare.

When by the gamut some musicians make

A perfect song, others will undertake,

By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:

Things simply good can never be unfit. Donne, Poems, p. 70.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,

That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;

In songs and airs express their martial fire,

Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire.

Addison.

GAN.† pret. of gin. [Sax. gynnian. Dr. Johnson gives gan as a contraction of began, "as gin of begin," but it is the regular pret. of the Saxon verb. Nor is gin a contraction. * See TO GIN.]

The noble knight gan feel

His vital force to faint.

Spenser.

TO GANCH.† v. a. [ganciare, from gancio, a hook, Italian; ganche, French. See TO GAUNCH.] To drop from a high place upon hooks by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Pocockius.

"Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis

"Gemunt onusti, vel sude trans sinum

"Luctantur actâ, pendulive

"Sanguineis trepidant in uncis."

Musæ Angl.

Take him away, ganch him, impale him.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

GA'NDER.† n. s. [gandja, Saxon; gans, old Fr. and German. See GANZA.] The male of the goose.

As deep drinketh the goose as the gander. Camden, Rem.

One gander will serve five geese. Mortimer, Husbandry.

TO GANG.† v. n. [Goth. gaggan, pronounced gagan; gangen, Dutch; ganzan, Saxon; gang, Scottish.] To go; to walk: an old word not now used, except ludicrously, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, still the common language of the north of England.

But let them gang alone, —

As they have brewe', so let them bear blame.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Your flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open.

Arbutnot.

GANG.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A street or road. [Goth. gagg, Sax. ganȝ.] It is retained, provincially, in gangway. See GANGWAY.

2. A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

Oh, you punderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mastiff fell a barking. L'Estrange.

Admitted in among the gang,

He acts and talks as they befriend him.

Prior.

GANG-DAYS.* n. s. pl. [Sax. gang-bazaj.] Days of perambulation. See GANGWEEK.

GANGHION. [French.] A kind of flower. Ainsworth.

GA'NGLION. n. s. [γᾱγγλῖον.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts.

Bonesetters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint. Wiseman.

TO GA'NGRENATE. v. a. [from gangrene.] To produce a gangrene; to mortify.

Parts canterized, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GANGRENE.† n. s. [gangrene, Fr. γᾱγγραινα, Gr. from γᾱῶ, to consume, to eat.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,

Waller.

By cutting hope, like a lopt limb, away.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene. Wiseman, Surgery.

If the substance of the soul is festered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: the inflammation will rage to all eternity. Addison, Spect.

TO GA'NGRENE. v. a. [gangrener, French; from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently, for that the few spirits that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Gangren'd members must be topp'd away,

Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay.

Dryden.

TO GANGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immedicable

Rankle and fester, and gangrene

To black mortification.

Milton, S. A.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out. Wiseman, Surgery.

GANGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hæmorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GANGWAY.† n. s.

1. A thoroughfare, or passage. Used in Kent, according to Grose. This is also the Sax. gang-pez. See GANG.

2. In a ship, the several ways or passages from one part of it to the other. Dict.

GA'NGWEEK.† n. s. [Sax. gang-puca.] Rogation week, when processions are made to lustrate the bounds of parishes. This name is still retained in the north of England.

It [hitch] serveth well to the decking tip of houses and banquetting-rooms, for places of pleasure, and for beautifying of streets in the crosse or gang-week, and such like.

Gerarde's Herbal, ed. Johnson, p. 1478.

GA'NTELOPE.†? n. s. [gantlet is only corrupted from GA'NTLET.] gantlope, gant, all; and loopen, to run, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Skinner deduces it from Ghent, and the Dutch verb, as if the punishment was first practised at that place. In later times, the word has been found in the shape of Ghent-loop, on this supposition, whether justly or not. See the Brit. Crit. vol. ii. p. 390. Dr. Johnson gives no instance of gantlope, but only of the corruption gantlet.] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,
Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,
To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryden, Juv.
He is fain to run the gantelope through the terrors and re-proaches of his own conscience.

Scott's Works, (Sermon in 1680,) ii. 29.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Locke.

GA'NZÁ. † n. s. [gansa, Spanish, a goose; old Fr.
and Germ. gans; Celt. ganz; Lat. ganza. Celt.
kan, white. V. Wachter, Gloss. Germ. in GANS.]
A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

What modest indignation can forbear stamping at the presumption of those men, who, as if Domingo Gonsales his engine, they had been mounted by his gansses from the moon to the empyreal heaven! Bp. Hall, Invis. World, § 7.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And avour strongly of the ganzas. Hudibras, ii. 3.

GAOL. † n. s. [gaol, Welsh; gaole, French. Dr.
Johnson. — The old Fr. is gaiole or gaole; low Lat.
gajola, from cavea or caveola, a cage for birds;
cavus, hollow, and thence any hole or place of confinement; gaol, a cavern, Su. Goth. The Picards call a bird-cage gayolle.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol.
Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakespeare, Timon.
If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

In the morning, usually, the thief is sent to the goal.
Beaumont and Fl. Martial Maud.

To GAOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison; to commit to gaol.

Gauling vagabonds was chargeable, pesterous, and of no open example. Bacon.

GA'OLDELIVERY. n. s. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth the aspiring soul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to all,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would it birth or gaoldelivery call. Davies.

These make a general gaoldelivery of souls, not for punishment. South.

GA'OLEN. n. s. [from gaol.] A keeper of a prison;
he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steeld gaoler is the friend of men. Shakespeare.

I know not how or why my surly gaoler,
Hard as his irons, and insolent as pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes,
Put off the brute. Dryden, Cleomenes.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and immured, till the death of her gaoler. Tatler.

GAP. † n. s. [from gap.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.

Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tusser, Husbandry.
Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel. Ezek. xiii. 5.

With terrors and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heaven; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep. Milton, P. L.

Bushes are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A breach.

The loss of that city concerned the Christian commonweal:
manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap
to all that side of Christendom. Knolles.

3. Any passage.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stopt. Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose,
it would make a great gap in your honour.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Nor is it any botch or gap in the works of nature. More.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were dissever'd. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous, in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.

8. To stop a GAP, is to escape by some mean shift:
alluding to hedges inended with dead bushes, till the quicksets will grow. Dr. Johnson. It is rather, perhaps, to patch up matters for a time.

His policy consists in setting traps,
In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps. Swift.

9. To stand in the GAP. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger;
a phrase borrowed from our version of the Scriptures: "He said, he would have destroyed them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the gap," Ps. cvi. 23. Comm. Pf. Where gap, however, means breach; which is the reading of the elder version of the Psalms. See also Ezek. xxii. 30.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this? Who would stand in the gap? Lesley.

GAP-TOOTHED. † adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth. So Dr. Johnson defines the word which Dryden supposed to be Chaucer's. But the true word is gal-toothed, with a very different meaning. See GAT-TOOTHED.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

To GAPE. † v. n. [geapan, yppan, zeyppan, to open,
Sax. whence also our chap. See To CHAP. Gape was at first written galp.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

See how he galpeth, lo, this drunken wight,
As though he wold us swallow anon right!
Hold close thy mouth, man! Chaucer, Mancip. Prol.
Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbutnot.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;
And at each leaf that stirs, each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find. Dryden.

G A P

- As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.
3. To desire earnestly; to crave: with for.
To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes. Denham.
To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?
And thou, who gap'st for my estate, draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryden, Pers.
4. With after.
As a servant earnestly desireth [in the margin, gapeth after] the shadow, and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work. Job, vii. 2.
What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping
after court-favour and preferments? L'Estrange.
5. With at.
Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopped in the church-yard. South.
6. To open in fissures or holes.
If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape
And bid me held my peace. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
The great horse-mussel, with the fine shell, doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.
The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vesicles. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.
7. To open with a breach.
The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.
That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbuthnot.
8. To open; to have an hiatus.
There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a cæsura in this poem. Dryden.
9. To make a noise with open throat.
And, if my muse can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Roscommon.
10. To stare with hope or expectation.
Others will gape t' anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foresee
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras.
11. To stare with wonder.
The king gaped and gazed upon her with open mouth. 1 Esdras, iv. 31.
Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawber; and the end of all this to cause laughter: a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden, Dufresnoy.
Where elevated o'er the gaping croud,
Clasp'd in the board the perj'ur'd head is bow'd,
Besides retreat. Gay, Trivia.
12. To stare irreverently.
They have gaped upon me with their mouth. Job, xvi. 10.
GA'PER. † n. s. [from gape.]
1. One who opens his mouth.
2. One who stares foolishly.
Guard, put by those gapers,
And gentlemen-ushers, see the gallery clear. Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.
3. One who longs or craves.

G A R

- Goods and livings were not small;
The gapers for them bare the world in hand
For ten year's space. Mir. for Mag. p. 370.
The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.
- GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.
- TO GAR. † v. a. [Iceland. giora, to make; Sy. Goth.
goera; Dan. gior.] To cause; to make. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, admitting however that it was still in use in Scotland. It is also still used in Lancashire, and other parts of the north of England.
Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lamb yorn?
Or is thy happipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorne. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
- GARB. † n. s. [garbe, French. Dr. Johnson. — Rather perhaps from the Ital. garbo, fineness, neatness.]
1. Dress; clothes; habit.
Thus Belial, with words cloth'd in reason's garb, Connell'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth. Milton, P. L.
He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange.
2. Fashion of dress.
In hose, and doublet,
The horse-boy's garb. Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.
Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their clothes, did wear. Denham.
3. Exterior appearance.
This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakespeare, F. Lear.
Some noblemen of that kingdom [Ireland] lived in a higher garb, and made greater expences, than the noblemen in England were able to do. Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 707.
4. In heraldry, a sheaf of wheat, or any other grain.
[Lat. garba.]
GAR'BAGE. † n. s. [garbear, Spanish. This etymology is very doubtful. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius deduces it from the Goth. gar, blood or gore, and bage, or bags, a little sack or bag.] The bowels;
the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.
The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb,
Longs after for the garbage. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
A flamm more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old Aruspicy and aug'ry,
That out of garbages of cattle
Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras.
Who, without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd? Roscommon.
When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage. Dryden.
- GA'RBAGED. * adj. [from garbage.] That hath the garbage pulled out. Sherwood.
- GA'REEL. n. s. A plank next the keel of a ship.
Bailey.
- GA'RBIDGE. n. s. Corrupted from garbage.
All shavings of horns, hoofs of cattle, blood, and garbidge is good manure for land. Mortimer, Husbandry.
- GA'RISH. † n. s. Corrupted from garbage; but occurring in the old dictionary of Barret, (where the verb garbish also is found,) under the word bowl.

In Newfoundland they improve their ground with the garbish of fish. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To GA'RBISH.* v. a. [from the noun.] To exenterate; as, "to garbish fish." Barrel.

To GA'RBLE.† v. a. [garbellare, Italian.]

1. To sift and cleanse spices. This is the primary sense, unnoticed by Dr. Johnson; but not overlooked in our old lexicography.

Upon the 7. of April 1620, he [Dr. Gwinne] with seven others were appointed commissioners by his majesty for garbling tobacco. Ward, Hist. of Gresham Coll. and Prof. p. 264.

2. To sift; to part; to separate the good from the bad.

But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake. Dryden.

Had our author set down this command, without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.

The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to it. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

GA'RBLE.† n. s. [from garble.]

1. The garbler of spices is an officer of great antiquity in the city of London, who is empowered to enter any shop, warehouse, &c. to view and search drugs, &c. and to garble and cleanse them. Cowel.

2. He who separates one part from another.

A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it. Swift, Examiner.

GA'RBOL.† n. s. [garboul, old Fr. garbuglio, Ital.] Disorder; tumult; uproar; and, in our old lexicography, hurlyburly. Bishop Hall has rendered Virgil's arma, i. e. battles, by this word garbol.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
What garbols she awak'd. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Give me the number'd verse that Virgil sung,
And Virgil's self shall speak the English tongue;
Manhood and garbols shall he chaunt. By Hall, Sat. i. 6.

Upon this bull ensued open rebellion in the north, and many garbols. Proceedings against Garnet, &c. sign. P. 2. b.

GARD. n. s. [garde, French.] Wardship; care; custody.

To GARD.* v. a. To adorn with lace, or ornamental borders. See To GUARD.

GARDEN.† n. s. [gardd, Welsh; jardin, French; giardino, Ital. Dr. Johnson.—The etymology has been traced to a different source; Goth. gardr, a garden, from the Su. Goth. gaerda, to enclose, to hedge in. Serenius. The same derivation is observable in other northern languages. V. Ludwig, Jura Feudorum, &c. p. 508. In like manner Mr. Horne Tooke deduces garden [Sax. geard] from the Sax. gýrban, to gird, to enclose.]

1. A piece of ground enclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. Shakspeare.

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year. Bacon, Essays.

In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade, and water. Temple.

My garden takes up half my daily care,
And my field asks the minutes I can spare. Harte.

G A R

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

GA'RDEN-MOUL. n. s. Mould fit for a garden.

They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GA'RDEN-PLOT.* n. s. Plantation laid out in a garden.

Let a man but look upon their steeples, their towers, their cloisters, their oratories and dormitories, their garden-plots and orchards. Harmer, Tr. of Beza's Sermon. (1587.) p. 351.

In bower and field he sought, where any tuft

Of grove or garden-plot more pleasant lay,
Their tendance, or plantation for delight. Milton, P. L.

GA'RDEN-TILLAGE. n. s. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden-tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GA'RDEN-WARE. n. s. The produce of gardens.

A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To GA'RDEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden; to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well. B. Jonson, Catiline.

When ages grow to civility and elegance, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection. Bacon.

To GA'RDEN.* v. a. To dress as a garden; to make a garden. Cotgrave, and Shakspeare.

GA'RDENER. n. s. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will. Shakspeare, Othello.

Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The gardener may lop religion as he pleases. Howell.

The life and felicity of an excellent gardener, is preferable to all other diversions. Evelyn, Kalendar.

Then let the learned gard'ner mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear. Dryden.

GA'RDENING. n. s. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planning gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator.

GARE. n. s. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep. Dict.

GA'RGARISM.† n. s. [γαργαρισμός, Gr. gargarisme, Fr.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with. Quincy.

Apophlegmatisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Such [medicines] as are not swallowed, but only kept in the mouth, are gargarisms. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 387.

Let every man therefore be sure to begin at the right end of his work; to wash his own mouth clean, before he prescribe gargarisms to others. Gov. of the Tongue, p. 219.

To GA'RGARIZE. v. a. [γαργαρίζω, Gr. gargariser, French.] To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth ease the hiccough; for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx; as when we gargarize. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

GA'RGET. n. s. A distemper in cattle.

The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To GA'RGLE. v. a. [gargouiller, Fr. gargogliare, Ital. gurgel, Germ. the throat.]

1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxycrate. Harvey.
The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stopt by gargling with oxycrate. Wiseman, Surgery.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargle well their throats. Dryden, Pers.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.

Those which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song.
So charin'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat
On nonsense gargl'd in an euuuch's throat. Fenton.

GA'RGLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure. Wiseman, Surgery.

GA'RGLE. n. s. An exsudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immoveable tumour. Quincy.

GA'RGOL. n. s. A distemper in hogs.

The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite. Mortimer.

GA'RISH.† adj. [Sax. garappian, to dress fine. In the examples, which are given, the word is uniformly garish. Dr. Johnson has given the word in Shakspeare, Milton, and South, as guirish; in Ascham, garish. The rest are not cited by him.]

1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine; glaring.

A woman's garish eye.

Richc's Simonides, (1584,) sign. Q. ii. b.
The manner of laying out of haire in those daies was much more modest, or at least nothing so garish as it is now.

Expō. of Sol. Song, (1585,) p. 206.

Three or four will outrage in apparel, huge hose, monstrous hats, and garish colours. Ascham.

A dream of what they wast, a garish flag. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Pay no worship to the garish sun.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Lady Love doth vaunt with garish grace.

Mir. for Mag. p. 214.

Infectious stain

Corrupteth all the lowly fruitful plain;

Their modest stole to garish looser weed. Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 2.

The garish and wanton fashion of the woman's dishevelled her hair. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 244.

And now at last had laid all garish pompe aside.

Dryden, Polyolb. S. 15.

Hide me from day's garish eye.

Milton, Il Pens.

Through corpore and garish rudiments.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

Those garish effects of fanatical fancy.

More, Conj. Cabbal. p. 243.

Fame and glory transports a man out of himself:—it makes the mind loose and garish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties. South, Sermon. ii. 382.

GA'RISHLY.† adv. [from garish.]

1. Splendidly; gaudily.

Trimmed up garishly, as a virgin that loves to go gay.

Dr. Westfield, Sermon. (1646,) p. 65.

2. Wildly; in a flighty manner.

Starting up, and garishly staring about, especially in the face of Eliosto.

Hinde, Eliosto Libid. (1606.)

GA'RISHNESS.† n. s. [from garish.]

1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

The garishness, neatness, and riches of silken garments grow in contempt. Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 145.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.

Let your hope be without vanity, or garishness of spirit; but sober, grave, and silent. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

This [Fasting] is a singular corrective of that pride and garishness of temper, that renders it impatient of the sobrieties of virtue, but open to all the wild suggestions of fancy and the impressions of vice. South, Sermon. ix. 157.

GA'RLAND.† n. s. [garlande, guirland, French; garland, Goth. girlanda, Span. ghirlanda, Ital. a wreath, a chaplet; probably from the Lat. gyrus, a circle, Gr. γῦρος.]

1. A wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree;

A garland made, on temples for to wear;

For he then chosen was the dignity

Of village-lord that Whitsuntide to bear.

Sidney.

A reeling world will never stand upright,

Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

—How! wear the garland! dost thou mean the crown?

—Ay, my good lord.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red

She wove, to make a garland for her head.

Dryden, Fab.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,

Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,

And reign; though she has left the throne,

Who made thy glory worth thy care.

Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,

And all her faded garlands bloom anew.

Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,

And call him noble, that was now your hate,

Him vile, that was your garland.

Shakspeare.

3. A collection of little printed pieces.

These [ballads] came forth in such abundance, that in the reign of James I. they began to be collected into little miscellanies, under the name of garlands, and at length to be purposely written for such collections.

Percy, Rel. of Anc. Poet. Ess. on the Anc. Minstrels.

To GA'RLAND.* v. a. [from the noun.] To deck with a garland.

He was garlanded with alga, or sea-grass; and in his hand a trident. B. Jonson, Masques.

Florid, or garlanded with flowers. Fuller, Holy War, p. 271.

GA'RLICK.† n. s. [Sax. garpleac, garplec; from gar, Sax. a lance, and leac, a leck, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner. Minsheu had proposed garden and leek; and others the Teut. gar, entirely, altogether, and leek, i. e. the strong leek; but Skinner is right. Thus we have spear-grass, i. e. long stiff grass.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells which contain roundish seeds. Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plaisters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath. Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.

She smelled brown bread and garlick.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;

Each clove of garlick is a sacred power:

Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,

Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods.

Tate, Juv.

GA'RLICK Pear-tree. n. s.

This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, but a strong scent of garlick.

Miller.

GA'RLICK *Wild. n. s. A plant.*GA'RLICKEATER. n. s. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You have made good work,
You and your apron men; you that stood so much Upon the voice of decapitation, and
The breath of garlickeaters!

Shakspeare, *Coriol.*GA'RMEN. n. s. [guariment, old French.] Any thing by which the body is covered; clothes; dress.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers.

Raleigh, Mist.

Fairest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?
Would'st thou a while more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear.

Cowley.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore.

Wallcut.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed.

Addison, Spect.

Let him that sues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is, no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncontesting sufferance of such small losses.

Kettlewell.

GA'RN.ER.† n. s. [grenier, French; granarium, Lat.] A place in which thrashed grain is stored up.

The garners are laid desolate, the barns are broken down;
for the corn is withered.

Joel, i. 17.

Earth's increase, and soyson plenty,
Barns and garners never empty.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

For sundry foes the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground:
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole.

Dryden, *Virg.*To GA'RN.ER. v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in garners.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life.

Shakspeare, *Othello.*GA'RN.ET. n. s. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin; from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish; its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby.

Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple.

Woodward, *Met. Fossils.*To GA'RNISH. v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.

There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees.

Sidney.

All within with flowers was garnished,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,
Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew.

Spenser.

With taper light

To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Shakspeare, K. John.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnished with fruits, delighting both the eye and taste.

Raleigh.

All the streets were garnished with the citizens, standing in their liveries.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly drest!
Garnish'd with sparagus, himself a feast!

Dryden, Juv.

No man lards salt pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitchcock'd eel.

King, Cookery.

3. To fit with fetters. A cant term.

GA'RNISH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

So are you, sweet,

Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Matter and figure they produce;

For garnish this, and that for use;

They seek to feed and please their guests.

Prior.

2. Things strewed round a dish.

3. [In gaols.] Fetters. A cant term.

4. Pensiuacula carceraria; an acknowledgement in money, when first a prisoner goes into a gaol.

Ainsworth.

Like a fresh tenant in Newgate, when he has refused the payment of garnish.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

The sheriffs of London have ordered, that no debtor, in going into any of the gaols of London and Middlesex, shall, for the future, pay any garnish; it having been for many years a great oppression to many.

Genl. Mag. (1752.) xxii. 239.

GA'RNISHER.* n. s. [from garnish.] One who decorates.

GA'RNISHMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. garnissement.] Ornament; embellishment.

Satan's cleanliness is pollution, and his garnishment disorder and wickedness.

Bp. Hall, Devout Soul, § 9.

The church of Sancta Giustina in Padua [is] a sound piece of good art, where the materials being but ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, do yet ravish the beholder.

Wotton on *Architecture.*GA'RNITURE.† n. s. [garniture, Fr.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in furniture of their heads.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your sires an age ago,

Is lost, without the garniture of show.

Granville.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art.

Addison, *Spect.*GA'ROUS. adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat an offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garous excretion, and olidous separation.

Brown.

GARRAN. See GARRON.

GA'RRET.† n. s. [garite, the tower of a citadel, French. Dr. Johnson. — From the Germ. warte, quasi gwarret, a fortification; or warten, to observe. Wachter. And this from the Su. Goth. wara, which means both to observe and to defend.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commission'd by the government,

Are seldom to an empty garret sent.

Dryden, Juv.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

G A R

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;
Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there:
And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence.

Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by day-light, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret.

Bacon.

GARRETED.* adj. [from garret.] Protected by turrets. See the etymology of GARRET.

The high cliffs are by sea inaccessible round about, saying in one only place towards the East, where they proffer an uneasy landing place for bouts; which, being fenced with a garretted wall, admitteth entrance through, a gate, and is within presently commanded by an hardly climbed hill.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

GARRETER.† n. s. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

To pen with garreteers, obscure and shabby, Inscriptive nonsense in a fancied abbey. Pursuits of Literature.

GARRISON.† n. s. [garrison, French. Dr. Johnson.—Our own word is written garrison by Chaucer. The old French, however, is garison, “vivres et munitions d'une place de guerre.” Lacombe. In this form, from the Su. Goth. waera, to defend; in that of garrison, from warna, with a similar signification.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,
Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison.

Sidney.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind.

Waller.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.

Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies.

Spenser on Ireland.

To GARRISON.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply a place with an armed force to defend it; to place soldiers in garrison.

Han. The Polack never will defend it.

Cap. Yes, 'tis already garrison'd.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The legions garrison'd in Gallia.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Garrison'd round about him like a camp

Of faithful soldiery.

There was a single bridge that led into the island and before it a castle garrisoned by many knights.

Tatler, No. 194.

2. To secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,

Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine.

Dryden, Juv.

GARRON.† n. s. [Irish. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby; a Highland horse, which, when brought into the North of England, takes the name of galloway. Dr. Johnson.—The Irish gar-ron, however, is a strong horse, a hackney. See Shaw's Gal. Dict.

When he comes forth he will make their cows and garrons to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons.

Spenser on Ireland.

Every man would be forced to provide Winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrons shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrons would decrease.

Temple.

GARRULITY.† n. s. [garruliti, French; garrulitas, Latin.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.

G A S

Let me here

Expiate, if possible, my crime,

Shameful garrulity.

Milton, S. A.

2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all loquacity or garrulity.

Ray on the Creation

GARRULOUS. adj. [garrulus, Latin.] Prattling; talkative.

Old age looks out,

And garrulous recounts the feats of youth.

Thomson.

GARTER.† n. s. [gardus, Welsh; jartier, French; from gar, Welsh, the binding of the knee.

Dr. Johnson.—It is the Goth. gartyr, a binding band; Icel. giorde, the same, from giorda, to gird.]

1. A string or ribband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

* When we rest in our clothes we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage.

Ray.

Handsome garters at your knees.

Swift.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,

And all the trophies of his former loves,

Pope.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.

—The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,

To fill in future times his father's place,

And wear the garter of his mother's race.

Dryden.

3. The principal king at arms.

Two aldermen, lord mayor, garter, Cranmer, duke of Norfolk, &c.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Sir Walter Bickerstaff married Maud the milkmaid, of whom the then Garter king at arms (a facetious person) said pleasantly enough, that she had spoiled our blood, but mended our constitutions.

Addison, Tatler, No. 75.

To GARTER.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose.

Shakespeare.

A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place.

Wiseman, Surgery.

2. To invest with the order of the garter.

Say, conscious dome, if e'er thy marshall'd knights

So nobly deck'd their old majestick rites,

As when, high thron'd amid thy trophied shrine.

George shone the leader of the garter's line?

Warton on the Birth of the Prince of Wales, (1762.)

GARTH.† n. s. [as if girth, from gird.]

1. The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

2. An enclosure. [Sax. geapb; Welsh, garth.] In the north of England, a yard; a garden; a croft. Still in use.

3. In the north of England also, a hoop or band.

GARUM.* n. s. [Latin; Fr. garon.] A word in very common use among the old writers of medicine, who expressed by it a pickle, in which fish had been preserved. See GAROUS.

Chambers.

GAS.† n. s. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses.

Harris.

The word gas, which is the name now given to every kind of air which differs from the air of the atmosphere, was first introduced into chemistry by Van Helmont. He seems to have intended to denote by it every thing which is driven off from bodies in the state of vapour by heat. He divides gases into five classes.

Thomson, System of Chemistry, (1802.)

GASCON.* n. s. A native of Gascony. See GASCON-ADE.

A young coquette widow in France having been followed by a Gascon of quality, who had boasted among his companions of some favours which he had never received; to be revenged of him, sent for him, &c. Tatler, No. 126.

GASCONADE. † n. s. [French; from the Gascons, a nation eminent for boasting. See GASCON.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.

I could never believe Mrs. Whiteway's gasconades in telling me of her acquaintance with you.

Swift, Lett. Berkeley's Ltt. Relicks, p. 72.

To GASCONADE. v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH. † v. a. [from hacher, to cut, to hack, French. Skinner. Hacher, Dr. Johnson should have added, means also to cut into small pieces, to shred; and in this primary sense, which he has overpassed, the word gash is in our own language, which renders its derivation from hacher still more likely.]

1. To cut into small pieces, 'as applied to cloth'; to shred.

To what end do we jagge and gash the garments that are sowed together to cover our bodies, but that thereby we may, as it were, by a most fond and ridiculous anatomic, open and lay forth to the eyes of all men what kind of people we are in our inward hearts; jagged, (God wot,) and ragged, vain, light, and nothing sound? Transl. of Bullinger's Sermon (1576), p. 239.

2. To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death.

Hayward.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image, and to polish it, requires great art and dexterity.

Tillotson, vol. i. § 2.

See me gash'd with knives,

Or sear'd with burning steel.

Rowe, Royal Concert.

Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,

He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell.

A. Philips.

GASH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large And open gash therein; were not his targe, That broke the violence of his intent,

The weary soul from thence it would discharge.

Spenser.

A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground.

Hayward.

But th' ethereal substance flow'd,

Not long divisible; and from the gash

A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back-sword and cudgel-play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar.

Arbutnot.

GASHFUL.* adj. [gash and full.] Full of gashes; looking terribly. One might almost suppose this word to be intended for ghastful, if two authors did not use it, at a distance of almost forty years; and if a contemporary had not cited the lines of the oldest, (which indeed are a fine and just satire on a certain kind of hypocrites,) where gashful is the word. See Sir Miles Sandys's Essays, p. 190.

'Tis not the holding of thy hands so high,
Nor yet the purer squinting of thine eye;
'Tis not your mimic mouths, nor antic faces,
Nor scripture phrases, nor affected graces,
Nor prodigal upbanding of thine eyes,
Whose gashful balls do seem to pelt the skies;
'Tis not the strict reforming of your hair
So close, that all the neighbour skull is bare;
'Tis not the drooping of thy head so low,
Nor yet the lowering of thy sullen brow —
No, no; 'tis none of this that God regards;
Such sort of fools their own applause rewards.

Quarles, Hist. of Jonah, (1620,) sign. H. 2.

Come death, and welcome; which spoke, comes in a gashful, horrid, meagre, terrible, ugly shape.

Gayton on D. Quir, (1654,) p. 69.

GASKETS.* n. s. pl. On ship-board, the small cords used to fasten the sails to the yards when furled up.

Chambers.

GASKINS. † n. s. pl. [from Gascoigne. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;

Or, if both break, your gaskins fall. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
Come, come George, let's be merry and wise; the child's a fatherless child, and say they should put him into a strait pair of gaskins, 'twere worse than knot-grass, he would never grow after it.

Reaumur and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Feast.

GASOMETER.* n. s. [gas, and μέτρον, Gr. gazometre, Fr.] An instrument said to be invented by Lavoisier and Meunier to measure the quantity of gas employed in experiments.

To GASP. v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gispe, Danish, to sob, Junius.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to catch breath with labour.

The sick for air before the portal gasp.

Dryden, Virg.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;

But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats.

Dryden.

The gasping head flies off; a purple flood

Flows from the trunk.

Dryden, Æn.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;

The breath they drew no longer air, but fire.

Dryden.

A scuffling of wit lay gasping for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish.

Dryden, Spens. Friar.

The rich countrymen in Austria were faint and gasping for breath.

Brown's Travels.

Pale and faint,

He gasps for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends.

Addison, Cato.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;

The wolves will get a breakfast by my death.

Dryden.

He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,

And with short sobs he gasps away his breath.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as Nature never expresses desire by gasping.

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and gasped after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom.

Spectator

GASP. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

When he was at the last gasp, he said, Thou, like a fury, takest us out of this present life; but the king of the world shall raise us up, who have died for his laws, unto everlasting life.

2 Macc. vii. 9.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name

Is at last gasp.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;

And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison, Rosamond.

To GAST. v. a. [from gast, Saxon. See AGHAST.]
To make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify;
to fear; to affray.

When he saw my best alarmed spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether gasted by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To GA'STER.* v. a. [Sax. gast, a ghost. This is the word of our old lexicography.] To scare; to terrify.

The sight of the lady has gaster'd him.
Beaumont and Fl. Wit at sev. Weapons.

GA'STFUL.* See GHA'STFUL.

GA'STLY.* See GHA'STLY.

GA'STNESS.* n. s. [from gast. This is not the uniform reading of the editions of Shakespeare; but it seems to be the true one; gestures is the word which occurs in the quartos, gastness in the first folio.] Fright; amazement.

Look you pale, mistress? —
Do you perceive the gastness of her eye? —
Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon.

Shakespeare, Othello.

GA'STRICK.† adj. [gastrique, Fr. from γαστήρ, Gr.]
Belonging to the belly or stomach.

GASTRI'LOQUIST.* n. s. [Fr. gastrilogue, from γαστήρ, Gr. and loqui, Lat.] A person who speaks inwardly, and whose voice seems to come afar off;
usually called a ventriloquist. See VENTRILO-QUIST.

Gastriloquists are persons, who have acquired the art of modifying their voice, so that it affects the ear of the hearers, as if it came from another person, or from the clouds, or from under the earth. Reid.

GASTRO'GRAPHY. n. s. [γαστήρ and γράφω.] In strictness of etymology signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine.

Sharp, Surgery.

GASTRO'TOMY. n. s. [γαστήρ and τέτομα.] The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT.† The preterite of get.

Moses gat him up into the mount. Ex. xxi. 18.

Our daughter,
In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,
Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat
For men to see, and seeing wonder at. Shakespeare, Pericles.

GAT-TOOTHED.* adj. [Sax. gat, a goat, and toothed.]
Having a goat's tooth; having a lickerish tooth.
This word Dryden has converted into gap-toothed, which Dr. Johnson has admitted into his Dictionary; which however gives no meaning to the passage where it is used, and is not the true word.
Gat-toothed Mr. Tyrwhitt places among words in Chaucer not understood. But considering the disposition of the Wife of Bath, the poet's meaning in gat-toothed seems clear enough. Gat or gate is,
by our elder writers, often used for goat.

She coude moche of wandring by the way:
Gat-toothed was she, sothly for to say.

Chaucer, C. T. Prolog. Wife of Bath.

GATE.† n. s. [Sax. gat, gate, geat; Goth. gatl;
old Fr. gat; a gate.]

1. The door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee. Shakespeare.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into enclosed grounds.

Know'st thou the way to Dover? —
Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shakespeare.

3. An avenue; an opening.

Austria had done nothing but wisely and politicly, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war. Knolles, Hist.

4. A way; a passage; a road. [Icel. gata, a street.]
See GAIT.

The gate of a country is not like the gate of an house; I mean, it is not the utmost limit of the land, as the other is of the building; but rather a difficult pass to be surmounted before we can penetrate into the most valuable part of the country. Drummond, Trans. p. 246.

5. A goat. [Sax. geit, gat; Icel. geit.] Northernly spoken, says the contemporary commentator on Spenser. It is now used perhaps only in Scotland.

I like same kiddes —
Was too very foolish and unwise;
For on a time, in summer season,
The gate her dame that had good reason,
Yode forth abroad, &c. Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

GATED.* adj. [from gate.] Having gates.

Vain Art, thou pigmy power!

How dost thou swell, and strut, with human pride,
To shew thy littleness! What childish toys —
Thy hundred-gated capitals, or those
Where three days' travel left us much to ride.

Young, Night Th. 9.

GA'TEVEIN. n. s. The vena porta.

Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood. Bacon, Hen. VII.

GA'TEWAY.† n. s. [gate and way.]

1. A way through gates of enclosed grounds.

Gateways between enclosures are so many, that they cannot cart between one field and another. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A building to be passed at the entrance of the area to a large mansion.

To GATHER.† v. a. [gabarian, gabarian, Sax.]
Our own word was at first gader: Chaucer so writes it.]

1. To collect; to bring into one place.

Gather stones — and they took stones and made an heap.
Gen.

2. To get in harvest.

The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Lev. xxv. 20.

3. To pick up; to glean.

His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Cast up the highway, gather out the stones. Is. lxii. 10.
I will spend this preface upon those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer. Wotton.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees. Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.

What have I done?

To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner guin'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground!

Dryden, Span. Friar.

5. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.
All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon, New Atlantis.

6. To heap up; to accumulate.
He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Proverbs.

7. To select and take.
Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. Ps. cvi. 47.

8. To sweep together.
The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind. St. Matt. xiii. 47.

9. To collect charitable contributions.
Few Sundays come over our head, but decayed householders or shipwreckt merchants are gathered for.
Dr. King, Serm. (1615), p. 57.

10. To bring into one body or interest.
I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. Is. lvi. 8.

11. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.

Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne:
Gath'ring his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand. Pope.

12. To gath'ring.
He gathers ground upon her in the chase;
Now breaths upon her hair with nearer pace. Dryden.

13. To pucker needlework; to contract into small folds.

14. To collect logically; to know by inference.
That which, out of the law of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law. Hooker.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakespeare.
After he had seen the vision, we endeavour'd to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts.

From this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sin in this respect, we may gather, that all sins are not alike and equal, as the stoicks of ancient times, and their followers, have falsely imagined. Perkins.

Return'd
By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton, P. L.
Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibil, is translating Chaucer into French: from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden.

15. To contract; to get.
All faces shall gather blackness. Joel, ii. 6.

16. To GATHER Breath. [A proverbial expression.]
To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

To GATHER. v. n.

1. To be condensed; to thicken.
If ere night the gath'ring clouds we see,
A song will help the beating storm to hear. Dryden, Past.
When gath'ring clouds o'er shade all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries. Dryden.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East and West, on airy coursers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.
Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison, Cato.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.
Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came into them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. To assemble.
4. To generate pus or matter.

GA'THER. n. s. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers,
Part cannons, perriwigs, and feathers. Hudibras.

GA'THERABLE.* adj. [from gather.] Deducible from premised grounds.

The priesthood of the first-born is gatherable hence, because the Levites were appointed to the service of the altar, instead of the first-born, and as their gathers, or price of redemption.
Num. iii. 41. Godwin, Mos. and Aaron, i. 6.

GA'THERER. n. s. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.
I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gath-er'd my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff. Wotton, Pref. to Elem. of Architecture.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.
I was a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos.
Nor in that land

Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand. May, Virg.

GA'THERING.† n. s. [from gather.]

1. An assembly.
There be three things that mine heart feareth — the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Eccles. xxvi. 5.

2. An accumulation; a collection.
To receive the gatherings together of the waters which were to run from amongst the hills, and the mountains and hills raised upon the face of the antediluvian globe.

Shuckford on the Creation, p. 122.

3. A collection of charitable contributions.
Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come. I Cor. xvi. 2.

4. Generation of matter.
Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Chr. Piety.

GA'TTEN-TREE. n. s. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUD.† n. s. [Skinner imagines this word may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of gav; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Gawn
Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gwawdio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy;
a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland, this word is still retained both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Horne Took pretends, that gaud is the past participle of the Sax.
gizan, to give; gaxed, gav'd, gavd, gaud! Div. of Parley, ii, 267. — Serenius deduces gaudy from the Iceland. gaud, the name of a pagan deity, which, after the introduction of Christianity, came to signify among them trifles. See GEWGAW. But perhaps our gaud is from the old French gaude, a bead, a rosary; whence "gaudées or gaudez, babbling prayers, whereof the papists have divers, beginning with a gaudetr." Cotgrave. Philippa, countess of March, who died in 1381, makes the following bequest in her will: "It'ni un pair des ances les gaudes des croices rouges enamaylez," &c. Nichol's Collect.
of Royal Wills, p. 100. See also Du Cange in V.
GAUDIA. Our old reformers use the word in contempt.] An ornament; a fine thing; a toy; a trinket; a bawble. It is not now much used.

A paire of bedes blacke as sable
She toke, and hynge my necke about:
Upon the gaudees all without
Was wryte of gold, Pur reposer. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 8.
Their faythe is a substance of thynges unseen, and not of gaudes and fables apperynge to the eye.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 33. b.
He hath put it into the minds of good Christian princes and magistrates to disburden her [the church] of those stinking and defiled gaudes. Harmar, Transl. of Beza's Sermon. (1587,) p. 82.

He stole the impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweatmeats. Shakespeare.
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gauds,
To give me audience. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaud,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shakespeare.
Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gauds the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans finest holland bear. Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

TO GAUD.† v.n. [gaudeo, Lat.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing. Dr. Johnson produces an example from Shakespeare, where the true reading is ga, and gaud is merely a conjecture of Warburton, viz.

Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me. Com. of Err.

GA'UDED.* adj. [from gaud.]

1. Decorated with beads or trinkets.

About her arm she bare

A pair of bedes, gauded all with Greene. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
2. Coloured.

Our veil'd dames
Commit the war of white, and damask, in Their nicely gauded cheeks. Shakespeare, Coriol.

GA'UDERY. n. s. [from gaud.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon, Ess.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaming garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with clothes as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaudry known. Dryden.

GA'UDILY.† adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.

Their persons are elegantly formed, gaudily decorated, and highly perfumed. Guthrie, India in general.

GA'UDINESS.† n. s. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.

She shall have more thanks for the poor's wardrobe (of her procuring) than her own; and for their warmth than her own gaudiness. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 351.

Neither are the men much less guilty of this pernicious folly, who, in imitation of a gaudiness and foppery in dress introduced of late years into our kingdom, cannot find materials in their own country, worthy to adorn their bodies of clay, while their minds are naked of every valuable quality.

Swift, Sermon on the State of Ireland.

GA'UDY.† adj. [from gaud.] This adjective at first was gaudish, and is frequent in the writings of Bale.]

1. Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not express in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless

As the gay notes that people the sun beams. Milton.

A goblin there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.

A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity. Law.

2. Rejoicing; festal.

Come,

Let's have another gaudy night; call to me
All my sad captains, fill our bowls; once more Let's mock the midnight bell. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

'Tis joy clad like joy,

Which is more honest than a cunning grief

That's only fac'd with subtles for a show,

But gaudy hearted. Massinger, Old Law.

GA'UDY. n. s. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival;
a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be contented with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GAVE. The preterite of give.

Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;

If thou canst give it, then thou never gav'st it:

Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,

It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it. Donne.

GA'VEL.† n. s.

1. A provincial word for ground.

Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days.

Mortimer.

2. A tribute; a toll; a yearly rent. [Sax. gafol.]

More usually written gabel. See GABEL.

GA'VELKIND.† n. s. Compounded by Lambert, in his Exposition of Saxon words, of gýfe, eal, cýn, omnibus cognatione proximis data. Verstegan, in his Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, calls it gavel-kind, quasi, give all kind, that is, give to each child his part. But Taylor, in his History of Ga-velkind, would derive it from the British gafael, a hold or tenure, and cenned, or cennedh, generatio aut familia; and so gavel cennedh might signify tenura generationis. But whatever is the true etymology, it signifies in law a custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own.
This custom is of force in divers places of England,
but especially in Kent. Cowell.

Among other Welsh customs, he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Davies on Ireland.

Owen was no sooner dead, but the custom of gavel-kind, which some think has ruined most families in Wales, occasioned great division amongst his sons.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 394.

TO GAUGE. v.n. [gauge, jauge, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced, and often written,
gaje.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.

2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vanes nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham, Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his horoes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel.

Pope, Ess. on Homer's Battles.

GAUGE. n. s. [from the verb.] A measure; a standard.

This plate must be a gauge to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Moxon, Mech. Exerc.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth.

Locke

Timothy proposed to his mistress that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high, and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

GA'UGER. n. s. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction: and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and escheator.

Carew on Cornwall.

GA'VELOCK.* n. s. [Sax. zaveloc.] An iron crow, in some places called gafflock.

GAUL.* n. s. [Lat. Gallia.]

1. An ancient name of France. It is yet often used by our poets for modern France.

Here wak'd the flame that still superiour braves
The proudest threats of Gaul's ambitious slaves.

Warton on the Marriage of the King, (1761.)

2. An old inhabitant of France; and in poetry a modern Frenchman.

Nor did the Gaul

Not find him once a baleful foe.

Philips, Blenheim.

Wherever the Celtæ or Gauls are mentioned by ancient writers, we seldom fail to hear of their druids and their bards.

Blair on the Poems of Ossian, p. 21.

GA'ULISH.* adj. Relating to the Gauls. See GAUL.

The Romans having subdued the Gauls, introduced part of their language among them; and a mixture of half Latin; half Gaulish or Celtick, constituted the romant language; of which the modern French is only an improvement. Chambers.

Galliard is imagined to be derived from the Gaulish, and, genius, and gay. Johnson.

To GAUM.* v. a. [Icel. gaum, attention, gauma, to take a view of.] To understand; a northern word; as I do not gaum ye, i. e. I do not understand you, according to Grose. In Yorkshire, according to Ray, to mind or look at. We pronounce goam, says Ray, under that word gaum; and speak it of persons that unhandsomely gaze or look about them.

Gaum is clearly the true word.

To GAUNCH.* v. a. See To GANCH.

Among them are more frequent and horrid executions than in the rest of Turkey, as empaling, gaunching, flaying alive.

Blount, Voyage to the Levant, p. 94.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gewant, from zeganian, to lessen, Saxon.] Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!

Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:

Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;

And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;

Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:

The pleasure that some fathers feed upon

Is my strict fast; I mean my children's looks:

And therein fasting thou hast made me gaunt:

Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,

Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Two mastiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood imbru'd.

Dryden, Fab.

GA'UNTLY. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly; slenderly; meagerly.

GA'UNTLET. n. s. [gantelet, French.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.

A sealy gauntlet now with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Feel but the difference soft and rough;

This a gauntlet, that a muff.

Cleaveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,

And others try the twanging bow to bend;

The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,

Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand.

Dryden, Virg.

Who naked wrestled best, besmen'd with oil;

Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil.

Dryden, Fab.

The funeral of some valiant knight

May give this thing its proper light:

View his two gauntlets; those declare

That both his hands were us'd to war.

Prior.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,

Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;

He throws the gauntlet Otway us'd to wield,

And calls for Englishmen to judge the field.

Southern.

GAVO'T.† n. s. [gavotte, French; said to be derived from the Gavots, a people inhabiting a mountainous district in France, called Gap. Chambers.] A kind of dance, probably resembling our hornpipe. Cotgrave calls it a kind of brawl danced, commonly, by one alone.

The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in preludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scriblerus.

GAUZE.† n. s. [Fr. guze, "the thin canvas that serves women for a ground unto their cushions, or pursework; also, the slight stuff, tiffany; also, a mantle, &c. also, wealth, substance, and a prince's treasury." Cotgrave. This refers us to the Lat. gaza.] A kind of thin transparent silk.

Silken clothes were used by the ladies; and it seems they were thin like gauze.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

Brocades, and damasks, and tabbies and gauzes,

Are lately brought over.

Swift.

GA'WBY.* n. s. [probably from the Fr. gabé, mocked, flouted.] A dunce, fool, or blockhead; which Grose confines to our northern dialect; but it is not uncommon in the southern, with the pronunciation of gabby. A low expression.

GAWD.* See GAUD.

GAWK.† n. s. [zeac, Saxon.]

1. A cuckoo.

2. A foolish fellow. In both senses it is retained in Scotland, Dr. Johnson says, and he might have said in the north of England also.

In the north of England, persons thus imposed upon, [made April fools,] are called April gawks. A gawk or gawk is properly a cuckoo; and is used here metaphorically, in vulgar language, for a fool. The cuckoo is, indeed, every where a name of contempt. Gauch, in the Teutonic is rendered stultus, fool; whence also our northern word a gake or a gawky.

Brand, Popular Antiquities.

GA'WKY.* n. s. A stupid, half-witted, or awkward person. See GAWK.

GA'WKY.* adj. Awkward; ungainly; still so used in the north of England.

A large half-length of Henry Darnley represents him tall, awkward, and gawky.

Pennant, Tour in Scotland.

To GAWM.* See To GAUM.

GAWN. n. s. [corrupted for gallon.] A small tub or lading vessel. A provincial word.

GA'WNTREE. n. s. [Scottish.] A wooden frame on which beer-casks are set when tunned.

GAY.† adj. [gay, Fr. gac, Celt. gac, Icel. joy, mirth; γᾰῶ, Greek.]

1. Airy; cheerful; merry; frolick.

Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently play;

Beliada smil'd, and all the world was gay.

Pope.

Ev'n rival wits did Voiture's fate deplore,
And the gay mourn'd, who never mourn'd before.

Pope.

2. Fine; showy.

A virgin that loves to go gay. Bar. vi. 9.
Ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing. James, ii. 3.

3. Specious.

Neither your syne disguising, nor your paynted colours, nor your gay rhetoricke, nor witty inventions, can so hide and cover the truth that it shall not appeare.

Abp. Crammer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 354.

Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric,
That hath so well been taught her dazzling fence.

Milton, Comus.

GAY. n. s. [from the adjective.] An ornament; an embellishment.

Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem, as they do upon gays and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives' tales. L'Estrange.

GA'YETY. n. s. [gayeté, French; from gay.]

1. Cheerfulness; airiness; merriment.

2. Acts of juvenile pleasure.

And from those gayeties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

3. Finery; show.

GA'YLY.† adv. See GAILY.

1. Merrily; cheerfully; airily.

Seest thou how gayly my young master goes,
Vaunting himself upon his rising toes? Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 7.

2. Splendidly; pomposly; with great show.

The ladies, gayly dress'd, the Mall adorn
With curious dies, and paint the sunny morn.
Like some fair flow'r, that early spring supplies,
That gayly blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies. Pope.

GA'YNESS.† n. s. [from gay.] Gayety; finery. Not much in use, Dr. Johnson says; and he gives no example; but the first of the following he has applied to gayety, unjustifiably converting the poet's gayness to that word.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.
Delicacy of fare, softness of lodging, gayness of attire.

Bp. Hall, Epist. Dec. ii. Ep. 10.

The Creator — is willing mankind should serve themselves of all his creatures' various excellencies, in their strength, weight, light, sweetness, warmth, tinctures, beauties, and colours; not only to necessity and plainness, but also curiosity and gayness.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Mandom. p. 99

GA'YSOME.* adj. [from gay.] Full of gayety.

And, fier'd with heat of gayesome youth, did venture,
With warlike troops, the Norman coast to enter.

Mil. for Mag. p. 633.

To GAZE.† v. n. [gázēsdai, or rather zepean, to see, Sax. Dr. Johnson. — Or perhaps the Heb. chazan, to see. To look intently and earnestly; with eagerness.

What seest thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world:

If so, gaze on. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

From some she cast her modest eyes below;

At some her gazing glances roving flew. Fairfax.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Eccles. ix. 5.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shakspeare.

High stations tumult, but not bliss create;

None think the great unhappy, but the great.

Fools gaze and envy; Envy darts a sting,

Which makes a swain as wretched as a king. Young.

To GAZE.† v. a. To view stedfastly.

Straight toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,

And gaz'd a while the ample sky.

The godlike presence; for athwart his brow

Displeasure, temper'd with a mild concern,

Look'd down reluctant on me. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. ii.

GAZE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise.

Spenser.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,

If any air of musick touch their ears,

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,

Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,

By the sweet power of musick. Shakspeare, Meph. of Ven.

Not a month

'Fore your queen died, she was more worth such gazes

Than what you look on now. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

With secret gaze,

Or open admiration, him behold,

On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd

• Worlds.

Milton, P. L.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connexion as to our understanding, soars out of sight, and leaves his readers at a gaze.

Dryden, Pref. to Ovid.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison, Freeholder.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die

Retray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;

To grind in brazen fetters, under task,

With my heav'n-gifted strength.

Milton, S. A.

GAZE'FUL. adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,

The ravish'd hearts of gaze'ful men might rear

To admiration of that heavenly light.

Spenser, Hymn on Beauty.

GAZE'HOOND. n. s. [gaze and hound; canis agasæus;

Skinner.] A hound that pursues not by the scent,

but by the eye.

Seest thou the gaze'hound! how with glance severe

From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer! Tickell.

GAZE'LY.† n. s. An Arabian deer.

Wild gazels are caught by sending into the herd one already taken and tamed with a noose so fastened to his horns, as to entangle the animal that first approaches to oppose him.

Goldsmith, Nat. Hist.

GAZE'MENT.* n. s. [from gaze.] View.

Then forth he brought his snowy Florimel —

Cover'd from people's gaze'ment with a veler

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 17.

GAZER. n. s. [from gaze.] He that gazes; one that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermilion red did shew,

Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;

The which ambrosial odours from them threw,

And gazers sense with double pleasure fed. Spenser, F. Q.

I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;

And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.

His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed.

Watts, Logick.

GAZE'T.* n. s. [Ital. gazetta.] A Venetian half-penny. See GAZETTE.

Since you have said the word, I am content,

But will not give a gaze't less. Massinger, Maid of Honour.

GAZETTE.† n. s. [gazetta is a Venetian halfpenny, the price of a newspaper, of which the first was published at Venice. Dr. Johnson. — It was a kind of literary newspaper, in single sheets, published at Venice in the sixteenth century, which was sold for a gaze't. The foglio d'avviso, from the circumstance of its price, has given the name of gazette to newspapers in many countries. At first, we used, in the plural, gazetti. Our gazettes began to be regularly printed in 1665.] A paper of news; a paper of publick intelligence. It is accented indifferently on the first or last syllable, Dr. Johnson says; but the most ancient and correct accentuation is on the last.

G E A

O, I shall be the fable of all feasts,
The freight of the gazetti, shipboys' tale,
And, which is worst, ev'n talk for ordinaries. B. Jonson, Fox.

They carry in their pockets Tacitus,
And the gazette, or Gallo-Belgicus. B. Jonson, Epigr. 92.

I am glad to hear from abroad in the High Dutch gazette, that there is a treaty of exchange in hand between Prince Rupert and Prince Casimir of Poland. Wotton, Rem. p. 579.

And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger great, they challenge all;
Print new additions to their feats,
And emendations in gazettes. Hudibras.

An English gentleman, without geography, cannot well understand a gazette. Locke?

One cannot hear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of the gazette. Addison, Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the press;
Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

To GAZE^{TTE}. * v. a. [from the noun.] To insert in a gazette. A common word in conversation; as, the dissolution of partnership is gazetted; his promotion is gazetted.

GAZETTE^{ER}. † n. s. [from gazette.]

1. A writer of news.

Mount now, to Gallo-Belgicus appear
As deep a statesman as a gazetteer.
Donne, Verses on Coryat the Traveller.

2. An officer appointed to publish news by authority, whom Steele calls the lowest minister of state.

Satire is no more: I feel it die:
No gazetteer more innocent than I. Pope.
He was without the trouble of attendance, or the mortification of a request, made gazetteer. Johnson, Life of King.

3. A newspaper.

Glasses, and bottles, pipes, and gazetteers,
As if the table ev'n itself was drunk,
Lie a wet broken scene. Thomson, Autumn.
They have drawled through columns of gazetteers and advertisers for a century together.
Burke on the State of the Nation.

GA'ZINGSTOCK. † n. s. [gaze and stock.]

1. A person gazed at with scorn or abhorrence.

I will cast abominable filth upon thee, and make thee vile, and will set thee as a gazing-stock. Nahum, iii. 6.
Ye were made a gazing-stock both by reproaches and afflictions. Heb. x. 33.

These things are offences to us, by making us gazingstocks to others, and objects of their scorn and derision. Ray.

2. Any object gazed at.

Every eye that is transported, and every heart that is fired, with that immodest gazing-stock, are so many spoils and trophies of their temptations. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 247.

GAZON. n. s. [French.] In fortification, pieces of fresh earth covered with grass, cut in form of a wedge, about a foot long and half a foot thick, to line parapets and the traverses of galleries. Harris.

GE. * [Saxon.] A particle often prefixed to Saxon verbs, participles, and verbal nouns.

This preposition [prefix] was of our ancestors very much used, and is yet exceedingly used in the Low Dutch; where,
according to their usual manner of pronouncing with aspiration, they use to put an h to it, and so make it ghe. We have since altered it from ge to y; which yet we seldom use in prose, but sometimes in poetry for the increasing of syllables; as when we say, guaritten, yoleped, ylearned, ybroken, and the like.
Versteegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

To GEAL. * v. n. [old Fr. geler, "to congeal with cold." Cotgrave.] To congeal. It is still a northern word, meaning to be benumbed with cold. See also GELABLE.

G E A

Receiving the dew of heaven into the gaping shell, it [the mother-pearl] forms little grains or seeds within it, which cleave to its sides, then grow hard, and geal, as it were.

Parthenicia Sacra, (1633,) p. 190.

GEAR. † n. s. [Sax. zeapian, to prepare, to make ready; zeapa, provision, apparatus. Often written geer.]

1. Furniture; accoutrements, dress; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous gear. Spenser, F. Q.
When he found her bound, stript from her gear,
And vile tormentors ready saw in place,
He broke through. Fairfax.

I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again. Addison, Guardian.

To see some radiant nymph appear
In all her glitt'ring birthday gear,
You think some goddess from the sky
Descended, ready cut and dry. Swift.

2. The traces by which horses or oxen draw.

Apollo's spite Pallas discern'd, and flew to Tydeus' son;
His scourge reacht, and his horse made fresh; then took her angry run

At king Eumelus, brake his gears. Chapman, Iliad.

The frauds he learn'd in his fanatick years
Made him uneasy in his law'ul gears. Dryden.

3. Stuff.

They burn frankincense, and other sweet savours; and light also a great number of wax candles and tapers; not supposing this geer to be any thing available to the divine nature.

Robinson, Tr. of More's Utopia, ii. 11.

If Fortune be a woman, she is a good wench for this geer.
Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Wel. Do you love tobacco?

Rog. Surely I love it, but it loves not me; yet with your reverence I'll be bold.

Wel. Pray light it, Sir.—How do you like it?

Rog. I promise you, it is notable stinking geer indeed.
Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

4. [In Scotland.] Goods or riches: as, he has gear enough.

5. The furniture of a draught-horse.

She rises before the sun to order the horses to their geers.
Rambler, No. 138.

6. A general word for business, things, or matters.

That to Sir Calidore was easy geere. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 6.
I will remedy this gear ere long,
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

Why, hear you nurse? how comes this geer to pass?
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton, Comus.

To GEAR. * v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; as,
"snugly geced, i. e. neatly dressed. North."

Ray, and Grose.

GE'ASON. † adj. [A word which I find only in Spenser, Dr. Johnson says; without offering any etymology, and with the definition only of wonderful, applied to his single example from Moth.
Hubberd's Tale. It is in our old lexicography, as well as in Spenser, for rare. See Sherwood's Dict.
And, according to Grose, it is an Essex word for scarce, hard to procure. It is apparently the Goth.
geism; usgeison, to be amazed, to wonder.] Rare;
uncommon; wonderful.

The lady, hearkning to his sensofull speech,
Found nothing that he said unmeet nor geason.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 37.

It to leaches seemed strange and season.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Such as this age, in which all good is season.

Spenser, Vis. of the World's Vanity.
It was frosty winter season,
And faire Flora's wealth was season.

Greene, Philomel. Sec. Ode.

GEAT. n. s. [corrupted from jet.] The hole through which the metal runs into the mold.

Moxon, Mech. Excr.

GE'BERISH.* See GIBBERISH.

GECK. n. s. [Sax. geac, a cuckoo; geck, German, a fool; gawk, Scottish.] A bubble easily imposed upon. Hammer. Obsolete.

Why did you suffer Jachimo to taint his noble heart and brain with needless jealousy, and to become the geck and scorn o' th' other's villainy?

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,

And made the most notorious geck and gull

That e'er invention play'd on?

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

To GECK. † v. a. [from the noun; or from the Teut. ghecken, to deceive.] To cheat; to trick.

GEEL. † A term used by waggoners to their horses when they would have them go faster. Dr. Johnson. — It is a sort of abbreviation of geho, which seems to be a word of great antiquity in the same sense.

A learned friend, whose communications I have frequently had occasion to acknowledge in the course of this work, says, the exclamation geho, geho, which carmen use to their horses, is probably of great antiquity. It is not peculiar to this country, as I have heard it used in France. In the story of the milkmaid who kicked down her pail, and with it all her hopes of getting rich, as related in a very ancient collection of apologues, entitled Dialogus Creaturarum, printed at Gouda, in 1480, is the following passage: "Et cum sic gloriaretur, et cogitaret cum quanta gloria duceretur ad illum virum, super equum dicendo gio, gio, cepit pede percutere terram, quasi pingeret equum calcariibus."

Brand, Popular Antiquities.

GEER.* See GEAR.

GESE. The plural of goose.

GEHENNA.* n. s. [Gr. γέεννα, from the Hebrew gehinnom, the valley of Hinnom, called also Tophet; old Fr. gehenne, torture, torment, and also hell.] Properly, a place in a valley where the Israelites erected abominable altars, there sacrificing their children in fire to the idol Moloch; notwithstanding, it is usually taken for hell.

Bullockar.

First, Moloch, horrid king, besmear'd with blood
Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
Though, for the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
Their children's cries unheard, that pass'd through fire
To his grim idol — His grove

The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence

And black Gehenn call'd, the type of hell. Milton, P. L.

GEHO.* See GEEL.

GE'LABLE. † adj. [old Fr. gelable, from gelu, Latin.]

What may be congealed or concreted into a gelly.

GE'LATINE. † adj. [gelatus, Latin. Dr. Johnson. —

GE'LATINOUS. } Adopted perhaps from the old Fr. gelatine, "an excellent white broth made of the fish maigre." Coigrave. } Formed into a gelly; viscous; stiff and cohesive.

That pellucid gelatinous substance is an excrement cast off from the shoals of fish that inhabit the main. Woodward.

GE'LLY. † n. s. [gelée, French; gelatus, Latin.]

Any viscous body; viscosity; glue; gluey substance.

My best blood turn

To an infected gelly.

Shakespeare, Wind. Tale.

The tapers of the gods,

The sun and moon, became like waxen globes.

The shooting stars and all in purple gels.

And chaos is at hand. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

The white of an egg will congeal into a moderate heat, and the hardest of animal solids are resolvable again into gels. Art. animal on Aliments.

GELT. n. s. [from geld.] A castrated animal; gelding. Not used.

The spayed gels they esteem the most profitable. Mortimer.

GEM. n. s. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from gilt.] Thin; gilt surface.

I won her with a girdle of gilt,
Emboss with bugle about the belt. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

GILT. The participle passive of geld.
Let the others be gilt for oxen. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GEM.† n. s. [Sax. gym; Icel. gem; Fr. gemme; Lat. gemma.]

1. A jewel; a precious stone of whatever kind.

Love his fancy drew;
And so to take the gem Urania sought. Sidney.

I saw his bleeding rings,
Their precious gems new lost, became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair. Shakespeare.

It will seem a hard matter to shadow a gem, or well pointed diamond, that hath many sides, and to give the lustre where it ought. Peacham on Drawing.

Signes of small worth may lie unseen by day;
But night itself does the rich gem betray. Cowley.

The basis of all gems is, when pure, wholly diaphanous, and either crystal or an adamantine matter; but we find the diaphanety of this matter changed, by means of a fine metallick matter. Woodward.

2. The first bud.

From the joints of thy prolific stem
A swelling knot is raised, call'd a gem;
Whence, in short space, itself the cluster shows. Denham.

Embolden'd out they come,
And swell the gems, and burst the narrow room. Dryden.

To GEM.† v. a. [gemmo, Lat. gemmer, old Fr.] To adorn, as with jewels or buds.

—She who in her life-time was contemn'd,
Ev'n in her very funerals is gemm'd.
Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 101.

To GEM. v. n. [gemmo, Latin.] To put forth the first buds.

Last rose, in dance, the stately trees, and spread
Their branches, hung with copious fruit; or gemm'd
Their blossoms. Milton, P. L.

GEMEL.* n. s. [Lat. gemellus; Fr. gemma, gemelle.] A pair; two things of a sort. It is still an heraldick term.

The quadrin doth never double; or, to use a word of heraldrie, never bringing forth gemels.
Drayton, Barons' Wars, Pref.

GEMEL Ring.* n. s. This is the old expression for what, in later times, has been written gimnal and gimbal ring. It was also called a gemow ring; i. e. "double or twins, because they be rings with two or more links." Minshew. So, according to the older authority of Huloet, "a gemol or gemmow ring."

GEMMY.* adj. [from gem.] Resembling gems.

The fitting cloud against the summit dash'd,
And, by the sun illumin'd, pouring bright
A gemmy shower. Thomson, Liberty, P. iv.

GEMOTE.† n. s. [Sax. gemot.] A meeting; the court of the hundred. Obsolete.

GENDER.† n. s. [genus, Latin; gendre, French.]

1. A kind; a sort. Not in use.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that if we will supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will. Shakespeare, Othello.

The other motive,
Why to a publick court I might not go,
Is the great love the general gender bore me. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. A sex.

Sex and gender are qualities which belong to substances, but cannot belong to the qualities of substances.

A. Smith, on the Form. of Languages.

3. [In grammar.] A denomination given to nouns from their being joined with an adjective in this or that termination. Clark.

To them to use your signet and your name. Shakespeare, Tim. of Athens.

11. General is appended to several offices: as, Attorney General, Solicitor General, Vicar General.

GENERAL. † n. s.

1. The whole; the totality; the main, without insisting on particulars.

G E N

That which makes an action fit to be commanded or for bidden, can be nothing else, in general, but its tendency to promote or hinder the attainment of some end. Norris.

In particulars our knowledge begins, and so spreads itself by degrees to generals. Locke.

I have considered Milton's Paradise Lost in the fable, the characters, the sentiments, and the language; and have shewn that he excels, in general, under each of these heads. Addison.

An history painter paints man in general; a portrait painter, a particular man, and consequently a defective model. Reynolds.

2. The publick; the interest of the whole. Not in use.

Neither my place, nor aught I heard of business,
Hath raised me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Ingluts and swallows other sorrows. Shakespeare, Othello.

3. The vulgar. Not now in use.

The play, I remember, pleased not the million; 'twas caviare to the general; but it was as I received it, and others, whose judgement in such matters cried in the top of mine, an excellent play. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Undervaluing many particulars, (which they truly esteemed,) as rather to be consented to than that the general should suffer. Ld. Clarendon, Hist. Reb. b. 5.

4. [General, Fr.] One that has the command over an army.

A general is one that hath power to command an army. Locke.

The generals on the enemy's side are inferior to several that once commanded the French armies. Addison on the War.

And with a gen'ral's love of conquest glows. Addison.

5. A particular beat of the drum; probably from the preceding word. It is the signal of marching.

GENERALISSIMO. † n. s. [generalissime, French, from general. Addison, having termed Agamemnon generalissimo of the Grecian expedition, (Tatler, No. 152.) is reproved by bishop Hurd with this reflection on the word: "Instead of this cant and ludicrous term, he should have used the more noble one of general, or commander in chief." Addison's Works, edit. Hurd, vol. ii. 337. The examples from Clarendon and Brown, given by Dr. Johnson, might have served to rescue the word from such a charge. The authorities of Sir Henry Wotton, Henry More, and South, which I add, further shew the serious manner in which the word is used.] The supreme commander.

Priuli had passed through all the principal charges of the state in the civil way; and had lastly in the military been generalissimo. Wotton, Elect. of the Duke of Venice.

The officers of the generalissimo of the world, that are as the eyes and ears of the great king, seeing and hearing all things. More, Conj. Cabd. p. 183.

Ingratitude — a sin of an universal comprehension; and, as I may so speak, the generalissimo of sins, having an influence upon all the particular sins and irregularities of our practice. South, Sermon ix. 118.

Commission of generalissimo was likewise given to the prince. Clarendon.

Pompey had deserved the name of great; and Alexander, of the same cognomination, was generalissimo of Greece. Brown.

GENERALITY. n. s. [generalité, French; from general.]

1. The state of being general; the quality of including species or particulars.

Because the curiosity of man's wit doth with peril wade further in the search of things than were convenient, the same is thereby restrained unto such generalities as, every where offering themselves, are apparent to men of the weakest conceit. Hooker.

These certificates do only in the generality mention the parties contumacious and disobedience. Ayliffe, Pereragon.

2. The main body; the bulk; the common mass.

Necessity, not extending to the generality, but resting upon private heads. Raleigh, Ess.

By his own principles he excludes from salvation the generality of his own church; that is, all that do not believe upon his grounds. Tillotson.

The generality of the English have such a favourable opinion of treason, nothing can cure them. Addison.

They publish their ill-natured discoveries with a secret pride, and applaud themselves for the singularity of their judgement, which has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admire. Addison.

The wisest were distracted with doubts, while the generality wandered without any ruler. Rogers.

GENERALIZATION.* n. s. [from generalis, Lat.] The act of reducing to a genus.

The original invention of such words would require a yet greater effort of abstraction, and generalization, than that of nouns adjective. A. Smith on the Form. of Languages.

To GENERALIZE.* v. a. [generalis, Lat.] To reduce to a genus.

Sometimes the name of an individual is given to a general conception, and thereby the individual in a manner generalised. Reid.

He gave to all, that have life, a power generative, thereby to continue their species and kinds. Raleigh, Hist.

In grains and kernels the greatest part is but the nutrient of that generative particle, so disproportionable unto it. Brown.

2. Prolifick; having the power of procreation; fruitful.

If there hath been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty upon the earth, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Brillley.

GENERATOR.* n. s. [generateur, Fr. from genero, Lat.]

1. The power which begets, causes, or produces.

Imagination assimilates the idea of the generator into the reality in the thing engendered. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The person who begets.

Adam hath not only fallen from his Creator, but we ourselves from Adam, our primary generator. Brown, Chet. Mor. li. 28.

GENE'RICAL. } adj. [generique, French; from GENE'RIK. } genus, Latin.] That which comprehends the genus, or distinguishes from another genus, but does not distinguish the species.

The word consumption being applicable to a proper, and improper, to a true and bastard consumption, requires a general description quadrate to both. Barbey on Consumptions.
Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit; yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specific difference of wine, therefore, is its pressure from the grape. Watts, Logic.

GENERICALLY. adv. [from generic.] With regard to the genus, though not the species.

These have all the essential characters of sea-shells, and shew that they are of the very same specific gravity with those to which they are so generically allied. Woodward.

GENEROUSLY. † n. s. [generosité, French; generositas, Latin.]

1. High birth.

To break the heart of generosity,
And make bold power look pale. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

2. The quality of being generous; magnanimity; liberality.

Can he be better principled in the grounds of true virtue and generosity than his young tutor is? Locke on Education.
It would not have been your generosity, so have passed by such a fault as this. Locke.

GENEROUS. † adj. [generosus, Latin; généreux, French.]

1. Not of mean birth; of good extraction.

Let her not be poor, how generous soever; for a man can buy nothing in the market with gentility. Ld. Burligh, Precepts to his Son.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your person. Shakspeare, Othello.

2. Noble of mind; magnanimous; open of heart.

A generous virtue of a vigorous kind,
Pure in the last recesses of the mind.
That generous boldness to defend
An innocent or absent friend. Dryden.

The generous critic fann'd the poet's fire,
And taught the world with reason to admire. Swift.

Such was Roscommon, not more learned than good,
With manners generous as his noble blood. Pope.

The generous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines. Pope.

His generous spouse, Thibano, heav'nly fair,
Nur'd the young stranger with a mother's care. Pope.

Pray for others in such forms, with such length, importunity,
and earnestness, as you use for yourself; and you will find all little ill-natured passions die away, your heart grow great and generous, delighting in the common happiness of others, as you used only to delight in your own. Law.

3. It is used of animals. Spritely; daring; courageous.

So the imperial eagle does not stay
Till the whole carcase he devour,
As this generous hunger understood
That he can never want plenty of food,
He only sucks the tasteful blood. Cowley.

Actæon spies
His opening hounds, and now he hears their cries:
A generous pack. Addison.

4. Liberal; munificent.

When from his vest the young companion bore
The cup the generous landlord own'd before,
And plac'd preciously with the precious bowl,
The stinted kindness of this churlish soul. Parnel.

Fast by the margin of her native flood,
White country waters are well known to fame,
Fair as the bordering flowers the princess stood,
And rich in bounty as the generous stream. Heyman Barab's Daughter.

5. Strong; vigorous.

Having in a digestive furnace drawn off the ardent spirit from some good sack, the phlegm, even in this generous wine, was copious. Boyle.

Those who in southern climes complain
From Rhebus, say they suffer pain,
Must own that pain is well repaid,
By generous wines beneath a shade. Swift.

GENEROUSLY. adv. [from generous.]

1. Not meanly with regard to birth.

2. Magnanimously; nobly.

When all the gods our ruin have foretold,
Yet generously he does his arms withhold. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

3. Liberally; munificently.

GENEROUSNESS. † n. s. [from generous.] The quality of being generous.

The whole Ethnick religion was nothing but a perpetual banishment of all true generosity and freedom of mind.

Is it possible to conceive that the overflowing generosity of the Divine Nature would create immortal beings with mean or envious principles? Spencer on Prod. (1665), p. 82. Collier on Kindness.

GENESIS. † n. s. [Gr. γένεσις; genese, Fr.] "Generation; the first book of Moses, which treats of the production of the world.

The first [book of Moses] is called Genesis, because it contains the history of the creation of the world, with which it begins; and the genealogy of the patriarchs down to the death of Joseph, where it ends. Patriarch on Genesis.

GENET. † n. s. [French. The word originally signified a horseman, and perhaps a gentleman or knight. Dr. Johnson.—The original word is the Spanish ginete, "a light horseman, that rideth a la gincta, called a ginnet." Minsheu, Span. Dict. Our word is often written jennet, and sometimes gennet.] A small sized well proportioned Spanish horse.

You'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have coursers for cousins, and genets for germanes. Shakspeare, Othello.

The king of Navarre escaped by the swiftness of a Spanish gennet; which race, for their winged speed, the poets feigned to be begot of the wind. Fuller, Holy War, p. 180.

It is no more likely that frogs should be engendered in the clouds than Spanish genets be begotten by the wind. Ray.

He shews his statue too, where plac'd on high,
The genet underneath him seems to fly. Dryden, Juv.

GENET.* n. s. [genette, old Fr. gincta, Spanish. Our word is sometimes written ginet.] An animal of the weasel kind; "a beast almost of the bigness of a cat, breeding in Spain. There are two colours of them, black and gray; the fur of the black is most esteemed." Bullokar.

GENETHLIACAL. † adj. [old Fr. genethliaque, from the Gr. γενεθλιακός.] Pertaining to nativities as calculated by astronomers; shewing the configurations of the stars at any birth.

The night immediately before he was slighting the art of those foolish astrologers, and genethliacal ephemerists, that use to pry into the horoscope of nativities. Howell, Vae. Por.

The genethliacal astrologers have other signs, more subtle, though perhaps not much more certain.

Ferrand, Love Melanch. p. 149.

GENETHLIACKS. n. s. [from γενεθλιακός.] The science of calculating nativities, or predicting the future events of life from the stars predominant at the birth.

GENETHLIACK. n. s. [γενεθλιακός.] He who calculates nativities.

The truth of astrological predictions is not to be referred to the constellations: the genethliacks conjecture by the disposition, temper, and complexion of the person. Drummond.

GENEVA. † n. s. [A corruption of genève, French, a juniper-berry.] We used to keep a distilled spirituous waters of juniper in the shops. At present only a better kind is distilled from the juniper-berry: what is commonly sold is made with no better an ingredient than oil of turpentine, put into the still, with a little common salt and the coarsest spirit. Hill, Mat. Med.

GEN

It is now a common word for the fiery liquid called gin. See GRN.

Bid him sleep:
This sign he has ta'en his liquor; and if you meet
An officer preaching of sobriety,
Unless he read it in Geneva print,
Lay him by the heels. Mansinger, Duke of Milan.

GENEVA Bible.* The whole English Bible printed at Geneva, first, in 1560.

That which was done in the Geneva Bible, besides the translation, was what follows. Strype, Life of Abp. Parker.
To some editions of the Geneva Bible, for instance to those of 1599 and of 1611, is subjoined Beza's translation of the New Testament, englished by L. Tomson.

Abp. Newcome on the Eng. Bib. Transl.

GENEVANISM.* n. s. [from Geneva.] Strict Calvinism.

The publick doctrine of the Church of England is not very likely to have been, or to be, upon the party of a faction, that hath so long had a schism on foot against it, to bring in Genevanism into church and state wholly, totally, were it possible. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 72.

GENEVOIS.* n. s. pl. People of Geneva; now written Genevèse.

The Genevois have been very much refined, or, as others will have it, corrupted by the conversation of the French Protestants. Addison on Italy.

GENIAL.† adj. [genial, old Fr. genialis, Lat.]

1. That which contributes to propagation.
Higher of the genial bed by far,
And with mysterious reverence I deem Creator Venus, genial pow'r of love,
The bliss of men below and gods above! Dryden, Fab.
2. That gives cheerfulness or supports life.
Nor will the light of life continue long,
But yields to double darkness nigh at hand;
So much I feel my genial spirits droop. Milton, S. A.
3. Natural; native.
It chiefly proceedeth from natural incapacity, and genial indisposition. Brown, Vulg. Err.
4. Gay; merry.
The celebrated drinking ode of this genial archdeacon [Walter de Mapes] has the regular return of the monkish rhyme. Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. ii.

GENIALLY.† adv. [from genial.]

1. By genius; naturally.
Some men are genially disposed to some opinions, and naturally as averse to others. Glanville, Scopsis.
2. Gayly; cheerfully.
The splendid sun genially warmeth the fertile earth. Harris, Hermes. B. 2. ch. 3.

TO GENICULATE.* v. a. [Lgt. geniculo.] To joint or knot.

GENICULATED. adj. [geniculatus, Lat.] Knotted; jointed.

A piece of some geniculated plant seeming to be part of a sugar-cane. Woodward on Fossils.

GENICULATION.† n. s. [geniculatio, Lat.]

1. Knottiness; the quality in plants of having knots or joints.
2. The act of kneeling.
These are fine points in a question: the solemn festivities; the private use of either sacrament; geniculation at the eucharist, &c. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 307.

GEN

GENIE.* n. s. [old Fr. genie.] Inclination; disposition; turn of mind.

Dr. J. Wallis, the keeper of the University registers, &c. did put into the hands of A. Wood the keys of the school-tower, and the key of the room where the said registers, &c. are reposed, to the end that he might advance his curious genie in antiquities. Life of A. Wood, p. 147.

GENIO. n. s. [genio, Ital. genius, Lat.] A man of a particular turn of mind.

Some genios are not capable of pure affection; and a man is born with talents for it as much as for poetry, or any other science. Teller.

GENITALS. n. s. [genitalis, Lat.] Parts belonging to generation.

Ham is conceived to be Jupiter, who was the youngest son, who is said to have cut off the genitals of his father. Brown.

GENITING.† n. s. [A corruption of Janeton, French, signifying Jane or Janet, having been so called in honour of some lady of that name; and the Scottish dialect calls them Janet apples, which is the same with Janeton: otherwise supposed to be corrupted from Janeting. Dr. Johnson.—May not the word be just as well supposed to be borrowed from the old French genetin, a kind of grape, from which a white wine was made; the apple perhaps resembling it in flavour? See Lacombe and Roq. in V. GENETIN.] An early apple gathered in June.

In July come early pears and plumbs in fruit, genitings, and codlins. Bacon.

GENITIVE.† adj. [genitivus, Lat.] In grammar, the name of a case, which, among other relations, signifies one begotten, as, the father of a son, or one begetting, as, son of a father.

All relatives are said to reciprocate, or mutually infer each other; and therefore they are often expressed by this case, that is to say, the genitive. Harris, Hermes. B. 2. ch. 4.

The relation of possession, or belonging, is often expressed by a case, or different ending of the substantive. The case answers to the genitive case in the Latin, and may still be so called, though perhaps more properly the possessive case. Louth, Gramm.

GENITOR.* n. s. [Lat. genitor; old Fr. geniteur.] A sire; a father.

Profane legends—termed by their genitors and forefathers golden legends. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1676), p. 22.
Whosoever is generative, is from him which is the genitor. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

GENITURE.* n. s. [old Fr. geniture.] Generation; birth.

He had the signifiers in his geniture fortunate. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 7.

This work, by merit first of fame secure,
Is likewise happy in its geniture;
For, since 'tis born when Charles ascends the throne,
It shares at once his fortune and its own.

GENIUS.† n. s. [Lat. genie, Fr. Dr. Johnson has given no instance of the plural number of this word. It is both genii, and geniuses; the former of which belongs to the first definition only; the latter, to any of the rest.]

1. The protecting or ruling power of men, places, or things.

There is none but he
Whose being I do fear: and, under him,
My genius is rebuk'd; as it is said
Antony was by Cæsar. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
The genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

GEN

And as I awake, sweet musick breathe,
Sent by some spirit to mortals good,
Or th' unseen genius of the wood. Milton, R. Pens.
And the tame demon that should guard my throne,
Shrinks at a genius greater than his own. Dryden.
To your glad genius sacrifice this day;
Let common meats respectfully give way. Dryden.
What indeed are the geni of the Arabs, the peris of the Persians, but the elfs and fairies of England?
Hole on the Arabian Nights' Ent. p. 13.

2. A man endowed with superiour faculties.
There is no little writer of Pindarick who is not mentioned as a prodigious genius. Addison.

Among great geniuses, those few draw the admiration of all the world upon them, and stand up as the prodigies of mankind, who by mere strength of natural parts, and without any assistance of art or learning, have produced works that were the delight of their own times, and the wonder of posterity.
Addison, Spect. No. 160.

3. Mental power or faculties.
The state and order does proclaim
The genius of that royal dame. Waller.

4. Disposition of nature by which any one is qualified for some peculiar employment.

A happy genius is the gift of nature. Dryden, Dufresnoy.
Your majesty's sagacity, and happy genius for natural history, is a better preparation for enquiries of this kind than all the dead learning of the schools. Burnet, Theory, Pref.

One science only will one genius fit;
So vast is art, so narrow human wit. Pope on Criticism.
The Romans, though they had no great genius for trade, yet were not entirely neglectful of it. Arbutnot on Coins.

5. Nature; disposition.
Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes. Dryden.
Another genius and disposition improper for philosophical contemplations is not so much from the narrowness of their understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them. Burnet, Theory, Pref.
He tames the genius of the stubborn plain. Pope.

GENOËSE.* n. s. pl. The people of Genoa in Italy.

The Genoese are esteemed extremely cunning, industrious, and inured to hardship above the rest of the Italians.
Addison on Italy.

GENT.† adj. [gent, old French. Dr. Johnson.—
This word, in the old romances, is a common epithet applied to ladies. Chaucer's Sir Thopas, however, is distinguished by the same term, "fair and gent." In this sense, it appears to have been a Provençal word: "Gente, gentile, nobile, gra-zioso; venuta dal Provenzale." Vocab. Della
Crusca.] Elegant; pretty; soft; gentle; polite.
A word now disused, Dr. Johnson says; but perhaps transformed, it may be added, into janty. See JANTY.

Vespuvian, with great spoil and rage,
Forewarned all: till Genuissa gent
Persuaded him to cease. Spenser, F. Q.
She that was noble, wise, as fair and gent,
Cast how she might their harmless lives preserve. Fairfax.

GENTEEL.† adj. [gentil, French. Our word was at first gentile. "Other guests, that were bidden, gentilely alleged reasonable impediments." Martin,
Marr. of Priests, 1554. sign. li. r. And this method of writing it continued till about the close of the seventeenth century. Stillingfleet and Fell both use gentile for genteel.]

1. Polite; elegant in behaviour; civil.
He had a genteeler manner of binding the chains of this kingdom than most of his predecessors. Swift to Gay.
Their poets have no notion of genteel comedy, and fall into

GEN

the most filthy double meanings when they have a mind to make their audience merry. Addison on Italy.

2. Graceful in mien.
So spruce that he can never be genteel. Tatler.

3. Elegantly dressed.
Several ladies that have twice her fortune, are not able to be always so genteel, and so constant at all places of pleasure and expence. Law.

GENTE'ELLY.† adv. [from genteel. See the etymology of genteel.]

1. Elegantly; politely.
Those that would be genteelly learned, need not purchase it at the dear rate of being atheists. Glantville, Scope. Pref.

concludes the great work of dining genteelly. South.

2. Gracefully; handsomely.
She is not handsome, being very sickly, but seems lively, and genteelly shaped. Swinnburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 39.

GENTE'ELNESS. n. s. [from genteel.]

1. Elegance; gracefulness; politeness.
He had a genius full of genteelness and spirit, having nothing that was ungraceful in his postures and dresses. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Parmegiano has dignified the genteelness of modern effeminacy, by uniting it with the simplicity of the ancients and the grandeur and severity of Michael Angelo. Reynolds.

2. Qualities befitting a man of rank.

GE'NTIAN.† n. s. [gentiane, French; gentiana, Latin. The name is said to be taken from that of Genius, king of Illyria, who is reported to have first discovered the properties of this plant.] Felwort or baldmony.

The root of gentian is large and long, of a tolerably firm texture, and remarkably tough: it has a faintish and disagreeable smell, and an extremely bitter taste. Hill, Mat. Med.

If it be fistulous, and the orifice small, dilate it with gentian roots. Wierman, Surgery.

GENTIANE'LLA. n. s. A kind of blue colour.

GENTILE. n. s. [gentilis, Latin.]

1. One of an uncovenanted nation; one who knows not the true God.

Tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the gentile. Rom. ii. 2.
Gentiles or infidels, in those actions, upon both the spiritual and temporal good, have been in one pursuit conjoined. Bacon.

2. A person of rank. Obsolete.
Fine Basil desireth it may be her lot
To grow, as a gilliflower, trim in her pot;
That ladies and gentiles, for whom we do serve,
May help him as needeth, poor life to preserve. Tusser.

GE'NTILE.* adj. [Lat. gentilis.] Belonging to a na-

Her complaisance and gentilesses. Audibros.

GE'NTILISH.* adj. [from Gentile.] Heathenish; pagan.

Not filing the tongue of Scripture to a Gentilish idiom.

GE'NTILISM.† n. s. [gentilisme, French; from gentile.] Heathenism; paganism.

If invocation of saints had been produced in the apostolical times, it would have looked like the introducing of gentilism again. Stillingfleet.

This was one of those fantasies, which abused the minds of men in the darkness of gentilism. Spenser on Prof. p. 174.

He that if he had been born of heathen parents, or put out to nurse to an Indian, would have sucked in as much of gentilism.

Hammond, Works, iv. 511.

The Greeks, in the time of sickness and mournings for the dead, retain not only ceremonies by us accounted superstitions, but also, savouring somewhat of ancient gentility.

Ricaut, Gr. Ch. p. 293.

GENTILITIOUS. adj. [gentilitius, Latin.]

1. Endemial; peculiar to a nation.

That an unsavory odour is gentilitious, or national unto the Jews, reason or sense will not induce. Brown.

2. Hereditary; entailed on a family.

The common cause of this distemper is a particular and perhaps a gentilitious disposition of body. Arbutnot.

GENTILITY. n. s. [gentilité, French; from gentil, French; gentilis, Latin.]

1. Good extraction; dignity of birth.

'Tis meet a gentle heart should ever shew
By courtesy the fruit of true gentility. Sir J. Harrington.
I have read Shakspeare at Lincoln's Inn, and have published my Canons of Criticism; and for this I am to be degraded of my gentility! Edward's Can. of Cr. Pref.

2. Elegance of behaviour; gracefulness of mien; nicety of taste.

A dangerous law against gentility.

Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.
Gentility here does not signify that rank of people called gentry, but what the French express by gentillesse, i. e. elegantia, urbanitas. Thobald on Shakspeare.

All the men of quality [began] to speak the Gallic idiom in their houses, as a high strain of gentility.

Harris, Philolog. Inquiries.

3. Gentry; the class of persons well born.

Gavelkind must needs, in the end, make a poor gentility. Davies on Ireland.

GENTLEMANSHIP.* n. s. [from gentleman.] Carriage of a gentleman; quality of a gentleman.

His fine-gentlemanship did him no good. Ld. Halifax.

He treated me in a gentlemanlike manner: It should rather be gentlemanly; otherwise it is a reflection, as if his gentlemanship was affected, or mine was doubtful. Pegge, Anecd. Eng. Language.

GENTLENESS.* n. s. [from gentle.]

1. Dignity of birth; goodness of extraction. Gentleness and gentility are the same thing; and if they are not the same words, they come from one and the same original; from whence likewise is deduced the word gentleman. Pegge, Anonym. i. 46.

2. Gentlemanly conduct; elegance of behaviour. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

I must confess,
I thought you lord of more true gentleness. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

I love measure i' the feet, and number i' the voice; they are gentlenesses, that oftentimes draw no less than the face. B. Jonson, Epicene.

3. Softness of manners; sweetness of disposition; meekness; tenderness.

My lord Sebastian,
The truth, you speak, doth lack some gentleness. Shakespeare.
Your brave and haughty scorn of all,
Was stately and monarchial;

All gentleness with that esteem'd,
A dull and slavish virtue seem'd. Cowley.

Still she retains
Her maiden gentleness, and oft at eve
Visits the herds. Milton, Comus.

The perpetual gentleness and inherent goodness of the Ormond family. Dryden, Fob. Dedicat.

Changes are brought about silently and insensibly, with all imaginable benignity and gentleness. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Masters must correct their servants with gentleness, prudence, and mercy. Rogers.

Women ought not to think gentleness of heart despicable in a man. Richardson, Clarissa.

4. Kindness; benevolence. Obsolete.

The meane men, they murmure and grudge, and say, the gentleman have all, and there never were so many gentlemen and so little gentleness. B. Gilpin, Sermon before K. Edw. VI. p. 41.

The gentleness of all the gods go with thee. Shakespeare.

GENTLESHIP. n. s. [from gentle.] Carriage of a gentleman. Obsolete.

Some in France, which will needs be gentleman, have more gentleship in their hat than in their head. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

GENTLEWOMAN. n. s. [gentle and woman. See GENTLEMAN.]

1. A woman of birth above the vulgar; a woman well descended.

The gentlewomen of Rome did not suffer their infants to be so long swathed as poorer people. Albiat, Desc. of the World.

Doth this sir Proteus
Often resort unto this gentlewoman? Shakespeare.

Gentlewomen may do themselves much good by kneeling upon a cushion and weeding. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. A woman who waits about the person of one of high rank.

The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's daughter,
To be her mistress' mistress. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Her gentlewomen, like the Nereids,
So many mermaids, tended her i'th eyes,
And made their bends adorings. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. A word of civility or irony.

Now, gentlewoman, you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical down-cast look. Dryden.

GENTLEWOMANLIKE.* adj. [from gentlewoman.] Becoming a gentlewoman. Sherwood.

GENTLY. adv. [from gentle.]

1. Softly; meekly; tenderly; inoffensively; kindly. My mistress gently chides the fault I made. Dryden.

The mischiefs that come by inadvertency, or ignorance, are but very gently to be taken notice of. Locke.

2. Softly; without violence.

Fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gently warded, craves
A noble cunning. Shakespeare, Coriol.

A sort of great bat, as men lie asleep with their legs naked, will suck their blood at a wound so gently made as not to awake them. Grew, Museum.

GENTOO.* n. s. [The word Gentoo has been, and is still equally, mistaken to signify, in the proper sense of the term, the professors of the braminal religion; whereas Gent, or Gentoo, means animal in general, and in its more confined sense, mankind; but is never, in the Shanscrit dialect, nor even in the modern jargon of Bengal, appropriated particularly to such as follow the dictates of Brihma. The four great tribes have each their own separate appellation; but they have no common or collective term that comprehends the whole nation under the idea affixed by Europeans to the word Gentoo. Possibly the Portuguese, on their first arrival in India, hearing the word frequently in the mouths of the natives as applied to mankind in general, might adopt it for the domestic appellation of the Indians themselves; perhaps also their bigotry might force from the word Gentoo a fanciful allusion to Gentile, a Pagan. Halhed, Code of Gentoo Laws, Pref. p. xxi.] An aboriginal inhabitant of Hindostan.

Since the age of Tamerlane, Mahometanism has been uniformly the religion of the government of India. The *Gentoo*s, however, are still said to exceed in number the Mahometans in the proportion of ten to one. — The religious creed of the *Gentoo*s is a system of the most barbarous idolatry. Professor White, Sermon. x.

I allude to that most cruel custom, by which the wife of the Gentoo is induced to burn herself on the pile which consumes the ashes of her husband. Ibid.

GENTRY.* n. s. [gentlery, gentry, from gentle. Dr. Johnson. — It may be from the Lat. gens, gensis, a race, a family. Chaucer, however, uses genterie for gentility.]

1. Birth; condition; rank derived from inheritance.

You are certainly a gentleman,
Clerk-like experienc'd, which no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents' noble name,
In whose success we are gentle. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

2. Class of people above the vulgar; those between the vulgar and the nobility.

They slaughtered many of the gentry, for whom no sex or age could be accepted for excuse. Sidney.

Let states, that aim at greatness, take heed how their nobility and gentry multiply too fast. Bacon, Ornam. Ration.

How cheerfully she will cry
A satire, and the gentry buy.

3. A term of civility, real or ironical.

The many-colour'd gentry there above,
By turns are rul'd by tumult and by love.

4. Civility; complaisance. Obsolete.

Show us so much gentry and good will,
As to extend your date with us a while.

GENUFLACTION. n. s. [genuflexio, French; genus and flecto, Lat.] The act of bending the knee; adoration expressed by bending the knee.

Boots and shoes are so long snouted, that one can hardly kneel in God's house, where all genuflexion and postures of devotion and decency are quite out of use.

Howell, Lett. (1646), iii. 2.

Here use all the rights of adoration, genuflexions, wax-candles, incense, oblations, prayers only excepted.

GENUINE. adj. [genuinus, Latin.] Not spurious; not counterfeit; real; natural; true.

Experiments were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones.

The belief and remembrance, and love and fear of God, have so great influence to make men religious, that where any of these is, the rest, together with the true and genuine effects of them, are supposed to be.

A sudden darkness covers all;

True genuine night: night added to the groves.

GENUINELY. adv. [from genuine.] Without adulteration; without foreign admixtures; naturally.

There is another agent able to analyze compound bodies less violently, more genuinely, and more universally than the fire.

GENUINENESS. n. s. [from genuine.] Freedom from any thing counterfeit; freedom from adulteration; purity; natural state.

To show how day and night, winter and summer, arise from Copernicus's hypothesis, will not only explain these verses, but exceedingly set out the fitness and genuineness of the hypothesis itself.

It is not essential to the genuineness of colours to be durable.

GENUS. n. s. [Latin.] In science, a class of being, comprehending under it many species: as, quadruped is a genus comprehending under it almost all terrestrial beasts.

A general idea is called by the schools genus, and it is one common nature agreeing to several other common natures: so animal is a genus, because it agrees to horse, lion, whale, and butterfly.

If minerals are not convertible into another species, though of the same genus, much less can they be surmised reducible into a species of another genus.

GEOCENTRIC. adj. [γῆ and κέντρον; geocentrique, French.] Applied to a planet or orb having the earth for its centre, or the same centre with the earth.

GEODESIA. n. s. [γεωδαισία; geodesie, French.] That part of geometry which contains the doctrine or art of measuring surfaces, and finding the contents of all plain figures.

GEODESICAL. adj. [from geodesia.] Relating to the art of measuring surfaces; comprehending or showing the art of measuring land.

GEONE. n. s. [Greek γῆ, from γῆ, the earth.] Earth-stone.

GEOGRAPHY. n. s. [γῆ and γραφία; geographie, Fr.] One who describes the earth according to the position of its different parts.

A greater part of the earth hath ever been peopled than hath been known or described by geography.

The bay of Naples is called the Center by the old geographers.

From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a wiser geographer by love.

GEOGRAPHICAL. adj. [geographique, French; from geography.] Relating to geography; belonging to geography.

GEOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from geographical.] In a geographical manner; according to the rules of geography.

Minerva lets Ulysses into the knowledge of his country; she geographically describes it to him.

GEOGRAPHY. n. s. [γῆ and γραφία; geographie, Fr.] Geography, in a strict sense, signifies the knowledge of the circles of the earthly globe, and the situation of the various parts of the earth. When it is taken in a little larger sense, it includes the knowledge of the seas also; and in the largest sense of all, it extends to the various customs, habits, and governments of nations.

Olympus is extolled by the Greeks as attaining unto heaven; but geography makes slight account hereof, when they discourse of Andes or Teneriff.

According to ancient Fables the Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adriatick, carrying their ships upon their shoulders: a mark of great ignorance in geography.

GEOLOGY. n. s. [γῆ and λόγος.] The doctrine of the earth; the knowledge of the state and nature of the earth.

GEOMANCER. n. s. [γῆ and μαντή.] A fortune teller; a caster of figures; a cheat who pretends to foretell futurity by other means than the astrologer.

Fortunetellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the incantatory impostors, though commonly men of inferior rank, daily delude the vulgar.

GEOMANCY. n. s. [γῆ and μαντή; geomance, French.] This word is used by Chaucer. Sometimes it is written geomanty. "I have seen some notes of his — on Cattan's Geomantie." Aubrey's Lett. and Anec. ii. 473.] The act of casting figures; the act of foretelling by figures what shall happen.

According to some there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy.

He therefore sent out all his senses,
To bring him in intelligences;
Which vulgars, out of ignorance,
Mistake for falling in a trance;
But those that trade in geomancy,
Affirm to be the strength of fancy.

GEOMANTICK. adj. [from geomancy.] Pertaining to the act of casting figures.

Two geomantick figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid;
One when direct, and one when retrograde.

GEOMETER. n. s. [γεωμέτρης; geometre, French.] One skilled in geometry; a geometrickian.

The plane of many-sided squares,
That wont be drawn out by geometers.
He discerns presently, by your judgement of algebra, what a geometer you are like to prove.
He became one of the chief geometers of his age.

GEOMETRICAL. adj. [geometral, Fr; from geometry.] Pertaining to geometry.

GEOMETRICK. adj. [γεωμετρικός; geometrique, Fr.] Pertaining to geometry.

A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is distinguished by reason.

This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles, doth teach to contrive several powers.

are described or laid down by geometry.

Must men take the measure of God just by the same geometrical proportions that he did, that gather'd the height and bigness of Hercules by his foot. Stillin' fleet.

Does not this wise philosopher assert,
That the vast orb, which casts so far his beams,
Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?
That the dimensions of his glorious face
Two geometrick feet does scarce surpass?

Blackmore.

3. Disposed according to geometry.

Geometrick jasper seemeth of affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis cruciformis. Grew, Museum.

GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [from geometrical.] According to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanics. Ray on the Creation.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. s. [γεωμέτρης.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer.

Although there be a certain truth, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof. Brown.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles! Watts on the Mind.

To GEO'METRIZE. v. n. [γεωμετρέω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtained good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though prettily shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figuration, and yet confined herself to geometrize. Boyle.

GEO'METRY. n. s. [γεωμετρία; geometrie, French.]

Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice. Harris.

In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world. Ray on the Creation.

Him also for my censor I disdain,
Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain;
Who counts geometry and numbers toys,
And with his foot the sacred dust destroys. Dryden, Pers.

GEOPO'NICAL. adj. [γη and πόνος; geoponique, Fr.]

Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geoponical, or such as have treated agere rustica. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GEOPO'NICKS. † n. s. [γη and πόνος.] The science of cultivating the ground; the doctrine of agriculture.

The study of geoponicks has always been of esteem in the world; and the writings of Virgil, Constantine, Theophrastus, Varro, Columella, and Palladius, as classical learning as any we have amongst us. Letters (Plot to Charlett.) vol. i. p. 73.

Herbs and wholesome sallots, and other plain and useful parts of geoponicks. Evclyn, Acet. Dedic.

GEORGE. † n. s. [Georgius, Lat.]

1. A figure of St. George on horseback worn by the knights of the garter.

Look on my george, I am a gentleman;
Rate me at what thou wilt. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. A brown loaf. Of this sense I know not the original. Dr. Johnson.—Cowel, under panis mili- taris, writes, "hard basket, brown george camp bread, coarse and black." Mr. Bagshaw thinks that the figure of St. George might be stamped upon such bread.

Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown george, with lousy swobbers, fed. Dryden, Pers.

3. GEORGE Noble. A gold coin, current at six shillings and eight pence, in the reign of king Henry VIII.

The gold coins of Henry the Eighth, were sovereigns, half-sovereigns, rials, half and quarter-rials, angels, angelets, and quarter-angels, george-nobles, forty-penny pieces, crowns of the double rose, and half-crowns. Leake on Eng. Coins.

GE'ORGICAL.* adj. See GEORGICK. In the Hist. of the Royal Society, georgical is applied to a list of persons skilled in the doctrine of agriculture. Vol. i. p. 407.

GE'ORGICK. † n. s. [γεωργικόν; georgiques, Fr.] Some part of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry. Addison.

Georgicks are books speaking of husbandry and tillage. Cockeram, and Bullokar.

Much less ought the low phrases and terms of art, that are adapted to husbandry, have any place in such a work as the Georgick, which is not to appear in the natural simplicity and nakedness of its subject, but in the pleasantest dress that poetry can bestow upon it. Addison on Virgil's Georgicks.

The pleasures of imagination, the essay on the Georgicks, and his [Addison's] last papers in the Spectator and Guardian, are models of language. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

GE'ORGICK. adj. Relating to the doctrine of agriculture.

Here I peruse the Mantuan's georgick strains,
And learn the labours of Italian swains. Gay, Rural Sports.

GEORGIUM SIDUS.* n. s. [Latin; called after his majesty king George III.] One of the planets.

Thou all-shaking thunder, Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world; Crack Nature's mould, all germins spill at once That make ungrateful man. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To GERMINATE. v. n. [germino, Latin.] To sprout; to shoot; to bud; to put forth.

This action is furthered by the chalcites, which hath within a spirit that will put forth and germinate, as we see in chymical trials. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The seeds of all kinds of vegetables being planted near the surface of the earth, in a convenient soil, amongst matter proper for the formation of vegetables, would germinate, grow up, and replenish the face of the earth. Woodward.

To GERMINATE.* v. a. To cause to sprout.

The tree of goodness which is set by fear, strengthened by faith, watered by grace, germinated by godliness, will wax green by hope, will fructify by love, will build by learning.

Price, Creation of the Prince, (1610,) sign. E. 2.

GERMINATION. n. s. [germination, French, from germinate.] The act of sprouting or shooting; growth.

For acceleration of germination, we shall handle the subject of plants generally. Bacon.

The duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination; and surely, had he been a plant, he would have been reckoned among the sponte nascentes. Wotton.

There is but little similitude between a terreous humidity and plantal germinations. Glanville, Scopsis.

Suppose the earth should be carried to the great distance of Saturn; there the whole globe would be one frigid zone; there would be no life, no germination. Bentley, Sermon.

To GERN.* See To GERN.

GEROCOMY.* n. s. [gerocomie, Fr. from γέρων, an old man, and κομῆναι, to take care of.] That part of medicine, which treats of the proper regimen to be observed in old age.

GEROCOMICAL.* adj. Pertaining to that part of medicine, which concerns old age.

It is my earnest desire, that physicians would study the gerocomical part of physick more than they do.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, (1666,) p. 257.

GERUND.† n. s. [gerundium, Lat.] In the Latin grammar, a kind of verbal noun, which governs cases like a verb.

There be belonging to the infinitive mood of verbs certain voices called gerunds; which have both the active and passive signification. Lilly.

The participle with the preposition before it, and still retaining its government, answers to what is called in Latin the gerund. Louth.

GESLING.* n. s. In the north of England, a gosling; formed from geesc, as the other is from goose.

GEST.† n. s. [geste, old French; "chanson de geste, chanson historique, dans laquelle on célébroit les hauts faits des guerriers; la geste, l'histoire." Roq. Gloss. Lang. Rom. From the Lat gesta, res geste.]

1. A deed; an action; an achievement.

Who fair them quites, as him beseeemed best, And goodly gan discourse of many a noble gest. Spenser, F. Q.

You use to sharpen and whet your understanding in the excitation of high deeds and gests; in which you have employed much time. Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 180.

The Acts of the Apostles, which contain the peregrinations and gests of St. Paul, are a great master-key to open his Epistles. Abp. Sancroft, Sermon, p. 122.

2. Show; representation.

Gests should be interlarded after the Persian manner, by ages young and old.

3. The roll or journal of the several days, and stages prefixed, in the progresses of our kings, many of them being still extant in the herald's office. [giste, Fr. a bed, and lodging place, from the Lat. jacet.]

I'll give you my commission, To let him there a month, behind the gest, Prefix'd for's parting. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

4. A stage; so much of a journey as passes without interruption. In all senses obsolete. Hammond writes it gess, in the present sense; if it be not an error of the press.

The constant stage and post in our gestes to heaven.

Hammond, Works, iv. 485.

He distinctly sets down the gests and progress thereof. Brown.

GESTATION. † n. s. [gestatio, Latin.] Our word is pronounced unusual and uncouth by Heylin, in 1656. Yet it appears in the vocabulary of Cockeram, many years before that date, with the general sense of "a bearing, a carrying." The act of bearing the young in the womb.

Aristotle affirmeth the birth of the infant, or time of its gestation, extendeth sometimes unto the eleventh month; but Hippocrates avers that it exceedeth not the tenth. Brown.

Why in viviparous animals, in the time of gestation, should the nourishment be carried to the embryo in the womb, which at other times goeth not that way? Ray on the Creation.

GE'STATORY.* adj. [Lat. gestatorius.] Capable of being worn or carried.

The crowns and garlands of the ancients were either gestatory, such as they were about their heads and necks, &c.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 90.

GE'STICK.* adj. [from gest.] Legendary; historical.

Dames of ancient days

Have led their children through the mirthful maze;

And the gay grandsire, skill'd in gestick lore,

Has frisk'd beneath the burden of threescore.

Goldsmith, Traveller.

To GESTICULATE. † v. n. [gesticulator, Latin; gesticuler, Fr.] To play antick tricks; to shew postures. Dict.

Their hands, eyes, gesticulating severally, and after each other; swimming round, and now and then conforming themselves to a Dorick stilness. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 306.

They [the Spaniards] talk louder, and argue with more vehemence than even the French or Italians, and gesticulate with equal if not superior eagerness.

Swinburne, Tour through Spain, Lct. 42.

To GESTICULATE.* v. a. To act; to imitate.

If I knew any man so yile

To act the crimes these whippers reprehend,

Or what their servile apes gesticulate,

I should not then much muse their shreds were lik'd.

B. Jonson, Apol. Dialogue.

GESTICULATION. † n. s. [gesticulatio, Latin; gesticulation, Fr. from gesticulate.] Antick tricks; various postures.

The wanton gesticulations of a virgin, in a wild assembly of gallants warmed with wine, could be no other than riggish and unmaidenly. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

They leap forth below, a mistress leading them; and with antick gesticulation and action, after the manner of the old pantomimi, they dance over a distracted comedy of love, expressing their confused affections, in the scenical persons and habits of the four European nations. B. Jonson, Masques.

Mimical and fantastical gesticulations.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 29.

GESTICULATOR.* n. s. [Lat. gesticulator.] One that shews postures or tricks.

If king Alfred really went into the Danish camp as a spy, he took upon him the character of a mimick, a dancer, a gesticulator, a jack-pudding. Pegge.

GESTICULATORY.* adj. [from gesticulate.] Representing in an antick manner.

No bishop shall permit plays or sports, undoubtedly mimical and gesticulatory entertainments, to be exhibited in his presence.

Watson, Hist. E. P.

GE'STOUR.* n. s. [from gest.] A narrator. Obsolete.

Gestours for to tellen tales. Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas.

The proper business of a gestour was to recite tales or gests; which was only one of the branches of the minstrel's profession.

Tyrrhitt on Chaucer.

GE'STURE. n. s. [gero, gestum, Latin; geste, Fr.]

1. Action or posture expressive of sentiment.

Ah, my sister, if you had heard his words or seen his gestures, when he made me know what and to whom his love was, you would have matched in yourself those two rarely matched together, pity and delight. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.

Humble and reverend gestures in our approaches to God express the inward reverence of our souls. Wh. Duty of Man.

2. Movement of the body.

Grace was in all her steps, heav'n in her eye,

In ev'ry gesture dignity and love!

Milton, P. L.

Every one will agree in this, that we ought either to lay aside all kinds of gesture, or at least to make use of such only as are graceful and expressive. Addison, Spect.

To GE'STURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To accompany with action or posture.

Our attire disgraceth it; it is not orderly read, nor gestured as becometh. Hooker.

He undertook so to gesture and muffle up himself in his hood, as the duke's manner was, that none should discern him.

Wotton.

To GET. † v. a. pret. I got, anciently gat; part. pass. get, or gotten, and antiently get. [Sax. getan, geatan; Norm. Fr. get, hath begotten. Kelham.]

1. To procure; to obtain.

Thine be the cosset, well hast thou it got. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Most of these things might be more exactly tried by the Torricellian experiments, if we could get tubes so accurately blown that the cavity were perfectly cylindrical. Boyle.

Such a conscience, as has not been wanting to itself, in endeavouring to get the utmost and clearest information about the will of God, that its power, advantages, and opportunities could afford it, is that great internal judge, whose absolution is a rational and sure ground of confidence. South.

He insensibly got a facility, without perceiving how; and that is attributed wholly to nature, which was much more the effect of use and practice. Locke.

The man who lives upon alms, gets him his set of admirers, and delights in superiority. Addison, Spect.

Sphinx was a monster that would eat

Whatever stranger she could get,

Unless his ready wit disclos'd,

The subtle riddle she propos'd. Addison, Whig Examiner.

This practice is to be used at first, in order to get a fixed habit of attention, and in some cases only. Watts.

The word get is variously used: we say to get money, to get in, to get off, to get ready, to get a stomach, and to get a cold.

Watts, Logic.

2. To force; to seize.

Such losels and scattlings cannot easily, by any constable, or other ordinary officer, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser on Ireland.

The king seeing this, started from where he sat,

Out from his trembling hand his weapon gat.

Daniel.

All things, but one, you can restore;

The heart you get returns no more.

Waller.

3. To win by contest.

Henry the sixth hath lost

All that which Henry the fifth had gotten.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He gat his people great honour, and he made battles, protecting the host with his sword. 1 Mac. iii. 3.

To get the day of them of his own nation, would be a most unhappy day for him. 2 Mac. v. 6.

Auria held that course to have drawn the galleys within his great ships, who thundering amongst them with their great ordnance, might have opened a way unto his galleys to have gotten a victory. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

GET

4. To have possession of; to have. This sense is commonly in the compound preterite.

Then forcing thee, by fire he made thee bright;
Nay, thou hast got the face of man. Herbert.

5. To beget upon a female.

These boys are boys of ice; they'll none of her: sure they are bastards to the English, the French never got them. Shakespeare.

Women with study'd arts they vex:

Ye gods destroy that impious sex;

And if there must be some t' invoke

Your pow'rs, and make your altars smoke,

Come down yourselves, and, in their place,

Get a more just and noble race. Waller.

Children they got on their female captives. Locke.

If you'll take 'em as their fathers got 'em, so and well; if not, you must stay till they get a better generation. Dryden.

A father, right to get a child? Prior.

Let ev'ry married man, that's grave and wise,

Take a tartuff of known ability,

Who shall so settle lasting reformation;

First get a son, then give him education. Dorset.

The god of day, descending from above,

Mixt with the day, and got the queen of love. Granville.

6. To gain as profit.

Though creditors will lose one-fifth of their principal and use, and landlords one-fifth of their income, yet the debtors and tenants will not get it. Locke.

7. To gain as superiority or advantage.

If they get ground and vantage of the king,

Then join you with them like a rib of steel. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

8. To earn; to gain by labour.

Having no mines, nor any other way of getting or keeping of riches but by trade, so much of our trade as is lost, so much of our riches must necessarily go with it. Locke.

If it be so much pains to count the money I would spend, what labour did it cost my ancestors to get it? Locke.

9. To receive as a price or reward.

Any tax laid on foreign commodities in England raises their price, and makes the importer get more for them; but a tax laid on your home-made commodities lessens their price. Locke.

10. To learn.

This defect he frequently lamented, it being harder with him to get one sermon by heart than to pen twenty. Fell.

Get by heart the more common and useful words out of some judicious vocabulary. Watts.

The latent air is got away in bubbles. Boyle.

There are few bodies whose minute parts stick so close together, but that it is possible to meet with some other body whose small parts may get between, and so disjoint them. Boyle.

There was but an insensible diminution of the liquor upon the recess of whatever it was that got through the cork. Boyle.

Although the universe, and every part thereof, are objects full of excellency, yet the multiplicity thereof is so various, that the understanding falls under a kind of despondency of getting through so great a task. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

If there should be any leak at the bottom of the vessel, yet very little water would get in, because no air could get out. Wilkins, Math. Magic.

O hear'n, in what a lab'rinth am I led!

I could get out, but she detains the thread! Dryden.

So have I seen some fearful hare maintain
A course, till tir'd before the dog she lay;
Who, stretch'd behind her, pants upon the plain,
Past pow'r to kill, as she to get away. Dryden, Ann. Mirab.
The more oily and light part of this mass would get above
the other, and swim upon it. Burnet, Theory.
Having got through the foregoing passage, let us go on to his next argument. Locke.

The removing of the pains we feel is the getting out of misery, and consequently the first thing to be done, in order to happiness, absent good. Locke.

If, having got into the sense of the epistles, we will but compare what he says, in the places where he treats of the same subject, we can hardly be mistaken in his sense. Locke.

I got up as fast as possible, girt on my rapier, and snatched up my hat, when my landlady came up to me. Tatler.

Bucephalus would let nobody get upon him but Alexander the Great. Addison on Italy.

Imprison'd fires, in the close dungeons pent,
Roar to get loose, and struggle for a vent;

Eating their way, and undermining all,
Till with a mighty burst whole mountains fall. Addison.

When Alma now, in diff'rent ages,
Has finish'd her ascending stages,
Into the head at length she gets,
And there in publick grandeur sits,
To judge of things. Prior.

I resolved to break through all measures to get away. Swift.

2. To fall; to come by accident.

Two or three men of the town are got among them. Tatler.

3. To find the way; to insinuate itself.

When an egg is made hard by boiling, since there is nothing that appears to get in at the shell, unless some little particles, of the water, it is not easy to discover from whence else this change proceeds than from a change made in the texture of the parts. Boyle.

He raves; his words are loose
As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense:
So high he's mounted in his airy hopes,
That now the wind is got into his head,
And turns his brains to frenzy. Dryden, Span. Friar.

A child runs to overtake and get up to the top of his shadow, which still advances at the same rate that he does. Locke.

Should dressing, feasting, and balls once get among the Cantons, their military roughness would be quickly lost. Addison.

The fluids which surround bodies, upon the surface of the globe, get in between the surfaces of bodies when they are at any distance. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

4. To move; to remove.

Get home with thy fewel made ready to set;
The sooner, and easier carriage to get. Tusset.

5. To have recourse to.

The Turks made great haste through the midst of the town ditch, to get up into the bulwark to help their fellows. Knolles.

Lying is so cheap a cover for any miscarriage, and so much in fashion, that a child can scarce be kept from getting into
it. Locke.

6. To go; to repair.

They ran to their weapons, and furiously assailed the Turks, now fearing no such matter, and were not as yet all got into the castle. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

A knot of ladies, got together by themselves, is a very school of impertinence. Swift.

7. To put one's self in any state.

They might get over the river Avon at Stratford, and get between the king and Worcester. Clarendon.

We can neither find source nor issue for such an excessive mass of waters, neither where to have them; nor, if we had them, how to get quit of them. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Without his assistance we can no more get quit of our affliction, than but by his permission we should have fallen into it. Wake, Prep. for Death.

There is a sort of men who pretend to divest themselves of partiality on both sides, and to get above that imperfect idea of their subject which little writers fall into. Pope on Homer.

As the obtaining the love of valuable men is the happiest end of this life, so the next felicity is to get rid of fools and scoundrels. Pope to Swift.

8. To become by any act, what one was not before.

The laughing sot, like all unthinking men,
Bathes and gets drunk; then bathes and drinks again. Dryden.

9. To be a gainer; to receive advantage.

Like jewels to advantage set,
Her beauty by the shade does get. Waller.

10. To GET off. To escape.

The galleys, by the benefit of the shores and shallows, got off. Bacon, War with Spain.

Whate'er thou dost, deliver not thy sword;
With that thou may'st get off, tho' odds oppose thee. Dryden.

11. To GET up. To rise from repose.

Sheep will get up betimes in the morning to feed against rain.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

12. To GET up. To rise from a seat.

13. To remove from a place.
Get you up from about the tabernacle of Koran, Dathan, and Abiram. Numb. xvi.

14. To get, in all its significations, both active and neutral, implies the acquisition of something, or the arrival at some state or place by some means;
except in the use of the preterite compound, which often implies mere possession: as, he has got a good estate, does not always mean that he has acquired, but barely that he possesses it. So we say the lady has got black eyes, merely meaning that she has them.

GETTER. † n. s. [from get.]

1. One who procures or obtains.

Them that ought to have been the most comfortours of the poor, those have we seen to be the most greedy getters and pouloyners for their misbegotten heirs.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554), sign. B. b. 4.

2. One who begets on a female.

Peace is a very lethargy, a getter of more bastard-children than war's a destroyer of men. Shakspeare, Coriol.

GETTING. n. s. [from get.]

1. Act of getting; acquisition.

Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding. Prov. iv. 7.

2. Gain; profit.

Who hath a state to repair may not despise small things;
and it is less dishonourable to abridge a petty charge than to stoop to petty gettings. Bacon.

The meaner families return a small share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child. Swift.

GE'WGAW. † n. s. [gezaf, Saxon; joyau, French.]

Dr. Johuson. — What we write gewgaw is written, in the Anglosaxon, gezaf. It is the past participle of the verb ge-gifan; and means any such trifling thing as is given away or presented to any one.
Instead of gewgawes it is sometimes written gigawes and gewgawdes. Mr. Horne Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 266. — I have given the whole of Mr. Tooke's assertion, which he applies equally to gaud, that I might not be thought to misrepresent his meaning.
But neither gaud, nor gewgaw, seems to have any connection with the Saxon verb to give. See GAUD.
Is it necessary that a trifle, a bauble, must be that which is given away? Surely the Saxon gezaf is not thus to be explained; though that word is certainly used for trifles. See Manning's edit. of Lye, where, under that word, gezaf-ppac is also cited, in the sense of trifling, scurrilous, or low discourse; and under zap, which is base, low, &c. zap-ppac occurs with the same meaning, and with that also of derision.
We may deduce gezaf therefore from zap, and thus account for trifles being named gezaf. But as to the termination of gewgaw being sometimes gewgaw, that only serves more strongly to shew that give has nothing to do with the word. Nor may the French gaude, or the northern word for a trifle, be here overpassed. The Icel. gaud, Sere-nius says, was the name of a pagan deity, which, after the introduction of Christianity, came to signify among them, things of no value; whence godit, puppets, the playthings of little girls. One is tempted almost to pronounce the word formed of gild and gaud. Cotgrave, under babiole, writes it guigaw; Skelton, gigaw; and Beaumont and Fletcher once, gewgaw. At other times gewgaw; and once, with an accompaniment not unfavour-able to gild and gaud. "Gewgaws and gilded puppets." Four Plays in One.] A showy trifle; a toy; a bauble; a splendid plaything.

It is for children to cry for the falling of their house of cards, or the miscarriage of that painted gewgaw, which the next shower would have defaced. Ap. Hall, Of Contentation, § 5.

That metal they exchanged for the meanest trifles and gew-gaws which the others could bring. Abbot, Descr. of the World.

Prefer that which providence has pronounced to be the staff of life, before a glittering gewgaw that has no other value than what vanity has set upon it. L'Estrange.

As children, when they throw one toy away, Straight a more foolish gewgaw comes in play. Dryden.

A heavy gewgaw, call'd a crown, that spread About his temples, drown'd his narrow head, And would have crush'd it. Dryden, Juv.

Some loose the bands Of ancient friendship, cancel nature's laws For pagantry and tawdry gewgaws. Philips.

The first images were furs, silks, ribbands, laces, and many other gewgaws, which lay so thick that the whole heart was nothing else but a toyshop. Addison, Guardian.

GE'WGAW. adj. Splendidly trifling; showy without value.

Let him that would learn the happiness of religion, see the poor gewgaw happiness of Felicia. Law, Serious Call.

GHA'STFUL. † adj. [ȝart and fulle, Saxon.]

1. Dreary; dismal; melancholy; fit for walking spirits.

Here will I dwell apart,
In gastful grove therefore, till my last sleep
Do close mine eyes: —
Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound
Is sign of dreary death. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. Dreadful; frightful.
I tell no lie, so gastful grew my name,
That it alone discomfited an host. Mir. for Mag. p. 315.

GHA'STFULLY.  adv.* [from ghastful.] Frightfully.
He often stares ghastfully, raves aloud, &c.
Pope, Narrative of Dr. R. Norris.

GHA'STLINESS. n. s. [from ghastly.] Horror of countenance; resemblance of a ghost; paleness.

GHA'STLY. adj. [ȝart, or ghost, and like.]
1. Like a ghost; having horror in the countenance; pale; dreadful; dismal.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
— O, I have past a miserable night;
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams,
So full of dismal terror was the time. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Envy quickly discovered in court Solyman's changed coun-tenance upon the great bassa, and began now to shew her ghastly face. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Death.
Grinn'd horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
His famine should be fill'd. Milton, P. L.

Those departed friends, whom at our last separation we saw disfigured by all the ghastly horrors of death, we shall then see assisting about the majestick throne of Christ, with their once vile bodies transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body, mingling their glad acclamations with the hallelujahs of chrones, principalities and powers. Boyle.

He came, but with such alter'd looks,
So wild, so ghastly, as if some ghost had met him,
All pale and speechless. Dryden, Span. Friar.

I did not for these ghastly visions send;
Their sudden coming does some ill portend. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

2. Horrible; shocking; dreadful.

To be less than gods
Disdain'd; but meaner thoughts learn'd in their flight, Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail. Milton, P. I.

I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on a bier! Prior.

GHA'STNESS. n. s. [from ȝart, Saxon.] Ghastliness; horror of look. Not used.

Look you pale, mistress?
Do you perceive the ghastness of the eye? Shakespeare, Othello.

GHE'RKIN. n. s. [from gurcke, German, a cucumber.]

A small pickled cucumber. Skinner.

To GHESS. † v. n. [See To GUESS. Ghess is by critics considered as the true orthography, but guess has universally prevailed. Dr. Johnson. — It has prevailed indeed; but ghess is the word in our old lexicography, and is also used by Spenser. See Sherwood's Dict. To GHESS.] To conjecture.

In such luxurious plentie of all pleasure,
It seem'd a second paradise I ghesse. Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 23.

GHOST. † n. s. [ȝart, Saxon.]

1. The soul of man.
Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! He hates him,
That would upon the rack of this rough world
Stretch him out longer. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood Kept in my soul. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Where the bodies of the dead have been out of the reach of their surviving enemies, they have thought it highly opprobrious to their ghosts, to take their representations preserved in their pictures and affix them to the cross.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

2. A spirit appearing after death.
The mighty ghosts of our great Harry rose,
And armed Edwards look'd with anxious eyes,
To see this fleet among unequal foes,
By which fate promis'd them their Charles should rise. Dryden.

3. To give up the GHOST. To die; to yield up the spirit into the hands of God.

Man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost. Job, xiv. 10.

Their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies ready to give up the ghost. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

4. The third person in the adorable Trinity, called the Holy Ghost.

I believe in the Holy Ghost. Apostles' Creed.
The name of ghost or gast in the ancient Saxon language signifieth a spirit; and, in that appellation of the Spirit of God, his [the Holy Ghost's] nature principally is expressed.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

To GHOST. v. n. [from the noun.] To yield up the ghost; to die. Not in use.

Euryalus taking leave of Lucretia, precipitated her into such a love-fit, that within a few hours she ghosted. Sidney.

To GHOST. † v. a. To haunt with apparitions of departed men. Obsolete.

Julius Cæsar
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Ask not with him in the poet "Larvæ hunc intemperie insanique agitant senem," what madness ghosts this old man, but what madness ghosts us all.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

GHO'STLIKE.* adj. [ghost and like.] Withered; having hollow, sad, or sunk-in eyes; wild-looking; ghastly; ghostlike.

Sherwood, and Cotgrave in V. Havé.

GHO'STLINESS. n. s. [from ghostly.] Spiritual tendency; quality of having reference chiefly to the soul.

GHO'STLY.† adj. [from ghost.]

1. Spiritual; relating to the soul; not carnal; not secular.

Save and defend us from our ghostly enemies.

Common Prayer.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind so easily known, but the gifts of God, according to these degrees and times, which he in his secret wisdom seeth meet, are so diversely bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive, what all stand in need of, it seldom lieth hid.

Hooker.

The grace of the spirit are much more precious than worldly benefits, and our ghostly evils of greater importance than any harm which the body feeleth.

Hooker.

To deny me the ghostly comfort of my chaplains, seems a greater barbarity than is ever used by Christians. King Charles.

2. Having a character from religion; spiritual.

Hence will I to my ghostly friar's close cell,
His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

The ghostly father now hath done his shrift.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Relating to apparitions of departed men.

To muse at last, amid the ghostly gloom

Of graves and hoary vaults, and cloister'd cells;

To walk with spectres through the midnight shade.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 1.

GIALLAINA. n. s. [Italian.] Earth of a bright gold colour, found in the kingdom of Naples, very fine, and much valued by painters.

Woodward, Met. Fus.

GIA'MBEUX. n. s. [jambes, French.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.

The mortal steel dispiteously entail'd,

Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,

That a large purple stream adown their giambeux falls.

Spenser, F. Q.

GIANT.† n. s. [geant, French; gigant, Saxon; gigant was also our own word in the sixteenth century; gigas, Latin. Anciently also our word was geant; as in the poetry of Gower.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness. Several of the ancients translate the Hebrew word niphilim, Gen. vi. 4. (giants) by Blagos, violent men, who carried all before them by main force; who filled the world with rapines, and murders, and all manner of wickedness. Bp. Patrick.

Now does he feel his axle

Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe,

Upon a dwarfish thief.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through,

And keep their impious turbans on, without

Good-morrow to the sun.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Woman's gentle brain

Could not drop forth such grim rude invention;

Such Ethiop words.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Pierce faces threat'ning wars,

Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise!

Milton, P. L.

Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time. Raleigh, Hist.

The giant-brothers, in their camp, have found

I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground. Dryden, Bn.

By weary steps and slow

The groping giant with a trunk of pine

Explor'd his way.

Addison.

Neptune, by pray'r repentant, rarely won,

Afflicts the chief to avenge his giant-son,

Great Polypheme of more than mortal might.

Pope.

GI'ANTESS. n. s. [from giant.] A she-giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

I had rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion.

Shakespeare.

Were this subject to the cedar, she would be able to make head against that huge giantess.

Howell.

To GI'ANTIZE.* v. n. [old Fr. geantiser.] To play the giant.

Sherwood.

GI'ANTLIKE.† adj. [from giant and like.] Gigantick; GI'ANTLY. } vast; bulky.

That proud Philistian his giantly strength and stature.

Bp. Hall, Can. of Conscience.

'Tis giant-like ambition.

Beaumont and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

Single courage has often, without romance, overcome giantly difficulties.

Decay of Piety.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to, and those unanswerable doubts and difficulties, which, over their cups, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the proud man not to adore himself, and I dare undertake that all their giantlike objections against the Christian religion shall presently vanish and quit the field.

South.

GI'ANTRY.* n. s. [old Fr. geanterie.] The race of giants.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

GI'ANTSHIP. n. s. [from giant.] Quality or character of a giant.

His giantship is gone somewhat crest fallen,

Stalking with less unconscionable strides,

And lower looks.

Milton, S.

GIB.† n. s. Any old worn-out animal, Dr. Johnson says, from Sir Thomas Hamner, citing only the passage from Hamlet. It means a cat; and was a word of contempt in our old authors.

She is a tonnishe gyb,

The devill and she be sib.

Skelton's Poems, p. 126.

For who that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,

Would from a padlock, from a bat, a gyb,

Such dear concernings hide?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

And call me beldam, gyb, witch, night-mare, trot.

Drayton, Epist. of El. Cobham to D. Humphrey.

To GIB.* v. n. To act like a cat.

What catterwawling's here? what gibbing?

Beaumont and Fl. Willow Chase.

GI'BBED.* adj. [from gib.] Having been catterwawling. See GI'BBAT.

They have remained somewhat melancholy, like gib'd cats.

Bulwer, Artif. Changeling.

As melancholy as a gib'd cat.

Ray's Proverbs.

To GI'BBER. v. n. [from jabber.] To speak inarticulately.

The sheeted dead

Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

GIBBERISH.† n. s. [Derived by Skinner from gaber, French, to cheat; by others conjectured to be formed by corruption from jabber. But, as it was anciently written gebrish, it is probably derived from the chymical cant, and originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe. Dr. Johnson. —

The manner of writing this word geberish or gebrish, is found in Camden: "it would seem most strange and harsh Dutch, or GEBERISH, as women call it." Rem. on Languages. ed. 1674. p. 30. This observation of Camden will hardly favour the chymical etymon. There is another variation, that of giberidge, or gibbridge, which is in the old dictionary of Sherwood, and in the Satires of Marston, 1599. This also is unfriendly to Geber and his tribe; and the oldest method of writing the word, which is gibberish and not geberish, will hardly be thought to be on their side. See the first of the examples. It means originally, perhaps, the gabble of the schoolmen; "scholastick gibberish," as Goodman writes, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii. Moreover, see Lye, edit. Manning. Labban, to deride, to mock, whence perhaps our gabble and gibberish. Thus Dr. Jamieson considers our word to be from gabber or jabber, whence gibber, and so giberish, if not rather from the Teut. gaberdacie, trifles. But see To GAB and To GABBER. Serenius also thinks our gibberish to be synonymous with gibe, a mock or joke. Bullokar presents us with another substantive formed from it, viz. gibberishness, which he calls "any kind of mad, broken, fustian language, gibble-gabble, canting, &c." edit. 1656. The word has been formed both into a verb, and an adjective, which has escaped the notice of all our lexicographers.] Cant; the private language of rogues and gypsies; words without meaning.

What! methynke ye be clerkyshe,
For ye speake good gibbrysh. Interlude of Youth, 1557.
Some, if they happen to hear, an old word, albeit very natural and significant, cry out straightway, that we speak no English, but gibberish. Epistle prefixed to Spenser's Shep. Cal.
Speaking gibbrish, or pedlars' French, rather than Latin, or any other common language.

Favour, Antiq. over Novelty, (1619,) p. 407.
A senseless gibrish, or a fustian language.

Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes, p. 20.
Some of both sexes writing down a number of letters, just as it came into their heads; upon reading this gibberish, that which the men had wrote sounded like High Dutch, and the other by the women like Italian. Swift.

G'IBBERISH. * adj. Canting; unintelligible; fustian.
A company of gibrish phrases.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 177.
Some contending for privileges, customs, forms, and that old entanglement of iniquity their gibberish laws, though the badge of their ancient slavery.

Milton, Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.
To G'IBBERISH. * v. n. To prate idly or unintelligibly.

You understand not the state of "limbus patrum," nor the depth of the question, but scum [skim] upon the surface, and gibberish you cannot tell for what.

Mountagu, App. to Cæsar, (1625,) p. 248.
G'IBBET. n. s. [gibet, French.]

1. A gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their carcasses are exposed.

When was there ever cursed atheist brought Unto the gibbet, but he did adore
That blessed pow'r which he had set at nought? Davies.

You scandal to the stock of verse, a race
Able to bring the gibbet in disgrace. Cleopland.

Haman suffered death himself upon the very gibbet that he had provided for another. L'Étranger.

Papers lay such principles to the Tories, as, if they were true, our next business should be to greet gibbets in every parish, and hang them out of the way. Swift.

2. Any traverse beams.

VOL. II.

To G'IBBET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To hang or expose on a gibbet.

I'll gibbet up his name. Oldham.

2. To hang on any thing going traverse: as the beam of a gibbet.

He shall come off and on swifter than he that gibbets on the brewer's bucket. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

G'IBBIER. n. s. [French.] Game; wild fowl.

Those imposts are laid on all butcher's meat, while, at the same time, the fowl and gibbler are tax-free. Addison on Italy.

G'IBBLE-G'ABBLE. * n. s. [from gabble.] Any rude or noisy conversation; fustian language; barbarous speech. Sherwood, and Cotgrave in V. Barragottin.

Mad, broken, fustian language; gibble-gabble; canting; or such private-made words as beggars, gipsies, and such confederate rogues use one amongst another. Bullokar.

GIBBOSITY. † n. s. [gibbosité, Fr. from gibbous.] Convexity; prominence; protuberance.

This way of description rendereth the face of the earth upon a plane in its own proper figure spherically, as upon the globe itself; the gibbosity only allowed for.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 305.
When ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the interjacent water? Ray.

GIBBOUS. † adj. [gibbeux, French; gibbus, Lat. from the Hebrew gib, prominent, eminent.]

1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.

The bones will rise, and make a gibbous member. Wiseman.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black.

Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.

The sea, by this access and recess, shuffling the empty shells, wears them away, reducing those that are concave and gibbous to a flat. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Crookbacked.

I demand how the camels of Bactria came to have two bunches in their back, whereas the camels of Arabia have but one? How oxen, in some countries, began and continue gibbous, or hunch-backed? Brown.

G'IBBOUSNESS. n. s. [from gibbous.] Convexity; prominence.

To make this convexity of the earth discernible to the eye, suppose a man to be lifted up a great height in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon under one view; but then, again, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away; he would only see below him a great circular flat. Bentley, Sermon 8.

G'IBCAT. † n. s. [gib and cat.] A he-cat. See GIBBED.

I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a jugg'd bear. Shakspeare.

To GIBE. v. n. [gaber, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.] To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party. Hobbes.

When we saw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
And pass the bounds of modest merry-make,
Her dalliance he despis'd. Spenser.

Why that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing-hearers give to fools. Shakspeare.

Thus with talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude,
When you partly raise your snout,
Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

To GIBE. v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to flout; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer; to taunt.

When rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my mummie out of audience. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

G I D

Draw the beasts as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them. Swift.
GIBE. n. s. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; act or expression of scorn;
taunt.

Mark the fleers, the gibes and notable scorns
That dwell in every region of his face. Shakspeare, Othello.

The rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden, Juv.
If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment. Spectator.

But the dean, if this secret should come to his ears,
Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers. Swift.
GIBBER. n. s. [from gibe.] A sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer;
a taunter.

You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the table, than a necessary bencher of the capitol. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He is a giber, and our present business
Is of more serious consequence. B. Jonson, Catiline.

GIBELLINES.* n. s. pl. The name of a faction in Italy, opposed to that of the Guefts, in the thirteenth century. The reason of these names has been variously attempted to be explained.

Not content with endless quarrels,
Against the wicked and their morals,
The Gibellines, for want of Guefts,
Divert their rage upon themselves. Hudibras, iii. 2.

This would destroy all the records in the Tower, and Magna Charta, and the Act of Oblivion and Indemnity, and divide the whole kingdom into Guelphs and Gibellines.

Rp. Parker, Repr. of Rehears. Transposed, p. 205.

GIBINGLY. adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully; contemptuously.

His present portance,
Gibingly and ungravelly he did fashion
After th' inveterate hate he bears to you. Shakspeare, Coriol.

GIBLETS.* n. s. [According to Minshew, from gobbet, goblet: according to Junius more probably from gibbier, game, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — The word is the old French, gibelet, gibelet, &c. i. c. gibier;
Lat. cibarium, food. V. Roq. Gloss. Lang. Rom.]
The parts of a goose which are cut off before it is roasted.

The liquorous palate of the glutton ranges through seas and lands for uncouth delicacies, kills thousands of creatures for but their tongues or giblets. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

I shall not like the table of a country justice, besprinkled over with all manner of cheap sallads, sliced beef, giblets, and peticoes, to fill up room. Beaumont and Fl. Woman-Hater.

'Tis holyday; provide me better cheer:
'Tis holyday; and shall be round the year:
Shall I my household gods and genius cheat,
To make him rich who grudges me my meat?
That he may live at ease: and pamper'd high,
When I am laid, may feed on gible pie? Dryden, Pers.

GIBSTAFF. n. s.

1. A long staff to gage water, or to shove forth a vessel into the deep.

2. A weapon used formerly to fight beasts upon the stage. Dict.

GIDDILY. adv. [from giddy.]

1. With the head seeming to turn round:

2. Inconstantly; unsteadily.

To roam
Giddily, and be every where but at home,
Such freedom doth a banishment become. Donne.

3. Carelessly; heedlessly; negligently.

The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

G I D

GIDDINESS. n. s. [from giddy.]

1. The state of being giddy or vertiginous; the sensation which we have when every thing seems to turn round.

Megrimus and giddiness are rather when we rise after long sitting, than while we sit. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

This blessed thistle, which is so sovereign a medicine against the giddiness of the brain; 'tis this will settle it. Holyday.

Vain show and noise intoxicate the brain,
Begin with giddiness, and end in pain. Young.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness; mutability; changeableness.

There be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief. Bacon.

3. Quick rotation; inability to keep its place.

The indignation of Heaven rotting and turning us, till at length such a giddiness seized upon government, that it fell into the very dregs of sectaries. South.

4. Frolick; wantonness of life.

Thou, like a contrite penitent,
Charitably warn'd of thy sins, dost repent
These vanities and giddinesses. Donne.

GIDDY. adj. [gibig, Saxon. I know not whether this word may not come from gad, to wander, to be in motion, gad, gid, giddy.]

1. Vertiginous; having in the head a whirl, or sensation of circular motion, such as happens by disease or drunkenness.

Them rev'ling thus the Tentyrites invade,
By giddy heads, and staggering legs betray'd. Tate, Juv.

2. Rotatory; whirling; running round with celerity.

As Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling mill. Pope

3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; changeful.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women's are. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have. Bacon.

Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
She cast us headlong from our high estate,
And here in hope of thy return we wait. Dryden, Fab.

The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide,
With noise say nothing, and in parts divide. Dryden, Rn.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Pope, who hath always loved a domestick life. Swift to Gay.

4. That which causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of the pathless wood,
The giddy precipice, and the dang'rous flood. Prior.

The symps through mystick mazes guide their way,
Through all the giddy circle they pursue. Pope.

5. Heedless; thoughtless; uncautious; wild.

Too many giddy, foolish hours are gone,
And in fantastick measures danc'd away. Roue, Jane Shore.

How inexcusable are those giddy creatures, who, in the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed.

Richardson, Clarissa.

6. Tottering; unfixed.

As we have pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought that Glo'ster stumbled. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering inticement.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion? Shakspeare.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes;
Hearing applause and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, gazing still in doubt,
Whether those peals of praise be his or no. Shakspeare.

To GIDDY. v. n. [from the noun.] To turn quick.

Obsolete.

G I F

A sodaine North-wind fetcht,
With an extreame sea, quite about againe,
Our whole endeavours; and our course constrain
To giddie round.

Chapman.

To G'DDY.* v. a. To make giddy; to render unsteady.

He is a quiet and peaceable man, who is not moved when all things else are; not shaken with fear, not giddied with suspicion.

Farindon, Serm. (1657,) p. 423.

G'DDYBRAINED. adj. [giddy and brain.] Careless; thoughtless.

Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless, giddybrained ass!

Otway, Ven. Pres.

G'DDYHEAD.* n. s. [giddy and head.] One without due thought or judgement.

A company of giddyheads will take upon them to define how many shall be saved, and who damned in a parish; where they shall sit in heaven; interpret apocalypses; and precisely set down when the world shall come to an end, what year, what month, what day.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 677.

G'DDY-HEADED. adj. [giddy and head.] Without thought or caution; without steadiness or constancy.

And sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heaven's scheme descrie
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits, next year,
Our giddyheaded antick youth will wear.

Dome.

That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddyheaded, hear the testimony of Solomon.

Burton on Melancholy.

G'DDYPACED. adj. [giddy and pace.] Moving without regularity.

More than light airs and recollected terms,
Of these most brisk and giddypaced times.

Shakespeare.

To GIE.* v. a. [the parent of our word guide; perhaps from the old Fr. guier, to conduct. See To GUIDE.] To direct; to guide. Obsolete.

And if that ye in cleue love me gie,
He will you love as me, for your clemenesse,
And shew to you his joye and his brightnesse.

Chaucer, Sec. Nonnes Tale.

G'IER-EAGLE. n. s. [Sometimes it is written jer-eagle.] An eagle of a particular kind.

These fowls shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican, and the gie-eagle.

Lev. xi. 18.

GIERFALCON.* See GERFALCON.

GIF.* conj. [Sax. gifu; if; Goth. gau, q. d. gav, the same.] If. The word is used in the North of England. See IF.

Gif any good knight will fend this dame,
Come forth, or she must die.

Ballad of Sir Aldingar Percy's Rel. ii. i. 9.

GIFT.† n. s. [Sax. gifu.]

1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.

They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh.

St. Mat. ii. 11.

Recall your gift, for I your pow'r confess;
But first take back my life, a gift that's less.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

2. The act of giving.

God also bearing them witness both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles and gifts [in the margin, distributions], of the Holy Ghost.

Heb. ii. 4.

Creator bounteous and benign
Giver of all things good, but fairest this
Of all thy gifts, nor envyest.

Milton, P. L.

Thee all things living gaze on, all things thine
By gift.

Milton, P. L.

3. The right or power of bestowing.

They cannot give;
For had the gift been theirs, it had not here
Thus grown.

Milton, P. L.

G I G

No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift.

South.

4. Oblation; offering.

Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven.

Tob. xiii. 11.

5. A bribe.

Thou shalt not wrest judgement, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise.

Deut. xvi. 19.

6. Power; faculty.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of command'd tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift.

Shakespeare.

She was lovely to attract

Thy love, not thy subjection, and her gifts
Were such as made government well seem'd
Unseemly to bear rule.

Milton, P. L.

He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his talent.

Addison.

To GIFT.* v. a. To endow with any faculty or power.

Am I better gifted than another? Thou art an ill judge of either, who enviest the gifts of both.

Bp. Hall, Satan's Fiery Quarts quenched, § 9.

In those primitive times there were some women extraordinarily gifted by God's Spirit, who took upon them to preach and pray publicly.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 237.

If he be gifted with abilities of mind, that may raise him to such an undertaking.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it not under command: women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory.

Addison, Freeholder.

GIFTED. adj. [from gift.]

1. Given; bestowed.

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heaven-gifted strength.

Milton, S. A.

2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically.

Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart, and harangued the people to dispose them to an insurrection.

Dryden.

GIFTEDNESS.* n. s. [from gifted, in its ironical sense.] The state of being endowed with extraordinary powers.

May not a conformist, though of an ordinary invention and not endued with the sublimest giftednesses of our separatists, say, Seek, seek, seek, or Good, good, good, &c.

Echard, Grounds of Cont. of the Cler. p. 120.

GIG.† n. s. [etymology uncertain.]

1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.

Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them.

Locke.

2. [Gigia, Icelandick.] A fiddle. Now out of use. See JIG.

3. A dart or harpoon. See FIZGIG.

At each end of the canoe stands an Indian with a gig, or pointed spear.

Hist. of Virginia, (1722,) p. 131.

4. A wanton girl. [old French, gigues.] See GIGLOT.

5. A ship's wherry.

6. A light vehicle, with two wheels, drawn by one horse.

To GIG.* v. g. [probably from the Lat. gigno, to beget.] To engender. A low word.

Our diamonds may have procreated these diamonds, and so we are all three double: if so, I hope my goblet has giggered another golden goblet; and then they may carry double upon all four.

Dryden, Amphitryon.

GIGANTEAN.* adj. [Lat. giganteus.] Like a giant; irresistible. A good word.

GIL

When the strong Fates with giganteous force
Bear thee in iron arms, without remorse;
Bear, and be borne. More, Philosoph. Poems, (1647,) p. 318.

GIGA'NTICAL.* adj. [Latin, gigantes.] Big; bulky.
In good earnest gigantical Cyclopes will transcend spheres.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 255.

GIGA'NTICK. adj. [gigantas, Latin.] Suitable to a giant; big; bulky; enormous; likewise wicked;
atrocious.

Others from the wall defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds? Milton, P. L.
I dread him not, nor all his giant-brood,
Though fame divulg'd him father of five sons,
All of gigantick size, Goliath chief. Milton, S. A.
The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders and gigantick limbs. Dryden, Æn.
The Cyclopean race in arms arise;
A lawless nation of gigantick foes. Pope, Odyssey.

GIGA'NTINE.* adj. [old Fr. gigantin.] Giantlike.
Rullokar.

To GIGGLE.† v. n. [gichelen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — It may perhaps be referred to the Sax. gæzl, wantōn.] To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity.

We shew our present, joking, giggling race;
True joy consists in gravity and grace. Garrick, Epilogue.

GIGGLER.† n. s. [from giggle.] A laugher; a titter-er; one idly and foolishly merry.

A sad wise valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or the fir'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties. Herbert.

This particularity a set of gigglers thought the most necessary thing to be taken notice of in his whole discourse, and made it an occasion of mirth during the whole time of his sermon. Spectator, No. 158.

I become weary and impatient of the derision of the gigglers of our sex. Tatler, No. 210.

GIGLOT.† n. s. [gæzl, Saxon; gyl, Dutch.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. In the north of England, a laughing girl. Sherwood calls giglot a giggle also.

The wife that gads not giglot wise
With every flirting gill,
But honestly doth keep at home,
Not set to gossip still.

Tr. of Bullinger's Serms. (1576,) p. 224.
Away with those giglots too, and with the other confederate companion. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
A peevish giglot. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

GIGLOT.* adj. Inconstant; giddy; light; wanton.
Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a giglot wench. Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI.
The fam'd Cassibelan, who was once at point
(O giglot fortune &c. to master Cæsar's sword. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

GIGOT.† n. s. [French.] The hip joint. It seems to mean in Chapman a joint for the spit, Dr. Johnson says; which is true, gigot de mouton, being an old French phrase of the kitchen, and still used by us. Gigot was also used for a slice.

The inwards slit,
They broil'd on coales, and ate: the rest, in gigots cut, they split. Chapman.
Cut the slaves to giggets. Beaum. and Fl. Double Marriage.

GILBERTINE.* n. s. One of a religious order named from Gilbert, lord of Sempringham, in the county of Lincoln; who erected a double monastery, or rather two different ones, one for men, the other for women, contiguous to each other, but parted
by a very high wall.

GIL

This hermaphrodite order of the Gilbertines was established at Sempringham in the year 1148, and was thence called the Sempringham order. Summary of Religious Houses, p. 76.
GILBERTINE.* adj. Belonging to the order of the Gilbertines.

Thirteen religious houses of the same order had in them
seven hundred Gilbertin brethren, and eleven hundred sisters.
Weaver.

To GILD. v. a. pret. gilded, or gilt. [gilban, Saxon.]

1. To overlay with thin gold; to cover with foliated gold.

The room was large and wide;
As it some gilt or solemn temple were:
Many great golden pillars did uprear
The massy roof. Spenser.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet. Shakespeare, K. John.

And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth allay
In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton, Comus.

Purchasing riches with our time and care,
We lose our freedom in a gilded snare. Roscommon.

When Britain, looking with a just disdain
Upon this gilded majesty of Spain,
And knowing well that empire must decline,
Whose chief support and sinews are of coin. Waller.

Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive;
And love of ombre after death survive. Pope.

2. To cover with any yellow inatter.

Thou did'st drink
The stale of horses and the gilded puddle,
Which beasts would cough at. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. To adorn with lustre.

No more the rising sun shall gild the morn;
Nor ev'ning Cynthia fill her silver horn. Pope, Messiah.

4. To brighten; to illuminate.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more delight;
'Tis gilded o'er with youth, to catch the sight. Dryden, Aureon.

GILD.* See GUILD.

GILDER. n. s. [from gild.]

1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.

Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth, to draw the spirits of the quick silver. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
We have here a gilder, with his anvil and hammer. Broome.

2. A coin, from one shilling and sixpence, to two shillings. Phil.

I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shakespeare.

GILDING. n. s. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit, Bacon, Phys. Rem.

The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.

Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage,
And I not strip the gilding off a knave,

Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope.

GILL.† n. s. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Latin. In sense four, and three following, it is spoken jill.]

1. The apertures at each side of a fishes head.

The leviathan
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land; and at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton, P. L.
Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills. Ray.
He hath two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but before them. Walton

GILL

- Till they, of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the mesh with gills entangl'd left. King's Fisherman.
2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.
The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath legs. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
3. The flesh under the chin.
In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.
4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin; jail, old French.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint; or, in some places, half a pint.
Every bottle must be rinsed with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rinse a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.
5. A kind of measure among the tanners.
They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint. Carew.
6. [From Gillian, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language. Dr. Johnson says; citing only Ben Jonson. It seems to have been rather a contemptuous name, denoting a wanton; and may be from the Sax. gægl, gal, lascivious, wanton; and such a woman is called, in our old lexicography, a gill-flirt. See Sherwood in GILL. Mr. Steevens has strangely imagined this word to be from gilly-flower.
The wife that gads not giglot wise
With every flirting gill,
But honestly doth keep at home,
Not set to gossip still. Tr. of Bullinger's Serm. (1576), p. 224.
Scurvy knave! I am none of his flirt gills.
Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
You heard him take me up like a gill-flirt.
Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Post.
I can, for I will,
Here at Burley o' th' Hill,
Give you all your fill,
Each Jack with his Gill. B. Jonson, Gypsies.
7. [Chelidonium.] The name of a plant; ground-ivy.
The lowly gill, that never dares to climb. Shenstone, Schoolmistress.
8. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.
9. A fissure in a hill. [Icel. gil, a cleft, a rift of mountains; whence, any fissure.]
The canary birds, which they bring to us in England, breed in the "barancos," or gills, which the water hath fretted away in the mountains, being places very cold.
Relation of Teneriffe, in Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 208.
10. In the north of England, a place hemmed in with two steep brows or banks, a rivulet running between them. Ray.
You may continue along this gill, and passing by one end of the village and its church for half a mile, it leads to an opening between two hills covered with fir woods. Gray, Letters.
11. In some parts of the south of England, a rivulet or brook. Grose.
12. GILLHOUSE. n. s. [gill and house.] A house where gill is sold.
Thee shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,
And answer gushops sorer sighs return. Pope.
13. GILLIAN. n. s. See the sixth meaning of GILL. A wanton.
Thou tookst me up at every word I spoke,
As I had been a mawkin, a flirt gillman.
Beaum. and Fl. The Chances.

GIM

- GILLYFLOWER*. † n. s. [Either corrupted from July flower, or from giroflée, French. Gawen Douglas writes the word jereflour; and our old lexicographers, Huloet and Barret, gilover and giloser. I think I have somewhere seen it also girofer.]
Gillyflowers, or rather July flowers, so called from the month they blow in, may be reduced to these sorts; red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white. Mortimer, Husbandry.
In July come gillyflowers of all varieties. Bacon.
Fair is the gillyflow'r of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet. Gay, Pastorals.
- GILSE*.  n. s.* [of uncertain etymology.] In the north of England, a young salmon.
- GILT*. n. s. [from gild.] Golden show; gold laid on the surface of any matter. Now obsolete.
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
When thou wast in thy gill, and thy perfume, they mock thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.
- GILT*. The participle of GILD, which see.
Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way. Pope.
- GILTHEAD*. † n. s. [gilt and head.]
1. A sea fish.
The gilthead that doth clive [cleave]
Sicilian sea, is brought unto the board alive.
Hakewill on Providence, p. 380.
2. A bird.
He blended together the livers of giltheads, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phenicopters, and the melts of lampres. Hakewill.
- GILT-TAIL*. n. s. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.
- GIM*. † adj. [An old word. Welsh, gymp, beautiful. Lye.] Neat; spruce; well dressed. Hence the modern expression jemmy, i. e. gimmy. See also GIMP. Gawen Douglas uses gim.
- GIMBAL*, or GIMBOL.  See GEMEL and GIMMAL.*
- GIMCRACK*. † n. s. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine, Dr. Johnson. — It is more probably from gim and crack, a smart youth, a spruce fellow. See the 13th sense of CRACK. See also GIMP. Gimcrack appears to have been first applied to the person, which has escaped the notice of Skinner and Johnson; and to have been used in a contemptuous sense, as it now sometimes is. Afterwards the word came to signify any trifling contrivance.] A slight or trivial mechanism.
Lady, I pity you:
You are a handsome and a sweet young lady,
And ought to have a handsome man yok'd to you.
An understanding too: This is a gimcrack!
Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.
For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gimcracks?
Jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds?
Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.
- GIMLET*. n. s. [gibelet, guimbelet, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.
The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Moron.
- GIMMAL*. † n. s. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gemellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint device or piece of machinery. Hannmer.

I think by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out^{so} as they do.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Some of their Italian friars have confessed withal, that their fashion is, when all their gimmals are in tune for a miracle, to enjoin some seely old woman in her confessions, to say her devotions before the altar, where the image prepared to play a miracle doth stand. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

GIMMAL Ring. * See GEMEL.

GIMMER. † n. s. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.

The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magic. Mort, Divine Dialogues.

Who knows not how the famous Kentish idol moved her eyes, and hands, by those secret gimmers, which now every puppet-play can imitate?

Bp. Hall to Sir D. Murray, Dec. 1. Epist. 6.

Here lay a wheel, there the balance; here one gimmer, there another. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 9.

GIMP. * adj. [Welsh, gwymp, pretty; Lat. comptus, neat.] Nice; spruce; trim. In the north of England, it is applied to women, and denotes slimness or elegance of shape. And in vulgar language, a gimcrack is a spruce girl. Gawen Douglas applies the word to flowers; "gimp gilliflowers," Virg. Æn. 12.

GIMP. † n. s. [probably from gimp, old Eng. neat, spruce, though indeed it is pronounced with g hard. See GIMP and GIMCRACK.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

He walk'd the place,
Through tape, toys, tinsel, gimp, perfume, and lace.

Parnell, Elegy to an Old Beauty.

GIN. † n. s.

1. A trap; a snare. [from engine, Dr. Johnson. — Lye considers it as descended from the Icel. ginna, to deceive; but gin, for engine, is very old in our language. Robert of Gloucester uses it. And Barret, in his Alv. 1580, defines a snare "a ginne or engine."] As the day begins,
With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pastime make. Sidney.

For a gin, and for a snare, to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Isaiah, viii. 14.

Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
Had slain sir Mordant. Spenser, F. Q.

So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If those who have but sense, can shun

The engines that have them annoy'd;

Little for me had reason done,

If I could not thy gins avoid.

B. Jonson, Forc'd.

I know thy trains,

Though dearly to my cost, thy gins and toils;
No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton, S. A.

He made a planetary gin,

Which rats would run their own heads in,

And come on purpose to be taken,

Without th' expence of cheese and bacon.

Hudibras.

Keep from flaying-scourge thy skin,

And ankle free from iron gin.

Hudibras.

2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture. [from engine.]

Typhæus' joints were stretched on a gin. Spenser.

3. In mechanicks, a machine for raising great weights.

4. A pump worked by rotatory sails. [from engine.]

The dells would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray.

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water drivling on the outside of the gin pump of Mostyn coalpits. Woodward on Fossils.

5. [Contracted from GENEVA, which see.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,

And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin.

Pope.

Gin shops sourer sighs return.

Pope.

To GIN. * v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a trap.

So, so, the woodcock's ginn'd. Beaym. and Fl. Nice Valour.

To GIN. * v. n. [Sax. gynnann.] To begin. This is the original of our begin, which Mr. Mason, with others, has inaccurately considered as a mere poetical abbreviation.

The majestee of hir schal gynne to be destroy'd, whom al Asia and the world worschipeth. Wicliffe, Acts, xix.

When thine hornis new ginnen to spring.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. v. 657.

• Our play

Leaps o'er the vault and firstlings of those broils,

• Ginning in the middle. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress. Prol.

GIN. * conj. [3rd, Sax. gin.] gin is no other than the participle given, g'en, gi'n. Mr. Horne Tooke. But see GIFT.] If. Used in our northern counties. Grose.

GING. * n. s. [an old word for gang.] A company. See GANG.

To be auditors in the galleys, there to employ and exercise their turbulent, seditious, litigious, mutinous, harsh and quarrelous talent upon the ging, swabbers, and rowing slaves.

Tr. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 60.

I would not willingly

See or be seen to any of this ging. B. Jonson, New Inn, (1631.)

Proceeding further, I am met with a whole ging of words and phrases not mine. Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

GINGER. † n. s. [Sax. gingiper; Lat. zingiber, gingiber; Ital. gingero; Gr. γγιβάρις, an Arabian plant; gingerfil, Pers. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 316. Chaucer writes it gingiber, Rom. R. 1369. "Gilosfre, and licorice, gingiber, &c."]

The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds. Miller.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromastick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves.

Hill, Mat. Medica.

Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,

And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope, Dunciad.

GINGERBREAD. n. s. [ginger and bread.] A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromastick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.

An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

Her currants there and gooseberries were spread,

With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King, Cookery.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks' frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames.

Swift.

GINGERLY. † adv. [I know not whence derived. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius derives it from the Icel. gangr, walking. Su. gaengra, to go step by step. It appears to have been very common; and among good writers, though Dr. Johnson has cited only Shakespeare; nor is it yet disused.] Cautiously; nicely. Go she never so gingerly, her honestie is gone away.

Skelton, Poems, p. 48.

What is't that you

Took up so gingerly?

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

Has it a corn? Or does it walk on conscience;

It treads so gingerly?

Beaum. and Fl. Martial Maid.

We must make use of that rotten staff of nature, as far as its strength will bear, and that very gingerly too; never daring to lean or lay our whole weight upon it. Hammond, Works, iv. 660.

He came to him with a soft pace, treading gingerly, (as we speak,) after a nice and delicate manner.

Patrick on 1 Sam. xv. 32.

He walks like a benighted traveller in a dangerous road, and is fain to feel out his steps, and tread gingerly and cautiously.

Scott, Works, ii. 28.

Pray observe how gingerly he translates "temperance, moderate in the enjoyment of pleasure! Whereas temperance, according to Turkey, consists in the neglecting and despising of pleasure." Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 44.

GINGERNESS. n. s. Niceness; tenderness. Dict.

GINGIVAL. adj. [gingiva, Lat.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlusal appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perverseness. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

TO GINGLE. † v. n. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. It is probably the Teut. klincken, to ring; German, klingen. Casaubon would derive it from the Greek κινεῖν, to move quickly, to shake.]

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

Did this title here

Of knighthood ask no other ornaments

Than other countries glittering show; poor pride,

A ginging spur, a feather, a white hand,

A frizzled hair, powder'd perfumes, and lust,

Drinking sweet wines, surfeits and ignorance,

Rashly and easily would I venture on't.

Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket ginging halfpence sound. Gay, Trivia.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,

From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,

And ginging down the backstairs, told the crew,

Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope, Epist.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

Those petty sectaries — who, by their various kind of ginging fancies in serving God, &c.

Howell, Instruct. For Trav. (1642,) p. 227.

TO GINGLE. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;

The both the gingle, and the whistle blew. Pope.

GINGLE. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

Many of their fancies, which amongst themselves they hold to be strong lines, and quintessential stuff, being turned to another tongue, become flat, and prove oftentimes but mere gingles. Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 158.

2. Affectation in the sound of periods.

GINGLYMOID. adj. [γινγλυμοῖς, a hinge, and ιδεῖν.]

Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

GINGLYMUS. n. s. A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, in the manner of a hinge; of which the elbow is an instance. Wiseman.

GINNET. n. s. [γινεῖ.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly writt'n for ginnet.

GINSENG. n. s. [I suppose, Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromattick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromattick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.

TO GIP. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GIPON.* See JUPPON.

GIPSY. † n. s. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations. Dr. Johnson. — "The received opinion sets them down for Egyptians, and makes them out to be the descendants of those vagabond votaries of Isis, who appeared to have exercised in ancient Rome pretty much the same profession as that followed by the present gipsies, viz. fortune-telling, strolling up and down, and pilfering." Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 29. — "The Gipsies, as it should seem by some striking proofs derived from their language, came originally from Hindustan, where they are supposed to have been of the lowest class of Indians, namely Pariahs, or, as they are called in Hindostan, Suders. They are thought to have migrated about A. D. 1408, or 1409, when Timur Beg ravaged India for the purpose of spreading the Mahometan religion. — They must certainly have been in Egypt before they reached us, otherwise it is incomprehensible how the report arose that they were Egyptians." Bland, Pop. Antiquities. See also the adjective Gipsy. — Their first appearance in Europe was in the fifteenth century. Our old lexicography denominates them "counterfeit Egyptians."] 1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

I perceive him to be more ignorant in his art of divining than any gipsy.

Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour.

A frantick gipsy now, the house he haunts,

And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants.

Prior, Henry and Emma.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;

A sigil in his hand the gipsy bears,

In th' other a prophetick sieve and sheers. Garth, Dispensary.

I, near yon stile, three fallow gypsies met;

Upon my hand they cast a poring look;

Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook.

Gay.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench; Dido a dowdy;

Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes:

The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.

GIPSY.* adj.

1. Denoting the language spoken by the Gipsies.

It seems to be well proved in this learned work [A Dissertation on the Gipsies, &c. written in German by H. M. G. Grellman, translated into English by M. Raper, Esq. 1787.] that these gipsies came originally from Hindostan. A very copious catalogue is given of Gipsy and Hindostan words collated, by which it appears that every third Gipsy word is likewise an Hindostan one, or still more, that out of every thirty Gipsy words, eleven or twelve are constantly of Hindostan. This agreement will appear uncommonly great, if we recollect that the above words have only been learned from the Gipsies within these very few years, consequently after a separation of four complete centuries from Hindostan, their supposed native country. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

2. Denoting any jargon or cant.

The regicide directory on the day, which in their gipsy jargon they call the 5th of Pluviose, charges us with eluding our declarations. Burke.

GIPSYISM.* n. s. [from gipsy.] The state of a gipsy.

The companion of his [the tinker's] travels is some foul, sun-burnt quack, that since the terrible statute recanted gypsisme, [gipsyism,] and is turned pedlar. Overbury, Charact. sign. l. 2.

GIRANDOLE.* n. s. [French; from the Ital. girandola ; a kind of firework : "ruota composta di fuochi lavorati, che gira, appiccandovi il fuoco." Della Crusc. Vocab.] A large kind of branched candlestick ; a chandelier. Modern.

GIRASOLE. n. s. [girasole, Fr.]

1. The herb turnsol.

2. The opal stone.

To GIRD.† v. a. pret. girded, or girt. [gýrðan, Sax. gyrta, Icel. gúrten, Germ.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Mac. x. 3.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Swift.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac. iii. 25.

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms

Gird on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milton, P. L.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,

And, at the head of our remaining troops,

Attack the foe. Addison, Cato.

The combatant too late the field declines,

When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop thee, and set your knee against my foot ;

And in regardon of that duty done,

I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The son appear'd,

—Girt with omnipotence. Milton, P. L.

5. To dress ; to habit ; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk. Exek. xvi. 10.

Tysiphone there keeps the ward,

Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,

Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together *gird*d,

To gird their waist : vain covering, if it hide

Their guilt, and dreaded shame ! Milton, P. L.

7. To furnish ; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs

His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton, P. R.

8. To enclose ; to encircle.

That Nyseian isle,

Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham

Hid Amalthea, and her florid son

Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milton, P. L.

9. To reproach ; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods. Shakespeare.

To GIRD.† v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the original : it may be formed by a very customary transposition from gride or cut. Dr.

Johnson. — It is most probably from the Sax. gýrð,

a staff, whence a hit or blow, first in the literal sense ; then, in the figurative, for a stroke of wit or sarcasm. The Teut. gorden is actively, to strike, smite, or beat. So Chaucer uses it. Coles accordingly notices the verb gird, "to strike."] To break a scornful jest ; to gibe ; to sneer.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me : the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me : I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It could not but go deep into thy soul, to hear these bitter and girding reproaches from them Thou camest to save. Bp. Hall, Contempl. The Crucifixion.

We, that are brothers of the blade, know how to put up harder and more girding repartees than this with patience and philosophy. Bp. Parker, Repr. of Rehears. Transp. p. 31.

GIRD.† n. s. A twitch ; a pang : it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly. This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted. Dr.

Johnson. — Dr. Johnson means his etymology of the verb. But neither his definition nor his etymology of this word will be generally received.

We may refer to the Sax. gýrð, in the sense of a stroke or blow, and so define the word, a taunt, a reproach, a sneer.

Curculio may chatte till his heart ake, ere any be offended with his gyrdes. Gouson, School of Abuse, (1579.)

Sweet king ! the bishop hath a kindly gird :

For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

All the shap quips, and witty girds, wherewith Martial doth whet and embellish the conclusions of his [epigrams]

Florio, Trans. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 228.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds

and twinges which the atheist feels. Tillotson.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference.

GIRDER.† n. s. [from gird.]

1. In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders. Harris.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder. Moxon, Mech. Exer.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,

These ribs robust and vast in order join'd. Blackmore.

2. A satirist.

We great girders call it a short saying of sharp wit with a bitter sense in a sweet word. Lilly, Alexan. and Campaspe.

GIRING.* n. s. [from gird.] A covering.

Instead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth. Isaiah, lii. 24.

GIRDLE.† n. s. [gýrbel, Saxon ; girdur, Goth.

Dr. Johnson has cited four lines from Marlow's

Passionate Shepherd, which he ascribes to Shakspeare ; in which, however, the word is not girdle,

but kirtle.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

Moses — girded them with girdles. Levit. viii. 13.

The same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins. St. Matt. iii. 4.

Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle. Brown, Vulg. Err.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword, and bow,
On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cowley.

2. Enclosure; circumference.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

3. The zodiack.

Great breezes in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, do refrigerate. Bacon.

4. A round iron plate for baking. Northumberland. Pegge.

To GIRDLE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gird; to bind, as with a girdle.

Lay the gentle babes, girdling one another
Within their innocent alabaster arms. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. To enclose; to shut in; to environ.

Those sleeping stings,
That as a waist do girdle you about. Shakespeare, K. John.

Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves! Shakespeare, Timon.

But call you those true spirits ill affected,
That whilst the wars were, serv'd like walls and ribs
To girdle in the kingdom? Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain.

GIRDLEBELT. n. s. [girdle and belt.] The belt that encircles the waist.

Nor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girdlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold. Dryden, Æn.

GIRDLER.† n. s. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles. Hulnot.

Talk with the girdler or the mill'ner.

Braun, and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

GIRE. n. s. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL.† n. s. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from γῆρ of the same signification; Minsheu from garrula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from herlodes, Welsh, from which, says he, harlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hickes derives it most probably from the Icelandick karlinna, a woman. So far Dr. Johnson. — Girl was formerly an appellation common to both sexes. Serenius says, that from the Su. Goth. karl, a man, many etymologists deduce our word girl. "The yonge girles of the diocese," in the Prologue to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, may be the young men or the young women, the appellation, as already noticed, being common to both. See Mr. Tyrwhitt's Notes on Chaucer.]

1. A young woman, or female child.

In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl. Shakespeare.
I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shakespeare.

The foole Amphimachus, to field brought gold to be his wracke, Proude girle like, that doth ever bear her dowre upon her backe. Chapman.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on, Donne.

Tragedy should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimic follies of a farce, Roscommon.

As a grave matron would to dance with girls.

A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh! a girl, like her, must be divine! Dryden.

2. Among sportsmen, a roebuck of two years age.

Bullock, and Chambers.

GIRLHOOD.* n. s. [girl and hood.] The state of a girl.

A proper word; but, I believe, of modern usage.

I regret that it is not in my power to collect in an anecdote of Dr. Johnson's infancy. My mother passed her days of girlhood with an uncle at Warwick, consequently was absent from home in the school-boy days of the great man.

Miss Seward to Mr. Boswell, (1783.) Lett. i. 38.

GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suiting a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor. Curew.

GIRLISHLY. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

To GIRN.† v. n. It seems to be a corruption of grin.

It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, captious, or peevish person. Dr. Johnson.

— It is also used in the north of England for grin; and our old dictionaries refer grin to grin.

See Barret and Sherwood. And see To GRIN.

They make anticke faces, grin, now and mop like an ape.

Bp. Harsenet, Declaration of Popish Impostures.

It has been always found an excellent way of girning at the government in scripture-phrase. South, Sermon ii. 118.

GIRN.* n. s. A corruption of the substantive grin.

A popish priest threatened to excommunicate a Northumbrian squire, if he did not give up to him the church lands. Addison, Freeholder.

He saw the celestial deities acting in a confederacy against him, and immediately gave up a cause which was excluded from all possibility of success. Addison, Freeholder.

An old gentleman, who had been engaged in an argument with the emperor, upon his friend's telling him he wondered he would give up the question when he had the better, I am never ashamed, says he, to be confuted by one who is master of fifty legions. Addison, Spect.

He may be brought to give up the clearest evidence. Atterbury.

The constant health and longevity of men must be given up also, as a groundless conceit. Benley.

Have the physicians giv'n up all their hopes?

Cannot they add a few days to a monarch? Howe.

These people were obliged to demand peace, and give up to the Romans all their possessions in Sicily. Arbutnot.

Every one who will not ask for the conduct of God in the study of religion, has just reason to fear he shall be left of God, and given up a prey to a thousand prejudices, that he shall be consigned over to the follies of his own heart. Watts.

Give yourselves up to some hours of leisure. Watts.

35. To GIVE up. To abandon.

If any be given up to believe lyes, some must be first given up to tell them. Stillind fleet.

Our minds naturally give themselves up to every diversion which they are much accustomed to; and we always find that play, when followed with assiduity, engrosses the whole woman. Addison, Guardian.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

I am obliged at this time to give up my whole application to Homer. Pope.

Persons who, through misfortunes, chuse not to dress, should not, however, give up neatness. Richardson, Clarissa.

36. To GIVE up. To deliver.

And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people to the king. Sam. xxiv. 9.

His accounts were confused, and he could not then give them up. Swift.

37. To GIVE way. To yield; not to resist; to make room for.

Private respects, with him, gave way to the common good. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Perpetual pushing and assurance put a difficulty out of countenance, and make a seeming impossibility give way. Collier.

Scarce had he spoken when the cloud gave way;
The mists flew upward, and dissolv'd in day. Dryden, Æn.

His golden helm gives way with stony blows,
Batter'd and flat, and beaten to his brows. Dryden, Æn.

38. The word GIVE is used with great laxity; the general idea is that of transmitting from one to another.

To GIVE.† v. n.

1. To rush; to fall on; to give the assault. A phrase merely French, and not worthy of adoption.

Your orders come too late, the fight's begun;
The enemy gives on with fury led. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Hannibal gave upon the Romans. Hoake, Rom. Hist.

2. To relent; to grow moist; to melt or soften; to thaw.

Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again and grow soft; as the crust of bread, biscuits, sweetmeats, and salt. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like season'd timber, never gives;

But though the whole world turn to coal,
Then chiefly lives. Herbert.

Unless it is kept in a hot house, it will so give again, that it will be little better than raw malt. Mortimer.

Before you carry your large cocks in, open them once, and spread them: hay is apt to give in the cock. Mortimer.

3. To move. A French phrase.

Up and down he traverses his ground,
Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on amain. Daniel, Civ. Wars.

4. To GIVE back. To retire.

Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

5. To GIVE in. To go back; to give way. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing an example from Hayward. It is surely still used for to yield to superior strength.

In the mean time, what doth St. Paul? Doth he give in? Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

G I V

The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in.
Hayward.

6. To GIVE in to. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medallists: the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explication of it. Addison on Medals.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the old Testament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

7. To GIVE off. To cease; to forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reached the mind. Locke.

8. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker.

Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; lost, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker.

Give not o'er so; to him again; intreat him, Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown; You are too cold. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

The state of human actions are so variable, that to try things off, and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon, Apophthegms.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse Met ever, and to shameful silence brought, Yet, gives not o'er, though desperate of success. Milton, P. R.

Shall we kindle all this flame Only to put it out again?

And must we now give o'er, * And only end where we begin? In vain this mischief we have done,

If we can do no more. Denham.

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any farther pursuits after fame. Addison.

He coined again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift.

9. To GIVE out. To publish; to proclaim.

Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one. Acts, viii. 9.

Julius Cæsar laid asleep Pompey's preparations, by a fame that he cunningly gave out how Cæsar's own soldiers loved him not. Bacon.

Your ill-wishers will give out you are now going to quit your school. Swift.

10. To GIVE out. To cease; to yield.

We are the earth; and they, Like moles within us, heave and cast about; And till they foot and clutch their prey; They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout; That for twenty denials you would not give out. Swift.

GIVER. n. s. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower; distributor; granter.

Well we may afford Our givers their own gifts. Milton, P. L.

By thee how fairly is the giver now Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost Long since. Milton, P. R.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news; The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove; Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.

G L A

GIVES.† n. s. Fetters or shackles for the feet. See GYVE. For the word is used in the singular, though Dr. Johnson notices it only in the plural number.

GIVING.* n. s. [from To give.]

1. The act of bestowing any thing.

Constant at church and change; his gains were sure; His givings rare, save farthings to the poor. Pope.

2. The act of alleging what is not real.

His givings out were of an infinite distance From his true meant design Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

GI'ZZARD. n. s. [gesier, French; gigeria, Latin.] I is sometimes called gizzern.

1. The strong muscular stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzern. More.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glandules, distilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or muscular stomach. Ray.

They nestle near the throne, By their high crops and corny gizzards known? Dryden.

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind: as, he frets his gizzard, he harasses his imagination.

But that which does them greatest harm, Their spiritual gizzards are too warm; Which puts the overheated sots

In fevers still. Hudibras.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so cursedly hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that their blood is not half so dear to them as the treasure in their coffers. L'Estrange.

To GLA'BREATE.* v. a. [Lat. glabro.] To make plain or smooth. Not in use. Cockeram.

GLA'BILITY. n. s. [from glaber, Latin.] Smoothness; baldness. Dict.

GLA'BROUS.* adj. [Lat. glaber.] Smooth, like baldness.

French elm, whose leaves are thicker, and more florid, glabrous, and smooth. Evelyn, i. iv. § 1.

GLA'CIAL. adj. [glacial, French; glacialis, Latin.] Icy; made of ice; frozen.

To GLA'CIATE. v. n. [glacies, Lat. glacer, Fr.] To turn into ice.

GLACIATION.† n. s. [from glaciate.] The act of turning into ice; ice formed.

Ice is plain upon the surface of water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A violent motion of water is a preservative against glaciation. Dr. Robinson, Calm Ventil. of Brown's Vulg. Err. p. 120.

GLA'CIOUS. adj. [glacio, Latin.] Icy; resembling ice.

Although exhaled and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glaciously bodies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLA'CIS. n. s. [French.] In fortification, a sloping bank. It is more especially taken for that which rangeth from the parapet of the covered way to the level on the side of the field. Harris.

GLAD.† adj. [glæb, glab, Saxon; glad, Danish; from the Icel. glæda, to exhilarate, glæd, gladde, I have made glad. The comparative gladder, and superlative gladdest, are not often used; nor has Dr. Johnson given any example of them. But they are now shewn to exist.]

1. Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings viii. 66.

'Twas the most duteous wench, the best companion,
When I was pleas'd, the happiest, and the gladdest,
The modestest sweet nature dwelt within her.

Beaum. and Fl. Loyal Subject.
Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light. Milton, P. L.
The wily adder blithe and glad. Milton, P. L.

Thither they

2. Wearing a gay appearance; fertile; bright; showy.

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. Isaiah, xxxv.

Then first adorn'd
With their bright luminaries, that set and rose,
Glad ev'ning and glad morn crown'd the fourth day. Milton, P. L.

3. Pleased; elevated with joy. It has generally of, sometimes at or with before the cause of gladness: perhaps of is most proper, when the cause of joy is something gained or possessed; and at or with when it is some accident befallen himself or another.

I am glad to see your worship. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
He hath an uncle in Messina will be very much glad of it. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished. Proverbs.

Lan. I think he's her servant. —
Fran. I am glad on't.
Lan. She's a good woman.
Fran. I am gladder still. Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

He glad
Of her attention, gain'd with serpent tongue,
His fraudulent temptation thus began. Milton, P. L.
If he be my enemy, let him triumph; if he be my friend,
he will be glad of my repentance. Dryden, Fag. Pref.
The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood;
The Trojan, glad with sight of hostile blood,
His fauchion drew. Dryden, Æn.
Glad of a quarrel strait I clap the door. Pope.

4. Pleasing; exhilarating.
Some very red, and some a glad light grene. Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

Her conversation
More glad to me than to a miser money is. Sidney.

5. Expressing gladness.
Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers:
Prepare the way, a God, a God appears! Pope, Messiah.

6. It is used in a familiar sense, approaching to ludicrousness.

I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks, how they know it. Locke.

To GLAD.† v. a. [Sax. gladian. This verb is one of our oldest.] To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.

Tell us swiche thing, as may our hertes glade. Chaucer, Nonnes Priest's Prol.

Like to a flower that feels no heat of sunne,
Which may her feeble leaves with comfort glade. Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 44.

Your presence glads our days. Shakespeare, Pericles.
He saw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour
Of th' icy north; from frost-bound Atlas hands
His adamantine fetters fall: green vigour
Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Lybian sands. Crashaw.
Heaven smil'd, and gladded was the heart of man. Dryden, Fag.

It glads me
To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice and dethrone oppression. Otway.
Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man. Pope.

If justice please, conceive that
Some slight rhyme disturbs,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both tales and rhyme. Swift.

To GLAD.† v. n. To be glad; to rejoice. Wicliffe uses this neuter verb; but it is now wholly obsolete.

Glad'dst thou in such scorn?
I call my wish back. Masinger, Virgin Martyr.

To GLADDEN. v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.

Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him. Addison, Cato.

A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her,
when she does not attend to it. Addison, Spect.

GLADDER.† n. s. [from glad. This substantive is from Chaucer; as Dryden has literally copied the whole line, in which it occurs, from him.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.

Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron, —
Have pity, goddess. Dryden, Fag.

GLADE.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson strangely imagines it to be from the Sax. glæpan, to be hot or to shine; Mr. H. Tooke from ge-hliban, to cover, part. ge-hlab, whence the English glade, applied to a spot covered or hidden with trees or boughs. — It seems, however, to be still connected with the Icel. hlád, a way, a passage. Barret thus describes what a glade is, Alv. 1580. "To make a glade in the midst of a wood; to loppe or cut away boughes where they let the light." A lawn or opening in a wood. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.

So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser, F. Q.

Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping lay in secret shade. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

I laid me down
And listened to the words she sung; for then,
Through a small glade cut by the fishermen,
I saw it was your daughter. Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade,
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton, P. L.

When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton, Comus.
For noonday's heat are closer harbours made,
And for fresh ev'ning air the op'ner glade.

There, interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.

By the heroes armed shades,
Glist'ring through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh, take the husband, or restore the wife!

She smil'd, array'd
With all the charms of sun-shine, stream and glade,
New drest and blooming as a bridal maid. Harte.

GLADEN.† n. s. [from gladius, Latin, a sword.]
GLADDER.† Swordgrass: a general name of plants that rise with a broad blade-like sedge. Junius.

GLADFUL.* adj. [glad and full.] Full of joy and gladness. Not in use.

There leave we them in pleasure and repose,
Spending their joyous days and gladful nights.

Spenser, F. Q. v. li. 40.

GLADFULNESS. n. s. [glad and fulness.] Joy; gladness. Obsolete.

And there him rests in riotous suffisance
Of all his gladfulness, and kingly jovisance.

Spenser, F. Q.

GLADIATOR.* n. s. [Latin; gladiator, Fr.] A swordplayer; a prizefighter.

They had several delishtome shows to exhilarate the people; gladiators; combats of men with themselves; with wild beasts, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 269.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils.

Denham.

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

Dryden, Perth.

Writers — have given too great pomp and magnificence to the exploits of the ancient bear-garden; and made their gladiators, by fabulous tradition, greater than Gorman and others of Great Britain!

Tatler, No. 31.

GLADIATORY.* adj. [Lat. gladiatorius; old Fr. gladiatoire.] Belonging to prizefighters or swordplayers.

The Romans did use themselves unto their gladiatory fights and bloody spectacles, that acquaintance with wounds and blood might make them the less fear it in the wars.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 27.

At Rome there were usually those gladiatory sports; bloody, sword-killing sports; they killed men in sport.

Dr. Westfield, Serm. (1646), p. 77.

GLADIATORIAL.* adj. [Lat. gladiatorius.] Relating to prizefighters.

Consider only the shocking carnage made in the human species by the exposure of infants, the gladiatorial shows, and the exceedingly cruel usage of slaves, allowed and practised by the ancient Pagans.

Bp. Porteus, Serm. i. xiii.

GLADIATURE.* n. s. [Lat. gladiatura.] Fencing; swordplay.

In their amphitheatrical gladiatures, the lives of captives lay at the mercy of the vulgar.

Gayton on D. Quix. p. 271.

GLADLY.* adv. [Sax. glæblice.] Joyfully; with gayety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.

For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of.

Blount to Pope.

GLADNESS.* n. s. [Sax. glæbnes.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.

The Jews had light, and gladness, and joy, and honour.

Esther, viii. 16.

And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth.

St. Luke, i. 14.

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had froze before:
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the perish'd they deplore.

Dryden.

GLADSHIP.* n. s. [from glad.] State of gladness. Obsolete.

And such a sorowe hath to him take,
That gladshippe he hath all forsake.

Gower, Conf. Am. b. i.

GLADSOME.* adj. [from glad.] 1. Pleased; gay; delighted.

The highest angels to and fro descend,
From highest heaven in gladsome company.

Spenser, F. Q.

The gladsome ghosts in circling troops attend,
And with unwearied eyes behold their friend.

Dryden.

2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety. In this sense it is used by Chaucer.

Swiche thing is gladom, as it thinketh me,
And of swiche thing were goodly for to telle.

Chaucer, Nonnes Priest's Prol.

Figurative expressions of some white and gladsome days shortly to succeed.

Spenser on Feed. p. 153.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay,
Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsome day.

Rowe.

GLADSOMELY.* adv. [from gladsome.] With gayety and delight.

I remembered myselfe by and by,
And behelde the sunne shyne so gladsomely.

Pleasant Pathwaye, &c. s. d. sign. A. r. b.

GLADSOMENESS. n. s. [from gladsome.] Gayety; showiness; delight.

GLAIRE.* n. s. [glær, Saxon, amber; glar, Danish, glass; glér, Icel. glaire, French; glarea, Latin.]

1. The white of an egg.
Unstekked lime, chalk, and glaire of an ey.

Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.

Take the glaire of eggs, and strain it as short as water.

Poacham on Drawing.

2. Any viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

Her lewde lypes twayne,
They slaver, men sayne,
Lyke a ropye rayne,
A gummy glayre.

Shelton, Poema p. 124.

Blood, poison, slimy glere,
That in his body so abundant were.

Mir. for Mag. p. 109.

I found the tongue black and dry, with a black glare on the teeth.

Fordeyce on the Muriat. Acid, p. 11.

To GLAIR. v. a. [glairer, French; from the noun.]
To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.

GLAIVE.* See GLAIVE.

GLANCE.* n. s. [glantz, German, glitter; glans, Icel. and Goth. splendour; from gla, light: gloa, to shine.]

1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.
His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n
Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam;
The other's not; for his was not sincere.

Milton, P. L.

2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.
The aspects which procure love are not gazings, but sudden glances and dartings of the eye.
There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment;
some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity.

Dryden, Dufrenoy.

Boldly she look'd, like one of high degree;
Yet never seem'd to cast a glance on me;
At which I inly joy'd, for, truth to say,
I felt an unknown awe, and some dismay.

Harte.

3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.
The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance.

Watts on the Mind.

To GLANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.
He double blows about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil use,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are away'd.

Spenser.

When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,
Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high.

Rowe.

2. To fly off in an oblique direction.
He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright.

Shakespeare.

3. To strike in an oblique direction.
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downwards near his flank descends.

Pope.

4. To view with a quick cast of the eye; to play the eye.

O' th' sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and sigh and glance;
Then dance again, and kiss.

Suckling.

Mighty dulness crown'd,
Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant round;
And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dunce. Pope, Dunciad.

5. To censure by oblique hints.

How can'st thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolita,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?

Shakespeare.

Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon.

I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of his holiness and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Addison.

He had written verses, wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor, famous for dulness. Swift.

To GLANCE. v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.

Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
Enough to press a royal merchant down.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

GLANCING.* n. s. [from glance.] Censure by oblique hints.

By this upbraiding glance the hordelloes, as by other suspicious glancings in his book, he would seem privily to point me out to his readers as one, whose custom of life were not honest but licentious. Milton, Apol. for Smeectymnus.

GLANCINGLY. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.

Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but happily and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewill on Providence.

GLAND.† n. s. [glans, Latin; gland, French;
βάλανος, Gr. γλανος, Dor. whence, by contraction,
the Lat. glans, glandis.]

All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.

The abscess begun deep in the body of the glands.
Wiseman.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twisted with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct.

Blackmore.

GLANDERED.* adj. [from glanders.] Having the distemper called the glanders.

Being drank in plenty, it [tar-water] hath recovered even a glandered horse, that was thought incurable.

Bp. Berkeley, Farther Thoughts on Tar-Water.

GLANDERS. n. s. [from gland.] In a horse is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green or black.

Farrier's Dict.

His horse is possess'd with the glanders, and like to mose in the chime. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

GLANDIFEROUS. adj. [glans and fero, Latin.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.

The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandi-ferous trees. Mortimer, Harbaldry.

GLANDULAE.* adj. [Fr. glandulaire.] Pertaining to the glands. The modern word for glandulous.

GLANDULE. n. s. [glandula, Latin; glandule, Fr.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivales. Ray.

GLANDULOSITY. n. s. [from glandulous.] A collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosityes. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLANDULOUS. adj. [glandulosus, Latin; glanduleux,
Fr. from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands;
subsisting in the glands; having the nature of glands.

The beaver's bags are no testicles, or parts official to generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours and ruptures of the lymphatics. Arbuthnot on Abdominals.

To GLARE. v. n. [glare, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Ducon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,
And like the brand of hell Aerto flame. Shakspeare.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plain-ness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to sight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden, En.

Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Look, how pale he glares! Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met, they made a surly stand,
And glar'd like angry lions as they pass'd,
And wish'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryden, Fob.

3. To shine ostentatiously; or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest or most correct. Fellon on the Claphams.

To GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glar'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurst, that wither'd all their strength.

Milton, P. L.

GLARE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare,
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden, Fob.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flambeaux. Addison, Guardian.

Here in a grotto, sheltered close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round,

A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton, P. L.

GLARE.* n. s. Any viscous, transparent matter.
See GLAIR.

GLAREOUS. adj. [glarius, Fr. glareosus, Lat. from glair.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLARING. adj. Applied to any thing notorious: as,
a glaring crime.

GLARINGLY.* adv. [from glaring.] Evidently; notoriously.

I know not whether the brick-dust men in their martial liveries, and the tallow-chandlers in their sky-coloured frocks, are not so glaringly offensive for a loyal eye to bear!

The Student, ii. 259.

The passions, necessarily suscitating a violent agitation in the soul, declare themselves glaringly in the aspect.

Philosoph. Lect. upon Physiognomy, (1751,) p. 161.

GLASS.† n. s. [glay, clay, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pezron imagines from glās, British, green. In Erse it is called klánn, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency. To this may be added the fecl. glas, and glia, to shine; Goth. gla, light, gloa, to shine. The Cornish glass is both green, and sky-coloured.]

1. An artificial substance made by infusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glass, from the verb glansen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peacham on Drawing.

Glass is thought so compact and firm a body that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of grenades rain, by sudden burst
Disploding murderous bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glass, and nitrous grain adust. Philips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more,

And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass,
Which shews me many more. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. A looking glass; a mirror.

The glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils.
Isaiah, iii. 23.

He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses, to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden, Horace.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royall self did live, no more his noble sonne,
The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run. Chapman.

6. A cup of glass used to to drink in. [old Fr. glas, "verre à boire. Ce mot est Celtique, Almand, et Anglais." Lacombe.]

To this last costly treuty,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' th' crinsing. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, besure
'Tis time to shun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

The first glass may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass.

The moon whose orb
Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views. Milton, P. L.

Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

9. A glass that shews the weight of the air.

A state weather-glass, that, by the rising and falling of a certain magical liquor, presages all changes and revolutions in government, as the common glass does those of the weather.

Tatler, No. 214.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glass eyes;

And, like a scurvy politician, seem

To see the things thou do'st not.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Glass bottles are more fit for this second fining, than those of wood. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirror. Not in use.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,

And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney, Arc. b. ii.

2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,

As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;

Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were glazt,

Did point out to buy them, along as you past. Shakspeare.

3. To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glazd over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLASSBLOWER.* n. s. [glass and blow.] One whose business is to blow or fashion glass.

GLASSFUL.* n. s. [glass and full.] As much as is usually taken at once in a glass.

His majesty drank a small glassful of claret wine.

Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I. p. 233.

GLASSFURNACE. n. s. [glass and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glassfurnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hands into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLASSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorson, glassgazing, finical rogue. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

GLASSGRINDER. n. s. [glass and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with.

Boyle.

GLASSHOUSE. n. s. [glass and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. Addison on Italy.

GLASSINESS.* n. s. [from glassy.]

1. The making of glass. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

2. Smoothness, like glass.

Gum may give the silk a glassiness.

Sir W. Petty, in Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 294.

GLASSLIKE.* adj. [glass and like.] Clear; resembling glass.

By example most we sinn'd before,

And glasslike clearness mix'd with frailty bore.

Dryden, Astræa Redux.

GLASSMAN. n. s. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift, Direct. to Servants.

GLASSMETAL. n. s. [glass and metal.] Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

GLASSWORK. n. s. [glass and work.] Manufactory of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kuli, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glasworks. Baron, Nat. Hist.

GLASSWORT. n. s. [salicornia, or saltwort.]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves: these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which for the most part contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of Summer; and, having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali, or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judæa there is a sand which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness, or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!

Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd:
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastick tricks before high heaven,
As makes the angels weep. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shews his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shakespeare.

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing-dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandys.

The glassy deep. Dryden, Æn.

GLASTONBURY THORN. n. s. A species of MEDLAR.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring. Miller.

GLAUCOMA. † n. s. [γλαύκωμα, Gr. glaucoma, Fr.]

A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

The difference has been eagerly contended for between a glaucoma and a cataract, though indeed latterly the contest has been less violent. The Student, (1750.) i. 341.

GLAUCOUS.  adj.* [glauca, Lat. γλαυκός, Gr.] Grey, or blue.

The Esk glides over a bottom covered with mosses or coloured stones, that reflect through the pure water tints glaucous, green, or sapphirine. Pennant, Voyage to the Hebrides.

GLAIVE. † n. s. [glaiue, French; glais, a hook, Welsh; probably from the Latin gladius, a sword. Chaucer writes it gleve, and uses it in the sense of a lance. And Cotgrave defines glaiue "a launce, or horseman's staffe."] A broad sword; a falchion; a lance.

He, — laying both his hands upon his glaiue,
With dreadful strokes let drive at him so sore. Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 28.

Achilles pressing through the Phrygian glaiues.
Spenser, Hymn on Love.

Two hundred Greeks came next in sight well try'd.

Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glave had pendant by his side. Fairfax.

Behold from yonder hill, the foe appears,
Bows, bills, glaves, arrows, shields, and spears,
Like a dark wood he comes. Beaum. and Fl. Mad Lover.

When zeal, with aged clubs and glaves,
Gave chace to rockets and white staves. Hudibras.

TO GLA'VER. † v. n. [glaf, Welsh, flattery; gripe, a flatterer, a buffoon, from gripan or gripan, to play the buffoon. Glaver is used in Cheshire for flatter. But it is not a low word, as Dr. Johnson asserts it is; as it can boast much higher authority than that of the solitary example, given by him, from L'Estrange; and may be adopted from the Lat. glaber, smooth.] To flatter; to wheedle.

The writer of that glavering gloss upon Pope Bonifacius' bull. Fulke against Allen, (1586.) p. 512.

Some slavish, glavering, flattering parasite, or hanger-on. South, Serm. vi. 210.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

GLA'VERER.  n. s.* [from glaver.] A flatterer.

These glaverers gone, thy selfe to rest I laid,
And doubting nothing soundly fell asleep. Mir. for Mag. p. 407.

GLA'YMORE.  n. s.* [Gael. claidhamh, a sword, and more, great. It is generally pronounced claymore.

Dr. Jamieson. — It may perhaps be referred to the Lat. gladius.] A large two-handed sword, formerly much used by the highlanders of Scotland.

Their arms were anciently the glaymore, or great two-handed sword, and afterwards the two-edged sword and target. Johnson, Journey to the West. Isl.

TO GLAZE. † v. a. [To glass, only accidentally varied. Dr. Johnson. — Chaucer uses glase for "to put glass into windows." Our old lexicography gives "to glass or glase a window." See Sherwood's Dict.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hang'd, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon, Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glâse, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and handish the weapons, yet is it sound reason that carries the stroke home. Grow, Cosm. Sac.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden, DuRoi.

GLA'ZEN.  adj.* [from glaze; Sax. glæzen, glassy.] Resembling glass.

A glazun sea maynd with fier. Wicliffe, Revel. xv. 2.

Old glazen-eyes,

He hath not reach'd his despair yet. B. Jonson, For.

GLA'ZIER. n. s. [corrupted from glasier, or glassier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows.

Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named. Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier. Moxon, Mech. Exerc.

The dextrous glazier strong returns the bound,
And ginging sashes on the penthouse sound. Gay, Trivia.

And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part. Harte.

GLEAD.  See GLEDE.*

GLEAM.† n. s. [Sax. glæm, gleam; "the past participle of ge-leoman, to shine." Mr. H. Tooke. But see also To GLIMPSE.] Sudden shoot of light; lustrous brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream.

Spenser.

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travel'd steps.

Milton, P. L.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me.

Milton, P. L.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire.

Addison, Cato.

Is the clear azure gleam, the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green.

Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,

But dreadful gleams,

Fires that glow.

Pope, St. Cecilia's Day.

To GLEAM.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.

The field all iron cast a gleaming brown.

Milton, P. R.

Observant of approaching day,

The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled East.

Thomson, Summer.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees.

Thomson.

GLEAMING.* n. s. [from gleam.] A sudden shoot of light.

Farewell, ye gleamings of departed peace!

Shine out your last!

Thomson, Spring.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden coruscations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,

Swift through the town the warrior bends his way.

Pope.

To GLEAN.† v. a. [glaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum; or, as others think, from glans, an acorn; "primitus enim glandes pro frugibus erant." Nicot, and Junius. "Glainer, i. e. glaner, vient de glans, dont on a fait glandec, glander, et glaner, ramasser du gland; signification qu' on a dans la suite adaptée à l' action de ramasser le grain resté dans un champ moissonné le mot est très ancien dans notre langue." Roq. Gloss. Lang Rom.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers.

Ruth, ii.

Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;

He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.

Dryden.

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself.

Nelson.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,

To glean Palamon's fields.

Thomson, Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather

So much as from occasions you may glean,

If aught, to us unknown, afflict him thus.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

That goodness

Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men.

Judges, xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear.

Dryden, Ann.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together.

Locke.

GLEAN. n. s. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;

The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:

He spoils the saffron.

Dryden, Virg.

GLANER. n. s. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,

Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,

Should his heart own a gleaner in the field.

Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman.

Locke.

GLEANING. n. s. [from glean.] The act of gleanings or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleanings of grapes when the vintage is done.

Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest.

Atterbury.

GLEBE.† n. s. [glebe, old French; gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in sedge bowers;

The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers

Of rank and mellow glebe.

Drayton.

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,

With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills.

Milton, P. L.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.

Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,

Till the glad summons of a genial ray

Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to-day.

Garth.

2. The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tithe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people.

Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe.

Swift.

GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy.

Dict.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flattery! thy malignant seeds

In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand

Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,

With rising pride amidst the corn appear,

And choke the hopes and harvest of the year.

Prior.

GLEDE.† n. s. [Sax. gliba; Su. Goth. glada. Sere-nius. And so our word was sometimes also written glade. But some think it derived from glide, because the kite glides easily through the air with very little motion of his wings. "Glade, or glead, is a kite in the North of England." Grose.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture.

Deut.

Not a glead, not a vulture, not a falcon, not an eagle, not any bird of prey or rapine. Bp. Hall, Beauty of the Church.

GLEE.† n. s. [Sax. glegg, musick; whence gle, gle, gleo, mirth, joy. Thus in our oldest lexicography, glee is minstrelsy, Lat. musica. Pr. Parv. Chaucer uses glee for musick. We have thus revived the word in modern times, though Dr. Johnson has taken no notice of it, to signify a piece of light vocal musick for more than one voice, a kind of catch.]

1. Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. 'It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight, Whom all the people follow with great glee. Spenser, F. Q.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by vexing the inhabitants; who again foreslow not to baigne them with perfume. Carcw, Surv. of Cornwall.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewel my glee!
No happiness is now reserv'd for me. Guy, Pastorals.
The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free. Harte.

2. A song, sung in parts; a species of catch.

Airs of the most modern cast, frittered into divisions or even loaded with parts as much in sequence as in a catch or a glee.

Mason on Church Musick, p. 220.

Who has not seen the advertisements proposing a reward to him, who should produce the best catch, canon, or glee?

Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Eng. Minstrels.

To GLEE, or GLY. v. n. [Teut. gluyern, to look askew.] To squint. This word is in our old dictionaries, and is still used in the north of England.

GLED.† n. s. [gleb, Sax. from glopan, to glow; Su. Goth. gloed.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement, and without any example. The word is one of our oldest.

Piping hot out of the gled. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.
His armour glytteryde as did a gled.

Anc. Ballad of Chevy Chase.

In heart he brent as any gled. Lydgate, Hist. of Troy.

There is scene
Fair Ilium fall in burning red gleds down,
And from the soil great Troy, Neptimus' town.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

When I stir up these embers to the bottom, there are found some living gleds, which do both contain fire, and are apt to propagate it. Bp. Hall, Occas. Medit.

GLEEFUL.† adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing with make a gleeful boast?

Shakspeare, Tit. Andronicus.

Nor lacks he gleeful tales, whilst round the nutbrown bowl doth trot. Warner, Albion's England.

GLEEK.† n. s.

1. Musick. [Sax. glegg.] Dr. Johnson notices no other meaning of this word, and gives the following example of the present, which however carries an allusion to the next sense.

Musician. What will you give us?

Peter. No money on my faith; but the gleek: I will give you the minstrel. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

2. A scoff; a joke. [Sax. gogg, mirth, jocularity.]

Now where's the Bastard's bravo, and Charles his gleeks?
What, all a morn? Shakspeare, M. Hen. V. P. I.

Here Jiao, here; but stay, I do spy
A pretty gleek coming from Pallas' eye.

Beaumont and F. M. in the Mill.

3. A game at cards, [old French, glic, "nom d'un jeu de cartes." Lacombe, and Roquefort.]

Let her bear up to-day,
Laugh, and keep company, at gleek or crimp.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

A lady once requesting a gentleman to play at gleek, was refused, but civilly, and upon three reasons; the first whereof, madam, said the gentleman, is, I have no money. Her ladyship knew that was so material and sufficient, that she desired him to keep the two other reasons to himself.

Gayton on Dr. Quir. p. 14.

To GLEEK.† v. n. [from the Sax. glegg, sport. In the north of England, to gleek is to deceive.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gleek upon occasion. Shakspeare, M. Hen. V. Dream.

I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman, twice or thrice. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.

GLEEMAN.* n. s. [Sax. glegman, gliman, gleekman, gleeman.] A musician; a minstrel.

Blagebride — a conynge musicyan, called of the Britons god of gleemen. Fabyan, Chron. (1533,) fol. xxxii.

The Anglo-Saxon harpers and gleemen were the immediate successors and imitators of the Scandinavian scalds.

Bp. Percy on the Eng. Minstrels.

Their national love of verse and musick still so strongly predominated, that in the place of their old scalds, a new rank of poets arose, called gleemen or harpers.

Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. I.

To GLEEN.† v. n. To shine with heat or polish.

I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place, Dr. Johnson. — It seems to be the Icel. glia, Fris. glian, to shine; Gr. γλῆνος, a star, light.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleeking armour,
Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.

Prior.

GLEESOME.* adj. [from glee.] Full of merriment; joyous.

Gleesome hunters, pleased with their sport,
With sacrifices due have thank'd me for't. W. Browne.

GLEET.† n. s. [It is written by Skinner glitty, and derived from gliban, Saxon, to run softly. Dr. Johnson. — It is rather from the Icel. glat, glæta, moisture, humour, liquor, from glacr, glætt, glassy.] A sanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet.

Wiseman, Surgery.

To GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin sanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops.

Wiseman, Surgery.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a basin.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

GLEETY. adj. [from gleet.] Ichory; thinly sanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleety, you may suspect it corrupting. Wiseman.

GLEN.† n. s. [Gael. gleann, Welsh, glyn, Sax. glen, glens.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Can silent glens have charms for thee?

The lovely cot, and russet gown?

Bp. Percy, Song.

Rough glens, and sudden waterfalls.

T. Warton, Ode VII.

GLENE. * n. s. [Fr. glene; Gr. γλῆνη.] In anatomy, the cavity or socket of the eye; and also any shallow cavity of bones, into which some other bone is received.

GLEW. † n. s. [glu, Fr. gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

To GLEW. * v. u. [from the noun.] To join; to unite. See To GLUE.

The nobleness of your heart will glew the hearts of your people to you.

Abp. Laud, Serm. p. 225.

GLEWER. * n. s. [from glew.] One who gleweth papers, parchments, or other thing. See GLUER.

Huloet.

GLE'WINNESS. * n. s. [from glewy.] Adhesive quality; viscousness.

Sherwood.

GLE'WISH. * adj. [from glew.] Partaking of the nature of glew; viscous; adhesive; as, "glewish matter."

Huloet.

GLE'WY. * adj. [from glew.] Adhesive; viscous; glutinous.

They being no natural stones hewen out of the rock, but artificially made of pure sand by some glewy and unctuous matter knit and incorporated together.

Hakevall on Providence, p. 207.

A kind of pitch, which is described by authors as a very glewy thing.

Patrick on Gen. xi. 3.

GLIB. † adj. [from γλῆς, Gr. Skinner. By others, from the Lat. lavis, smooth, slippery. But is it not more probably from the Latin glaber, smooth?] 1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.

Burnet, Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slipt as glib as a birdcatcher's gin.

Arbutnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,

I'll do't before I speak.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English.

Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;

Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains:

And then, to make them pass the glibber,

Revis'd by Tibbald, More and Cibber.

Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man;

Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran.

Swift.

GLIB. † n. s. ["In Terconnell the haire of their [the Irish] head grows so long and curled, that they goe bare-headed, and are called glibs; the women, glibbins." Gainsford's Glory of England, 1618, p. 151.] The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them.

Spenser on Ireland.

Whom when she saw in wretched weeds disguis'd,

With hairy glib deform'd; and meager face, —

She knew him not.

Spenser, P. Q. iv. viii. 12.

To GLIB. † v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To castrate This is the only sense of the word, which Dr. Johnson notices.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,

To bring false generations; they are coheirs,

And I had rather glib myself than they Should not produce fair issue.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

2. To make smooth or glib.

There is a drunken liberty of the tongue, which, being once glibbed with intoxicating liquor, runs wild through heaven and earth.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 20.

I undertook that office and the tongues

Of all his flattering prophets glibb'd with lies

To his destruction.

Milton, P. R.

GLIBLY. † adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Wine so choice, or so delicious, that it went down glibly.

Patrick on Eccles. vii. 9.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction.

Gov. of the Tongue.

GLIBNESS. n. s. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold

The rock.

Chapman, Odysseus.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

Gov. of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [glidan, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusty vallies, glide

The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.

Fairfax.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,

In double streams the briny waters glide.

Dryden, Æn.

Just before the confines of the wood,

The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood.

Dryden, Æn.

Where stray the Muses, in what lawn or grove?

In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,

Or else where Cam his winding vales divides.

Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate

The mystick wonders of your silent state.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs

May plod it in a week, why may not I

Glide thither in a day?

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,

Glide under the green wave.

Milton, P. L.

He trembled every limb, and felt a smart

As if cold steel had glided through his heart.

Dryden, Tab.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear.

Dryden.

GLIDE. n. s. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly

Seeing Orlando it unlink'd itself,

And with indented glides did slip away

Into a bush.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

GLI'DER. † n. s. [from glide.]

1. That which glides.

The glaunce into my heart did glide;

Hey, ho, the glider;

Therewith my soul was sharply gride,

Such wounds soon waxen wider.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. In the north of England, a snare.

GLIFF. * n. s. [perhaps from the Icel. glia, to shine.

See GLANCE.] A transient view; a glimpse: still used in the north of England.

GLIKE. n. s. [gliz, Saxon. See GLEEK.] A snort; a scoff; a flout. Not now in use.

To GLIMMER. † v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimra, Goth. to shine; glimbra, Icel. the same, from glimbr, splendour; glimmen, Teut. to glow, to flame: from the Goth. gla, light. See GLEAM.]

1. To shine faintly.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day. Shakespeare.

The truth appears so naked on my side,

That any purblind eye may find it out.

— And on my side it is so well apparell'd,

So clear, so shining, and so evident,

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye. Shakespeare.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray

Glimmers upon the pure and native day.

Off in glimmering bowers and glades

He met her.

Milton, Il Pens.

See'st thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,

The seat of desolation, void of light,

Save what the glimmering of these livid flames

Casts pale and dreadful?

Milton, P. L.

The sacred influence

Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n

Shoots far into the bosom of dim night

A glimmering dawn.

Milton, P. L.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,

Some seeds of light at length began to roll;

The rising motion of an infant ray

Shot glimm'ring through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.

Off by the winds, extinct the signal lies;

Or smother'd in the glimm'ring socket dies. Gay, Trivia.

When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,

He drove to pasture all the lusty males. Pope, Odyssey.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

GLIMMER† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

Yet hath my night of life some memory,

My wasting lamps some fading glimmer left.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer.

Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastick: talc, cutsilver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMMERING* n. s. [from glimmer.] Faint or imperfect view.

On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were.

Wotton.

The Pagan priesthood was always in the druids; and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted.

Swift.

I cannot see a glimmering of distinction.

Burke on the Popery Laws.

TO GLIMPSE* v. n. [from glimmer; if it be not an older word than that. Chancer uses it substantively, "Ye have some glimsing, and no parfit sight." March. Tale. However, it is to be referred, like glimpe and gleam, to the Goth. gla, light; while it also resembles the Gr. λάμπω, λάμψω, to shine, and Icel. liome, light, from the same root.] To appear by glimpses.

Deferred shadows glimpsing in his sight.

Drayton, Barons' Wars, ii. 45.

GLIMPSE† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast rooms in nature,

Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute

Each orb's glimpse of light, convey'd so far

Down to the habitable, which returns

Light back to them.

Milton, P. L.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our shortsighted reason having got some faint glimpse of, we, in the dark, grope after.

Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Light as the lightning glimpses they rest.

Milton, P. L.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;

My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires,

Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,

My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.

There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face

Strikes through the solid darkness of the place.

Chaucer.

Man he seems

In all his lineaments, though in his face

The glimpses of his Father's glory shine.

Milton, P. R.

If I, celestial sire, in aught

Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,

One glimpse of glory to my issue give;

Grac'd for the little time he has to live.

Dryden, Fab.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.

If, while this weary'd flesh draws fleetly g breath,

Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,

If hap'ly be thy will that I should know

Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;

From now, from instant now, great sire, dispel

The clouds that press my soul.

Prior.

5. A short transitory view.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet

Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern

Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade.

Milton, P. L.

Some God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.

A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,

No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd.

Dryden, Virg.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of.

Shakespeare.

TO GLISTEN† v. n. [not from glittan, German, which Dr. Johnson adduces, but perhaps from gleissen in that language; though the Sax. glimman is to shine; and our own word was formerly glissen. I find it in use nearly a century before the time of Thomson, from whom Dr. Johnson's earliest example is cited.] To shine; to sparkle with light.

How unpolished soever this diamond be, yet if it do but glissen, 'tis too pretious to be cast away.

Hammond, Works, iv. 660.

The bleating kind

Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistering earth,

With looks of dumb despair.

Thomson, Winter.

The ladies eyes glistered with pleasure. Richardson, Pamela.

TO GLISTER† v. n. [Teut. glinsteren, glisteren; Sw. glistra.] To shine; to be bright.

The wars flame most in Summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine.

Spenser on Ireland.

'Tis better to be lowly born

And range with humble livers in content,

Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,

And wear a golden sorrow.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The golden sun

Gallops the zodiack in his glit'ring coach.

Shakespeare.

All that glisters is not gold.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

You were more the eye and talk

Of the court to-day, than all

Else that glister'd in Whitehall.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire.

1 Mac. vi. 39.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glistered prettily.

Boyle.

GLISTER* n. s. [from the verb.] Lustre; glitter.

Dr. Jamieson notices this word as a Scottish substantive, but says that he had never observed it as an English one. It, however, exists.

As fair Aurora in her morning gray,

Deck'd with the glister of her love.

Is fair Pamela. Greene, Descript. of Pamela, Arcad. (1630)

G L O

GL'STER. n. s. [Properly written chyster, from κλύζω.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.

Now enters Bush with new state airs,

His lordship's premier minister;

And who, in all profound affairs,

Is held as needful as his glister.

Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GL'STERINGLY.* adv. [from To glister.] Brightly; splendidly.

Sherwood.

GLIT.* See GLEET.

To GLIT'TER.† v. n. [Goth. glitmunjan; Icel. glitta; Sw. glitra.]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.

Before the battle joins, from afar,

The field yet glitters with the pomp of war. Dryden, Virg.

Scarce had'st thou time t' unsheath thy conqu'ring blade;

It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.

In glit'ring scenes, o'er her own heart, severe;

In crowds, collected; and in courts sincere. Young.

GLIT'TER. n. s. [from the verb.] Lustre; bright show; splendour.

Clad

With what permissive glory since his fall

Was left him, or false glitter.

Milton, P. L.

Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in it. Collier on Pride.

Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Law.

GLIT'TERAND.† Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.

Belts of glitterand gold.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

GLIT'TERING.* n. s. [from glitter.] Lustre; gleam.

Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

GLIT'TERINGLY.† adv. [from glitter.] Radiantly; with shining lustre.

Sherwood.

To GLOAM.* v. n. [perhaps from the Germ. glum, turbid.] To be sullen; to be melancholy. See To GLOOM.

Woman, pluck up your heart, and leave off all this gloming.

Gammer Gurton's Needle, (1551.)

To GLOAR.† v. a. [gloeren, Dutch; glora, Cimbr.]

1. To squint; to look askew.

Skinner.

2. In Scotland, to stare: as, "what a gloarand quean." Dr. Johnson. — It is also used, in the north of England, in the same sense; and it occurs in our old lexicography: "To gaze and glor." Barret in V. GAZE.

To GLOAT.† v. n. [This word I conceive to be ignorantly written for gloar. Dr. Johnson. — It is not so; but may be from the Sw. gluta, "leviter vel fortim inspicere," Serenius; having indeed the same origin as gloar, viz. gloa, Goth. to look attentively. To gloat, or glote, is in our old lexicography. See Sherwood's and Coles's Dict.] To cast side glances as a timorous lover, Dr. Johnson says; but it is rather to stare with admiration, eagerness, or desire.

Teach every grace to smile in your behalf,

And her deluding eyes to gloat for you. Beaumont, Juno Shore.

Some praise his sleight; and others gloat

Upon his rich embroidered coat. Gay, Fables.

GLO'BARD. n. s. [from glow.] A glow-worm.

G L O

GLO'BATED. adj. [from globe.] Formed in shape of a globe; spherical; spheroidal.

GLOBE. n. s. [globe, French; globus, Latin.]

1. A sphere; a ball; a round body: a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.

2. The terraqueous ball.

The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,

Finding his royal enemy betray'd,

Wept at his fall.

Stepney.

Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe.

Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.

The astrologer who spells the stars,

Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye

Interprets heaven's physiognomy.

Cleveland.

These are the stars,

But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find

Such figures there as are in globes design'd.

Cresch.

4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.

Him round

A globe of fiery seraphim enclos'd,

With bright emblazonry, and horrent arms.

Milton, P. L.

GLOBE Amaranth, or everlasting flower. n. s. [amaranthoides.] A flower.

Miller.

GLOBE Daisy. n. s. A kind of flower.

GLOBE Fish. n. s. A kind of orbicular fish.

GLOBE Ranunculus. n. s. [helleboro-ranunculus.] A plant.

Miller.

GLOBE Thistle. n. s. [carduus orbiculatus.] A plant.

Miller.

To GLOBE.* v. a. [Lat. globo.] To gather round together.

Although I have given it the name of a liquid thing, yet it is not incontinent to bound itself, as humid things are, but hath in it a most restraining and powerful abstinence to start back, and globe itself upward from the mixture of any ungenerous and unbecoming motion, or any soil wherewith it may peril to stain itself.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. li. 3.

GLOBO'SE. adj. [globosus, Latin.] Spherical; round.

Regions, to which

All thy dominion, Adam, is no more

Than what this garden is to all the earth,

And all the sea, from one entire globose

Stretch'd into longitude.

Milton, P. L.

Then form'd the moon.

Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of stars.

Milton, P. L.

GLOBO'SITY. n. s. [from globose.] Sphericity; sphericallness.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, till at last it appear not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth.

Ray on the Creation.

GLO'BOUS.† adj. [globosus, Latin; globous, French.

When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous. I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.

Dr. Johnson. — The word in the following passage of Milton is not globose, as Dr. Johnson observes, and as he has cited it; but it is, in the poet's own edition of his immortal poem, globose; i. e. spherical; round.

GLO

Having reduced [it] into a globous form.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 282.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globous earth in plain outspread,
Such are the courts of God!

Milton, P. L.

The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turbid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, of dreadful hiss,
Singing the air.

Philips.

GLOBULAR. adj. [globulus, Latin.] Having the form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity.

Grew, Cosm. Sacra.

GLOBULARIA. n. s. [Latin; globulaire, French.]

A floscule flower.

Miller.

GLOBULE. n. s. [globule, French; globulus, Latin.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver.

Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo.

Newton, Opticks.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastick, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLOBULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth.

Boyle.

GLOBY.* adj. [from globe.] Orbicular; round.

Sherwood.

Your hair, whose globy rings

He flying curls, and crispeth with his wings. B. Jonson, Elegy.

One of the highest arcs, that human contemplation circling upwards can make from the globy sea whereon she stands.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

GLODE.* The old preterite of To glide.

Forth upon his way he glode,

As sparkle out of blondé. Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas.

She glode forth as an adder doth. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Like sparke of fire that from the anvil glode.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. 23.

TO GLOMERATE. † v. a. [glomero, Latin.] To gather into a ball or sphere. A filamentous substance gathered into a ball is said to be glomerated, but discontinuous particles are conglobated.

A river which, from Caucasus, after many glomerating dances, increases Indus.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 68.

GLOMERATION. n. s. [glomeratio, Latin.]

1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.

2. A body fumged into a ball.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low. Bacon.

GLOMEROUS. adj. [glomerosus, Latin.] Gathered into a ball or sphere, as a ball of thread.

GLOOM. † n. s. [glomung, Saxon, twilight.

Dr. Johnson: — Rather perhaps from the German glum, turbid. Yet Mr. H. Tooke deduces gloom from the Sax. gleoman, to shine, the very reverse of its meaning. See his Div. of Purley, ii. 373.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dismalness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,

Teach light to counteract a gloom.

Milton, Il Pens.

Is this the seat,

That we must change for heaven? This mournful gloom,

For that celestial light?

Milton, P. L.

GLO

The still night; not now, as ere man fell,

Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black air,

Accompanied: with damps, and dreadful gloom. Milton, P. L.

Now warm in love, now with'ring in thy bloom,

Lost in a convent's solitary gloom.

Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; sullenness.

TO GLOOM. † v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine obscurely, as the twilight. This sense is not now in use.

His glist'ring armour made

A little glooming light much like a shade.

Spenser, F. Q.

Scarcely had Phœbus in the glooming East

Yet harnessed his fiery-footed team.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. To be cloudy; to be dark.

Through dreadful shades of ever glooming night.

Span Tragedy, (1603.)

3. To be melancholy; to be sullen. See TO GLOAM.

4. To look darkly or dismally.

Here while the proud their long-drawn pomps display,

There the black gibbet glooms beside the way.

Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

TO GLOOM.* v. a. To fill with gloom, with darkness, or dismalness.

A night that glooms us in the noontide ray,

And wraps our thoughts at banquets in the shroud.

Young, Night Th. 1.

GLOOMILY. adv. [from gloomy.]

1. Obscurely; dimly; without perfect light; dismally.

2. Sullenly; with cloudy aspect; with dark intentions; not cheerfully.

See, he comes: how gloomily he looks!

Dryden.

Gloomily retir'd

The villain spider lives.

Thomson, Summer.

GLOOMINESS. † n. s. [from gloomy.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

A day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness.

Zeph. i. 15.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour, and makes them grow sullen and unconvertible.

Collier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy.

Addison.

GLOOMY.* † adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without

The growing miseries, which Adam saw

Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,

To sorrow abandon'd.

Milton, P. L.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,

Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,

Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome noon.

Dryden, Fab.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast.

Pope, Letters.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field

Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,

Herself a fairer flow'r, by gloomy Dis

Was gather'd.

Milton, P. L.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

And you, ye hopeless gloomy minded tribe,

You who, unconscious of those nobler fights

That reach impatient at immortal life,

Against the prime endearing privilege

Of being dare contend,

Thomson on Sir Isaac Newton.

GLORE.* adj. [Icei. hlyre, a very fat fish; whence hlyre-fettr, extremely fat. Serenius. But see also GOLORE.] Fat; as, "glorc fat, very fat." Yorksh. Gloss. to the Praise of Yorkshire Ale. "Glore, fat. North. Ghar, soft fat. Lancashire. Pegge.

GLORIA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. gloriation, Lat. gloriatio, from glorior, to glory, to boast.] Boast; triumph.

Mutual praises, *gloriation*s, and congratulations.

Lp. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 338.

Suspicion, peremptoriness; despondency, triumph or gloriation. More, Conf. Cabb. p. 211.

How were the Jews puffed up with that vain gloriation, that they were the sons of Abraham. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 241.

GLO'RIED. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours. Not now in use.

Old respect,

As I suppose, toward your once gloried friend,
My son, now captive, hither hath inform'd
Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age
Came lagging after.

Milton, S. A.

GLORIFICATION. n. s. [glorification, French, from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Bp. Taylor.

To GLO'RIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shakspeare, K. John.
Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne. Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged. Hooker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alleged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hooker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Ps. lxxxvi. 9.

Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls. Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify. Spenser on Ireland.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall,
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

4. To exult to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him. St. John, xiii. 32.

Whom he justified then he also glorified. Rom. viii. 30.

The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified; then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy. Bearson.

The soul, being immortal, will at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner. Ayliffe's Paragon.

GLORIOUS.† adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Dan. iii. 22.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendour of his celestial body, still name more glorious and majestic by the authority which his Father hath committed to him of universal judge. Nelson.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,

He now defends the cause that once was thine. Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,

And act like men who claim that glorious title. Addison, Cato.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good fight. Law.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness. Law.

2. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious; for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

We have not

Receiv'd into our bosom and our grace
A glorious lazy drone, grown fat with feeding,
On others' toil, but an industrious bee.

Massinger, Gr. Duke of Florence.

GLO'RIOUSLY.† adv. [from glorious.]

1. Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

He hath triumphed gloriously. Erod. xv. 1.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend. Pope.

2. Ostentatiously; boastingly.

I protest to you, signior, I speak it not gloriously, nor out of affectation. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

GLO'RIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from glorious.] The state or quality of being glorious.

GLO'RY.† n. s. [old French, glorie, and glôre; afterwards, gloire; from gloria, Latin. Among the old poets, both English and Scottish, it was used sometimes as one syllable, glôre.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest. St. Luke, ii. 14.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory. Psal. lxxiii. 24.

Then enter into glory, and resume

His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heav'n. Milton, P. L.

It is hardly possible for you to beseech and intreat God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life. Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

And with that word and warning soon was light,

Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,

There have been fewer friends on earth than kings. Cumley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Barnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown,

Of all applause, be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not array'd like one of these.

St. Matt. vi. 29.

G L O

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.
Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison, Spect.

5. Lustre; brightness.

New sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope, Winter.
From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace, such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South, Sermon.

A smile plays with a surprizing agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory
upon the countenance. Collier of the Aspect.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisd. xiv. 14.

On death-beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto.

Sidney.

To GLO'RY. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgement glorifying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief.

Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raise up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakespeare.
Your glorifying is not good. 1 Cor. v. 6.

Thou hast seen mighty Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addison, Cato.

This title of Freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison, Freeholder.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar!

Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Richardson, Clarissa.

To GLOSE. † v. n. [Sax. gleran, to flatter.] To flatter; to colloque. See To GLOZE.

GLO'SER.  n.* [from glosce.]

1. A communicator.

Sophisters, and doctors, and legends, and glosers.

Bp. of Chichester, Sermon. (1576,) sign. C. v.

2. A flatterer; a deceiver. See GLOZER.

GLOSS. † n. s.

1. A scholium; a comment. [Gr. γλῶσσα; Ital. glosa; Fr. glosce.]

They never hear sentence which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad do teach,
With general voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatt'ring gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Howell.

G L O

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras.

In many places, he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method.
Baker on Learning.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles, they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense, it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glow. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Goth. glosa, to shine; whence glassa, and thence our glaze, and gloss.

His iron coat all over grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glistening gloss darken'd with filthy dust. Spenser, F. Q.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakespeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss. Shakespeare.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.
Weeds that the wind did toss

The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss,
Like that of oil. Chapman, Iliad.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison, Spect.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit:
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Pref.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Milton, P. L.

To GLOSS. † v. n. [glosce, French, from the noun.
Dr. Johnson. — Gloser, in the sense of comment, is of no great age in the French language. V. Lacombe. "Glosée, notée. 1450." The Sax. gleran, is both to comment and to flatter.]

1. To comment.

Of a beautiful countenance; or, had beautiful eyes; — as Conradus Pellicanus here glosses. Patrick on 1 Sam. xvi. 12.

Thou detain'st Briseis in thy hands,
By priestly glossing on the gods' commands. Dryden, Fab.

2. To make sly remarks.

Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as his fields he draws Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne, Poems, p. 124.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent. Hooker, Sermon.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Philips, Briton.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain,
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saintlike show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden, Pers.

GLOSSARIAL.* adj. [from glossary.] Relating to a glossary; as, a glossarial index, i. e. an index referring to words explained in a work, as in the late editions of Shakspeare.

GLOSSARIST.* n. s. [from glossary.]

1. One who writes a gloss or commentary. This seems not to be proper.

The glossarist I take to be Philip de Bergamo, a prior at Padua, who wrote a most elaborate moralisation on Cato.

Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 169.

2. One who writes a dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

Mr. J. Kersey — with laudable industry has collected almost all the old words, I believe, which are to be found either in Speght or Skinner, and has generally with much fidelity copied the interpretations assigned to them by those two glossarists.

Tyrrhit, Fœdæ. Rœdæ. Contror. p. 162.

GLOSSARY. n. s. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words,

According to Varro, when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulachrum dedicatum est, and also in the old glossaries.

Stillingfleet.

I could add another word to the glossary.

Baker.

GLOSSATOR.† n. s. [glossateur, French; from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The Jewish doctors understood the text better than Gratian, or John Seneca his glossator.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 298.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgement, and not to become an evidence; but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect the glossator's opinion must be false.

Aylife.

All this is related by Aldred, the Saxon glossator, at the end of St. John's Gospel.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. Diss. i.

GLOSSER.† n. s. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

Neither the glossers upon the Alcoran, nor the most authentic legend of his life, take any notice thereof.

L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, (1679,) p. 62.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS. n. s. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt.

Boyle.

GLOSSIST.* n. s. [from gloss.] A writer of glosses.

It was raised by inconsiderate glossists from the mistake of this text.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

GLOSSOGRAPHER.† n. s. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] A scholiast; a commentator.

The like whereto is found also in the canon law, and noted by the glossographer. Hayward, Answ. to Doleman, ch. 1.

Some [words] I believe may pose the ablest glossographer now living.

Blount, Anc. Ten. Preface.

GLOSSOGRAPHY. n. s. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] The writing of commentaries.

GLOSSY.† adj. [from gloss.]

1. Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place: he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water camblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours.

Bacon.

The rest entire

Shone with a glossy scurf.

Milton, P. L.

His surcoat was a bearskin on his back;

His hair hung long behind, a glossy raven black.

Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,

For downy peaches and the glossy plum.

Dryden, Virg.

2. Specious.

That Lord Chesterfield must have been mortified by the lofty contempt, and polite yet keen satire, with which Johnson exhibited him to himself in this letter, it is impossible to doubt. He, however, with that glossy duplicity which was his constant study, affected to be quite unconcerned.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

GLOTTIS.* n. s. [Gr. γλωττις.] In anatomy, a cleft or chink in the larynx, serving for the formation of the voice: it is in the form of a little tongue.

The glottis, — reckoned among the cartilages before mentioned — is the principal instrument of modulation.

Smith, on Old Age, p. 142.

Letting it pass promptly from the upper part of the glottis, along the roof of the mouth.

Pownall on the Elem. of Speech, Antiq. p. 154.

GLOVE.† n. s. [glofe, Saxon, from kloffue, Danish, to divide; klyfta, Su. Goth. the same. This brings it near to our own word cleave. Junius says that the glove, in Danish, is called haand-kloffuer, because it splits and divides the hand. Others think it to be from the Gr. καλύπτω, to hide or cover; or κέλυφος, the rind or shell of any thing. The word is old in our language: "I wote thee gyfte both goolde and gloves," Romance of The Sowdon of Babyloyne, written, according to Mr. Steevens, before the year 1375.] Cover of the hands.

They flew about like chaff i' th' wind;

For haste some left their masks behind,

Some could not stay their gloves to find.

Drayton.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head

A wreath of laurel.

Dryden.

TO GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,

Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,

Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,

Must glove this hand.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The next he preys on is her palm,

That alm'ner of transpiring balm;

So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd,

Tender as 'twere a jelly glow'd.

Cleaveland.

GLOVER. n. s. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife?

Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

TO GLOUR.* See TO GLOAR: which is in some places pronounced glour or glover.

TO GLOUT.† v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology. Dr. Johnson. — It is by no means a low word. Better writers than Chapman and Garth, whom Dr. Johnson cites, use it, both as a neuter and active verb. And it is, like glour, and gloat, descended from the Goth. gloa, to behold.] To pout; to look sullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks

From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,

Where, gloating round her rock, to fish she falls.

Chapman.

That feast of love and heavenly-admitted friendship, the seat of filial grace, became the subject of horror and gloating admiration, pageanted about like a dreadful idol.

Milton, Of Reform. B. 1.

Gloating with sullen spight, the fury shook

Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look.

Garth.

TO GLOUT.* v. a. To gaze; to view attentively.

His majesty — knew full well — that whosoever attempteth any thing for the publick, (especially if it pertain to religion, and to the opening and clearing of the Word of God,) the same setteth himself upon a stage to be glouted upon by every evil eye.*

Translators of the Bible to the Reader, 1611.

To GLOW.† v. n. [glopan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch; gloa, Icel. to shine; Gucl. and Welsh, glo, a live coal.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But sithence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire.

Spenser, F. Q.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Their office upon a tawny front. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to shew her innocence, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill on Providence.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton, P. L.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows.⁴ Addison, Ovid.

How op'ning heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe. Pope.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison, Cato.
The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands. Gay.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton, P. L.
Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
New creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse.
Fair ideas flow, Savage.

Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison, Cato.

Forc'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,

Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent
Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded.

He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a sullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long.

Shadwell.

To GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd funs, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakespeare.

GLOW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.

2. Vehemence of passion.

3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

Such as suppose that the great stile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and bustle of a Paulo, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken. Reynolds.

To GLOWER.* See To GLOUR.

GLO'WINGLY.* adv. [from the part. glowing.]

1. In a shining manner; brightly.

A little stoop there may be to allay him; he would grow too rank else: a small eclipse to shadow him; but out he must break glowingly again, and with a greater lustre.

Beaumont and Fl. Wit without Money.

2. With passion; with admiration, love, or desire.

GLO'WWORM. n. s. [glow and worm.] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.

The honey bugs steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matten to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

A great light drowneth smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of the glowworm. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, till by the springing day
Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

To GLOZE.† v. n. [glejan, Saxon. One of our oldest words. Wicliffe and Chaucer use it in the sense of flatter; by whom it is written glose.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

For he could well his glozing speeches frame.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 14.

Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton, P. L.

So glaz'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milton, P. L.

A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glozing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship. Philips.

2. To comment. This should be gloss.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

To GLOZE over.* v. a. To palliate by specious exposition. See To GLOSS. But it is often pronounced and written, in this sense, gloze.

GLOZE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shakespeare.

2. Specious show; gloss. Not used.

Precious couches full oft are shak'd with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire?

Sidney.

G L U

GLO'ZER.† n. s. [from glose.] A flatterer; "a liar."

Huloet.

Yet must I talke so sage and smooth, as though I were a gloser.

Gamm. Gurlon's Needle, (1551.)

I may not use the gloser's trade;

I cannot say the crow is white,

But needs must call a spade a spade.

Gifford, Poise of Gilloflowers, (1580.)

GLO'ZING.* n. s. [from gloze.] Specious representation.

Your goodly glozings and time-serving colludings with the state are but like watermen on the Thames, looking one way, rowing another way.

Mountain, App. to Cæs. p. 43.

GLUE. n. s. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glud, Welsh.]

A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The driest and most transparent glue is the best.

Moxon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,

And through the parts cementing glue diffuse.

Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow

More than my body's parting with my soul:

My love and fear glu'd many friends to thee.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glueth a potsherd together.

Ecclus. xxii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvass over the head of the figure.

Addison on Italy.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm.

Derham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneous hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing.

Newton, Opticks.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honeypot are sensual men plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out.

L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase men's minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things.

Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;

And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:

Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glu'd

Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd.

Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,

And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms.

Pope.

GLU'EBOILER. n. s. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLU'ER.† n. s. [from glue.] One who cements with glue. See also GLEWER.

Barret.

GLU'EV.* adj. See GLEWY, and GLUY.

GLU'EYNES.* See GLEWINES.

GLU'ISH.* adj. Partaking of the nature of glue. See also GLEWISH.

Sherwood.

To GLUM.* v. n. [from gloom; formerly written glomb.] Dr. Johnson notices only the adjective glum, which he calls a low cant word; and for the usage of which he cites the comparatively modern authority of the Guardian. For glum is both a verb, and a substantive, in our ancient writers.] To look sourly; to be sour of countenance.

G L U

Huloet.

It is of Love, as of Fortune,—

Which whilom will on folke smile,

And glombe on hem an othir while. Chaucer, Rom. R. 4356.

GLUM.* n. s. Sullenness of aspect; a frown.

Shelooked hauntely, and gawe on me a glum;

There was among them no word then but muna.

Skelton, Poems, p. 44.

GLUM.† adj. Sullen; stubbornly grave. It is used, in some places, for melancholy, dull; and, like the old adjective glummy, is adopted from gloom.

Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well, what then?

Guardian.

GLUMMY.* adj. [from glum, i. e. gloom.] Dark; dismal for want of light.

Such casual blasts may happen, as are most to be feared, when the weather waxeth darke and glummy.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580) fol. 27.

To GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutio, Lat. to swallow; γλῦζω, Gr.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

Till cramm'd and gorg'd, nigh burst

With suck'd and glutted offal.

Milton, P. L.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers.

Bacon.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights

Feed, but not glut our appetites.

Denham

What way remove

His settled hate, and reconcile his love,

That he may look propitious on our toils,

And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils.

Dryden.

No more, my friend;

Here let our glutted execution end.

Dryden, Æn.

I found

The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,

Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,

Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new.

Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave.

Milton, P. L.

His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,

Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes.

Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,

Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight

With one full prospect; but invites by many,

To view at last the whole.

Dryden.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once.

Arbutnot, Art of Polite Lying.

5. To saturate.

The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it.

Boyle.

GLUT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorging foul

Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail

Of iron globes.

Milton, P. L.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two

Be forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw.

Milton, P. L.

Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights.

L'Estrange.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means arrested in their passage. Woodward.

To GLUTINATE.* v. a. [Lat glutino.] To join with glue; to cement. Bailey.

GLUTINA'TION.* n. s. [from glutinate.] The act of joining with glue. Bailey.

GLU'TINATIVE.* adj. [from glutinate.] Tenacious. See AGGLUTINATIVE and CONGLUTINATIVE.

GLUTINO'SITY.* n. s. [Fr. glutinosité.] Glutinousness; clamminess. Cotgrave.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutineux, French; from gluten, Latin.] Glay; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members. Baron, Nat. Hist.

Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton, Comus.
Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLU'TINOUSNESS. n. s. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Cheyne.

GLUTTON.*† n. s. [glutton, French; gluto, Lat. from glutitō, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catflesh baked. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down,
While the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibb's endless draught. Prior.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Law.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiable to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.

3. A species of bear. Pennant.

To GLUTTON.* v. a. [from the noun.] To load; to glut; to overfill.

Then after all your fooling, fat, and wine,
Glutton'd at last, return at home to pine. Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 81.

To GLUTTON'SER.*† v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton; to be luxurious. Sherwood.

And again, οι επι της θαρ δαιμον — the material demons do strangely gluttonize upon the niddous and blood of sacrifices. Hallywell, Melampus. (1681, p. 102.)

GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debt,
And take down th' interest in their glutinous maws. Shakespeare.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this glutinous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no glutinous delight. Milton, P. L.

GLUTTONOUSLY.*† adv. [from glutinous.] With the voracity of a glutton. Sherwood.

GLUTTONY. n. s. [gluttonic, French; from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Gluttony, a vice in a great fortune, a curse in a small. Holyday.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stong. Milton, P. R.
Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden, Juv.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbuthnot.

GLUY. adj. [from gluc.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy spumous matter. Harvey on Consumptions.

With gluy wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour, let it have but one quality of being very gluy or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYCONIAN.* } adj. [Fr. glyconien, glyconique; from GLYCONICK. } the Lat. glyconium.] Denoting a kind of verse in Greek and Latin poetry.

He [Watts] was a maker of verses from fifteen to fifty, and in his youth appears to have paid attention to Latin poetry. His verses to his brother, in the glyconick measure, written when he was seventeen, are remarkably easy and elegant. Johnson, Life of Watts.

GLYN.*† n. s. [Irish; glyn, Norm. Fr. a valley; glyn, Cornish, a woody valley; gleann, glyn, pl. Erse; glen, Scottish.] See GLEN.] A hollow between two mountains.

Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut them up within those narrow corners and glyns under the mountain's foot. Spenser, State of Ireland.

GLYPH.*† n. s. [Fr. glyphe; Gr. γλυφή, from γλύφω, to engrave.] In sculpture or architecture, any kind of ornamental cavity. Chambers.

GLYPHICK.* n. s. [from γλύφω.] A picture or figure, by which a word was implied; usually hieroglyphick. See HIEROGLYPHICK. But glyphicks is in the Hist. of Peru, p. 43.

GLYPTRICK.* n. s. [Fr. glyptique; Gr. γλυπτός, from γλύφω, to engrave.] The art of engraving figures on precious stones.

GLYPTOGRAPHICK.* adj. [γλυπτός, and γράφω, Gr.] Describing the methods of engraving figures on precious stones.

A particularly valuable part of this introduction is the glyptographic lithology. Brit. Crit. vol. to. 1797. Oct.

GLYPTOGRAPHY.* n. s. [γλυπτός, and γράφω; Fr. glyptographie.] A description of the art of engraving upon gems.

The general prolegomena are followed by the author's introduction to glyptography, (l'étude des pierres gravées), in which he shows himself to be a person who has not derived his information merely from the descriptions given by others, and from books or prints, but from the actual contemplation of the originals themselves. Brit. Crit. vol. 10. 1797. Oct.

To GNAR.† } v. n. gnýppan, Sax. knorren, Dutch;
To GNARL. } knorra, Goth. to murmur; knurra,
Icel. the same.] To growl; to murmur; to snarl.

He gan to rear his bristles strong,
And felly gnar, until day's enemy
Did him appease. Spenser, F. Q.

Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first. Shakespeare.

Gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

The gnarring porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Fairfax.

GNARLED.† adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks. Dr. Johnson:—Gnar, as a hard knot of wood, is one of our oldest words. Chaucer uses it. It is also in our old lexicography. See Bullokar and Cockeram. It is from the Teut. knorre. See likewise KNAKE.] Knotty.

Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedg cable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

To GNASH.† v. a. [knaschen, Dutch; gnista, Icelandic; and our own word at first was gnast. Wicliffe uses gnastide for gnashed; and nearly two centuries after him, bishop Fisher, in his Psalms: "They gnaste with theyr teeth."] To strike together; to clash.

Laugh not with him, lest thou have sorrow with him, and lest thou gnash thy teeth in the end. Eccles. xxx. 10.

The seer, who could not yet his wrath assuage,
Roll'd his green eyes, that spark'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden, Virg.

To GNASH. v. n.
1. To grind or collide the teeth.
He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Psalms cxii. 10.

2. To rage even to collision of the teeth; to fume; to growl.

His great iron teeth he still did grind,
And grimly gnash, threatening revenge in vain. Spenser, F. Q.
They gnashed upon me with their teeth. Psalms xxxv. 16.
They him laid

Gnashing for anguish, and despite and shame,
To find himself not matchless. Milton, P. L.

With boiling rage Atreide burn'd,
And foam betwixt his gnashing grinders churn'd. Dryden.

GNASHING.* n. s. [from gnash.] Collision of the teeth in rage, or pain.

Let her taste of most terrible punishments, sorrowful plagues, waylings, and gnashings of teeth.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Bale on the Revel. (1550.) P. iii.

St. Matt. viii. 12.

GNAT. n. s. [gnæt, Saxon.]

1. A small winged stinging insect.
Her whip of cricket's bone, the lash of film;
Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat. Shakespeare.

2. Any thing proverbially small.
Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. St. Matt. xxiii. 24.

GNATFLOWER. n. s. [gnat and flower.] A flower, otherwise called the bee-flower.

GNATHONICAL.* adj. [Lat. gnathonicus.] Deceitful in words; flattering; like a smellfeast or parasite. Bullokar, and Cockeram.

GNATHONICALLY.* adv. [from gnathonical.] Flatteringly; deceitfully. Cockeram.

GNATSNAPPER. n. s. [gnat and snap.] A bird so called, because he lives by catching gnats.

They deny that any bird is to be eaten whole, but only the gnatsnapper. Hakewill on Providence.

GNATWORM.* n. s. [gnat and worm.] A small water insect produced of a gnat.

To GNAW.† v. a. [gnagan, Saxon; knaghen, Dutch; gnaga, Su. Goth. nagen, German; naga, Icel. gnaw, Gr.]

1. To eat by degrees; to devour by slow corrosion.

A knowing fellow that would gnaw a man
Like to a vermine, with his hellish braine,
And many an honest soule, even quick had slain. Chapman.

To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw
Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw. Dryden, Juv.

2. To bite in agony or rage.

Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame. Shakespeare, Othello.

They gnaw'd their tongues for pain. Rev. xvi. 10.
He comely fell, and dying gnaw'd the ground. Dryden.

3. To wear away by biting.

Gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

Like rotten fruit I fall, worn like a cloth,
Gnaw'd into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.

A lion, hampered in a net, called to a mouse to help him out of the snare: the mouse gnaw'd the threads to pieces, and set the lion at liberty. L'Estrange.

4. To fret; to waste; to corrode.

5. To pick with the teeth.

His bones clean pick'd; his very bones they gnaw. Dryden.

To GNAW. v. n. To exercise the teeth. It is now used actively.

I might well, like the spaniel gnaw upon the chain that ties me; but I should sooner mar my teeth than procure liberty. Sidney.

See the hell of having a false woman: my bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnaw'd at. Shakespeare.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

GNAWER. n. s. [from gnaw.] One that gnaws.

To GNI'BBLE.* See To NIBBLE. Gnibble, however, is the old orthography.

GNOFF.* n. s. [perhaps of the same origin with chuff. See CHUFF. Bullokar and Cockeram define a gnof to be a churl.] A miser.

A rich gnofe, i. e. a rich grub, or miserable caitiff, as I render it; which interpretation, to be proper and significant, I gather by the sense of that ancient metre,

The caitiff gnof sed to his crue,
My meney is many, my incomes but few. Comment. upon Chaucer's Mill. Tale, &c. (1665.) p. 8.

GNOME.* n. s. [Gr. γνῶμη.]

1. A brief reflection, worthy to be remembered.

Gnome [is] a saying pertaining to the manners and common practices of men, which declareth, by an apt brevity, what in this our life ought to be done or not done. Peacham, Garden of Eloquence, (1577.) sign. V. iii.

2. One of those invisible people, who are fabled to inhabit the inner parts of the earth, and to fill it to the centre. [Fr. gnome. Vigenere calls them also gnomons; and some derive the word from the Gr. γνῶμων, one that takes cognizance of a thing.]

The graver prude sinks downward to a gnome,
In search of mischief still on earth to roam. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

The laughers gave out, that the gnomes and sylphs, disguised like ruffians had shot him, as a punishment for revealing the secrets of the cabala; a crime not to be pardoned by these jealous spirits!

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

GNO'MICAL.* adj. [Fr. gnomique, from γνώμη, a sentence.] Sententious; containing maxims or reflections.

Adding this excellent, gnomical, and canon-like conclusion.
Conference at Hampton Court, (1603,) p. 44.

GNOMOLOGICAL.* } adj. [from gnomology.] Per-GNOMOLOGICK. } taining to gnomology. Ash.

GNOMOLOGY.* n. s. [γνώμη and λογία.] A collection of maxims and reflections.

Which art of powerful reclaiming wisest men have also taught in their ethical precepts and gnomologies.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

GNO'MON. n. s. [γνώμων.] The hand or pin of a dial.

The gnomon of every dial is supposed to represent the axis of the world, and therefore the two ends or extremities thereof must directly answer to the north and south pole.

Harris.

There were from great antiquity sun-dials, by the shadow of a style or gnomon, denoting the hours of the day.

Brown.

GNO'MONICK.* } adj. [from gnomon.] Pertaining to GNO'MONICAL. } the art of dialling.

The gnomonick projection is also called the horologiographick projection, because it is the foundation of dialling.

Chambers.

GNO'MONICKS. n. s. [γνωμονικῆ.] A science which makes a part of the mathematicks: it teaches to find the just proportion of shadows for the construction of all kinds of sun and moon dials, and for knowing what o'clock it is by means thereof; as also of a gnomon or stile, that throws off the shadow for this purpose.

Trevoux.

GNO'STICISM.* n. s. [from Gnostick.] The heresy of the Gnosticks.

Though it be indeed but a spice of the old abhorred Gnosticism.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

GNO'STICK.* n. s. [old French, gnostique, Greek γνῶσις, from γινώσκω, to know.] One of the earliest hereticks.

I think that no man that reads it [the first Epistle of St. John] with attention, can doubt but that it is particularly designed against the impious sect of the Gnosticks; who, as the fathers tell us, sprang from Simon Magus, and pretended to extraordinary knowledge and illumination; from whence they had the name of Gnosticks; but notwithstanding this glittering pretence, they did allow themselves in all manner of impious and vicious practices; "turning the grace of God into lasciviousness," as St. Jude speaks of them.

Tillotson, Serm. vol. i. S. 15.

GNO'STICK.* adj. Relating to the heresy of the Gnosticks.

The Nicolaitans, of whom mention is made in the Apocalypse of St. John, seem to have been of the Gnostick sect.

Perry, Key to the N. Test.

TO GO. v. n. pret. I went; I have gone. [Jan, Saxon. This was probably changed to gonc, or gang, then contracted to ge. Went is the preterite of the old verb wend. Dr. Johnson. — Go, goen, and gon are the ancient past participles of this verb. The Icelandick, Su. Gothick, and Dan. gaa, to go, must be likewise observed in the etymology. Some refer to the Greek verb also, ἔλω, to go.]

1. To walk; to move step by step.

You know that love

Will creep in service where it cannot go.

Shakespeare.

After some months those muscles become callous; and, having yielded to the extension, the patient makes shift to go upon it, though lamely.

Wicman, Surgery.

2. To move; not stand still.

Rise, let us be going.

St. Mark, xxv. 46.

3. To walk solemnly.

If there be cause for the church to go forth in solemn procession, his whole family have such business come upon them that no one can be spared.

Hooker.

4. To walk leisurely, not run.

And must I go to him?

— Thou must run to him; for thou hast staid so long, that going will scarce serve the turn.

Shakespeare.

5. To march or walk a-foot.

I will only go through on my feet.

Nam. xx. 19.

6. To travel; to journey.

From them I go

This uncouth errand sole.

Milton, P. I.

7. To proceed; to make a progress.

Thus others we with defamation wound,
While they stab us; and so the jest goes round.

Dryden.

8. To remove from place to place.

I am in blood

Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

9. To depart from a place; to move from a place; the opposite of to come.

I hope it be not gone, to tell my lord

That I kiss aught but him.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

At once, good-night:

Stand not upon the order of your going,

But go at once.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

And when she had so said, she went her way.

St. John, xi. 28.

I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice, only you shall not go very far away.

Ex. viii. 28.

Colchester oysters are put into pits, where the sea goeth and cometh.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A young tall squire

Did from the camp at first before him go.

Cowley.

Then I concur to let him go for Greece,

And wish our Egypt fairly rid of him.

Dryden.

Go first the master of thy herds to find,

True to his charge, a loyal swain and kind.

Pope, Odyssey.

10. To move or pass in any manner, or to any end.

Though the vicar be bad, or the parson be evil,

Go not for thy tything thyself to the devil.

Tusser.

She may go to bed when she list; all is as she will.

Shakespeare.

You did wish that I would make her turn;

Sir, she can turn and turn, and yet go on.

Shakespeare, Othello.

I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say your lordship was sick: I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The mourners go about the streets.

Ecc. xii. 5.

The sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them.

Mac. iii. 6.

Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp.

Ex. xxxii. 27.

The sun, which once did shine alone,

Hung down his head, and wish'd for night,

When he beheld twelve suns for one

Going about the world, and giving light.

Herbert.

This seen, the rest at awful distance stood,

As if they had been there as servants set,

To stay, or to go on, as he thought good,

And not pursue, but wait on his retreat.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

Turn not children going, till you have given them all the satisfaction they are capable of.

Locke.

History only acquaints us that his fleet went up the Elbe, he having carried his arms as far as that river.

Arbuthnot.

The last advice I give you relates to your behaviour when you are going to be hanged, which, either for robbing your master, for housebreaking, or going upon the highway, may very probably be your lot.

Swift, Direct. to the Postman.

Those who come for gold will go off with pewter and brass, rather than return empty.

Swift.

11. To pass in company with others.

Thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry. Jer. xxxi. 4.

That seek'st my friendship, and the gods thy foes. Chapman.
He goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men. Job, xxiv. 8.

Whatever remains in story of Atlas, or his kingdom of old, is so obscured with age or fables, that it may go along with those of the Atlantick islands. Temple.

12. To proceed in any course of life good or bad.

And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols, they shall even bear their iniquity. Ezek. xlv. 10.

13. To proceed in mental operations.

If I had unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, truly I should have kept it by me till I had once again gone over it. Digby on the Soul, Dedic.

Thus I have gone through the speculative consideration of the Divine Providence. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

I hope, by going over all these particulars, you may receive some tolerable satisfaction about this great subject. South.

If we go over the laws of Christianity; we shall find that, excepting a few particulars, they enjoin the same things, only they have made our duty more clear and certain. Tillotson.

In their primary qualities we can go but a very little way. Locke.

I go over some parts of this argument again, and enlarge a little more upon them. Locke.

They are not able all their life-time to reckon, or regularly go over any moderate series of numbers. Locke.

14. To take any road.

I will go along by the highway; I will neither turn to the right hand, nor to the left. Deut. ii. 27.

Who shall bemoan thee? Or who shall go aside to ask how thou dost? Jer. xv. 5.

His horses go about

Almost a mile. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I have endeavoured to escape into the ease and freedom of a private scene, where a man may go his own way and his own pace. Temple.

15. To march in a hostile or warlike manner.

You were advis'd his flesh was capable
Of wounds and scars, and that his forward spirit
Would lift where most trade of danger rang'd;
Yet did you say go forth. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

We be not able to go up against the people for they are stronger than we. Numb. xiii. 31.

Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light. 1 Sam. xiv. 36.

Thou art able to go against this Philistine to fight with him. 1 Sam. xvii. 33.

The remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles as a lion among the beasts of the forest; who, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. Mic. v. 8.

16. To change state or opinion for better or worse.

We will not hearken to the king's words to go from our religion. 1 Mac. ii. 22.

The regard of the publick state, in so great a danger, made all those goodly things, which went so to wreck, to be lightly accounted of in comparison of their lives and liberty. Knollys.

They look upon men and matters with an evil eye; and are best pleased when things go backward, which is the worst property of a servant of a prince or state. Bacon.

All goes to ruin, they themselves contrive
To rob the honey, and subvert the hive. Dryden, Virg.

Landed men, by their providence and good husbandry, accommodating their expences to their income, keep themselves from going backwards in the world. Locke.

Cato, we all go into your opinion. Addison.

17. To apply one's self.

Seeing himself controuled by so many, like a resolute orator, he went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

Because this atheist goes mechanically to work, he will not offer to affirm that all the parts of the embryo could, according to his explication, be formed at a time. Bentley.

18. To have recourse to.

Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? 1 Cor.

19. To be about to do.

So extraordinary an example, in so degenerate an age, deserves for the rarity, and, I was going to say, for the incredibility of it, the attestation of all that knew him, and considered his worth. Locke.

20. To shift; to pass life not quite well.

Every goldsmith, eager to engross to himself as much as he could, was content to pay high for it, rather than go without. Locke.

Clothes they must have; but if they speak for this stuff, or that colour, they should be sure to go without it. Locke.

21. To decline; to tend towards death or ruin.

This sense is only in the participles going and gone.

He is far gone, and, truly, in my youth,

I suffer'd much extremity for love;

Very near this.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

22. To be in party or design.

They with the vanquish'd prince and party go,

And leave their temples empty to the foe. Dryden.

It has the greatest town in the island that goes under the name of Ano-Caprea, and is in several places covered with a very fruitful soil. Addison on Italy.

27. To pass; to be received.

Because a fellow of my acquaintance set forth her praises in verse, I will only repeat them, and spare my own tongue, since she goes for a woman. Sidney.

And the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul. 1 Sam. xvii. 12.

A kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprize in his air and motion: it stamps value upon his face, and tells the people he is to go for so much. Collier.

Clipping should be finally stopped, and the money which remains should go according to its true value. Locke.

28. To move by mechanism.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him. Bacon.

Clocks will go as they are set; but man,

Irregular man's never constant, never certain. Otway.

'Tis with our judgements as our watches, none

Go just alike, yet each believes his own. Pope.

29. To be in motion from whatever cause.

The weird sisters, hand in hand,

Posters of the sea and land,

Thus do go about, about. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Cleft and washed money goes about, when the entire and weighty lies hoarded up. Wallcr.

30. To move in any direction.

Doctor, he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

Shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees? 2 Kings, xx. 9.

31. To flow; to pass; to have a course.

The god I am, whose yellow water flows

Around these fields, and fattens as it goes,

Tyler my name.

Dryden, En.

32. To have any tendency.

Athenians, know

Against right reason all your counsels go;

This is not fair, nor profitable that,
Nor t'other question proper for debate. Dryden, Pers.

33. To be in a state of compact or partnership.

As a lion was bestriding an ox that he had newly plucked down, a robber passing by cried out to him, half shares: you should go your snip, says the lion, if you were not so forward to be your own carver. L'Estrange.

There was a hunting match agreed upon betwixt a lion, an ass, and a fox, and they were to go equal shares in the booty. L'Estrange.

34. To be regulated by any method; to proceed upon principles.

Where the multitude beareth away, laws that shall tend to the preservation of that state must make common smaller offices to go by lot, for fear of strife and divisions likely to arise. Hooker.

We are to go by another measure. Spratt.

The principles I there went on, I see no reason to alter. Locke.

The reasons that they went upon were very specious and probable. Bentley.

35. To be pregnant.

Great bellied women,
That had not half a week to go. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The fruit she goes with,
I pray that it good time and life may find. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Of living creatures some are of longer time in the womb, and some shorter: women go commonly nine months, the cow and the ewe about six months. Bacon.

Some do go with their young the sixth part of a year, or two over or under, that is, about six or nine weeks: and the whelps of these see not till twelve days. Brown.

And now with second hopes she goes,
And calls Lucina to her throes. Milton, Ep. M. of W.

36. To pass; not to remain.

She began to afflict him, and his strength went from him. Judges, xvi. 19.

When our merchants have brought them, if our commodities will not be enough, our money must go to pay for them. Locke.

37. To pass, or be loosed; not to be retained.

Then he lets me go,
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Let go the hand of that arch heretick. Shakspeare, K. John.

38. To be expended.

Scholars are close and frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use. Fellon on the Classics.

39. To be in order of time or place.

We must enquire farther what is the connexion of that sentence with those that go before it, and those which follow it. Watts, Logic.

40. To reach or be extended to any degree.

Can another man perceive that I am conscious of any thing, when I perceive it not myself? No man's knowledge here can go beyond his experience. Locke.

41. To extend to consequences.

It is not one master that either directs or takes notice of these: it goes a great way barely to permit them. L'Estrange.

42. To reach by effects.

Considering the cheapness, so much money might go farther than a sum ten times greater could do now. Wilkins.

43. To extend in meaning.

His amorous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow. Dryden, Ovid, Pref.

44. To spread; to be dispersed; to reach.

Whose flesh, torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
In morsels cut, to make it further go. Tate, Juv.

45. To have influence; to be of weight; to be of value.

I had another reason to decline it, that ever uses to go far with me upon all new inventions or experiments; which is, that the best trial of them is by time, and observing whether they live or no. Temple.

'Tis a rule that goes a great way in the government of a sober man's life, not to put any thing to hazard that may be secured by industry, consideration, or circumspection. L'Estrange.

Whatever appears against their prevailing vice goes for nothing, being either not applied, or passing for libel and slander. Swift.

46. To be rated one with another; to be considered with regard to greater or less worth.

I think, as the world goes, he was a good sort of man enough. Arbutnot.

47. To contribute; to conduce; to concur; to be an ingredient.

The medicines which go to the ointments are so strong, that, if they were used inwards, they would kill those that use them. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

More parts of the greater wheels go to the making one part of their lines. Glanville, Scopsis.

There goes a great many qualifications to the completing this relation: there is no small share of honour and conscience and sufficiency required. Collier of Friendship.

I give the sex their revenge, by laying together the many vicious characters that prevail in the male world, and shewing the different ingredients that go to the making up of such different humours and constitutions. Addison.

Something better and greater than high birth and quality must go toward acquiring those demonstrations of publick esteem and love. Swift to Pope.

48. To fall out, or terminate; to succeed.

Your strong possession much more than your right,
Or else it must go wrong with you and me. Shakspeare, K. John.

Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault
I' th' boldness of your speech. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

I will send to thy father, and they shall declare unto him how things go with thee. Tob. x. 8.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory shall go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the gross, it would go on the other side. Bacon.

It has been the constant observation of all, that if a minister had a cause depending in the court, it was ten to one but it went against him. South.

At the time of the prince's landing, the father, easily foreseeing how things would go, went over, like many others, to the prince. Swift.

Whether the cause goes for me or against me, you must pay me the reward. Watts, Logic.

It shall go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle. Job, xx.
He called his name Beriah, because it went evil with his house. 1 Chron. vii. 23.

50. To proceed in train or consequence.

How goes the night, boy?
— The moon is down: I have not heard the clock;
And she goes down at twelve. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I had hope,
When violence was ceas'd, and war on earth,
All would have then gone well. Milton, P. L.

Duration in itself is to be considered as going on in one constant, equal, uniform course. Locke.

51. To Go about. To attempt; to endeavour; to set one's self to any business.

O dear father,
It is thy business that I go about. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I lost him; but so found, as well I saw
He could not lose himself, but went about
His father's business. Milton, P. R.

Which answer exceedingly unkind the vulgar minds to them, who concurred only with them as they saw them like to prevail in what they went about. Clarendon.

Some men, from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives, and root out their old vicious habits, never so much as attempt, endeavour, or go about it. South.

Either my book is plainly enough written to be rightly understood by those who peruse it with attention and indifference, or else I have writ mine so obscurely that it is in vain to go about to mend it. Locke.

They never go about, as in former times, to hide or palliate their vices; but expose them freely to view. Swift.

52. To Go aside. To err; to deviate from the right.

If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him. Numb. v. 12.

53. To Go between. To interpose; to moderate between two.

I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her; for, indeed, he was mad for her. Shakespeare.

54. To Go by. To pass away unnoticed.

Do not you come my tardiness to chide,
That laps'd in time and passion, lets go by
Th' important acting of your dread command?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

So much the more our carver's excellent,
Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her
As she liv'd now. Shakespeare, Wind. Tale.

What's that to us? The time goes by; away. Shakespeare.

55. To Go by. To find or get in the conclusion.

In argument with men a woman ever
Goes by the worse, whatever be her cause. Milton, S. A.
He's sure to go by the worst that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him. L' Estrange.

56. To Go by. To observe as a rule.

'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and form of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by. Sharp, Surgery.

57. To Go down. To be swallowed; to be received, not rejected.

Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest. L' Estrange.

Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden.

If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.

Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the coffeehouse, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift.

58. To Go in and out. To do the business of life.

The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Ps.

59. To Go in and out. To be at liberty.

He shall go in and out, and find pasture. St. John, x. 9.

60. To Go off. To die; to go out of life; to decease.

I would the friends we miss were safe arriv'd:
Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Tatler.

61. To Go off. To depart from a post.

The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

62. To Go off. To fire.

As a goose

In death contracts her talons close,
So did the knight, and with one claw
The trickier of his pistol draw:
The gun went off.

Hudibras, i. iii.

63. To Go on. To make attack.

Bold Cethegus,

Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison,
And prais'd so to daring, as he would Go on upon the gods. B. Jonson, Catiline.

64. To Go on. To proceed.

He found it a great war to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story. Sidney.

He that desires only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleased with it, whoever is the instrument.

Bp. Taylor.

I have escaped many threats of ill fits by these motions: if they go on, the only poltice I have dealt with is wool from the belly of a fat sheep. Temple.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine for ever with new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity, is agreeable. Addison.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious course you have undertaken. Addison.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of the disease; but when the expectation goes on successfully, not so proper, because it sometimes suppresseth it. Arbuthnot on Diet.

I have already handled some abuses during the late management, and in convenient time shall go on with the rest. Swift.

When we had found that design impracticable, we should not have gone on in so expensive a management of it. Swift.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extraordinary expetives. Swift.

I wish you health to go on with that noble work.

Bp. Berkeley.

65. To Go over. To revolt; to betake himself to another party.

In the change of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over. Addison on Italy.

Power, which, according to the old maxim, was used to follow, is now gone over to money. Swift.

66. To Go out. To go upon any expedition.

You need not have pricked me: there are other men fitter to go out than I. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

67. To Go out. To be extinguished.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out,
With titles blown from adulation? Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Spirit of wine burned till it go out of itself, will burn no more. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chymist's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails. Temple.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about;
And all her early fires again go out. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered. Collier of Friendship.

My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave,
And life itself goes out at thy displeasure. Addison, Cato.

And at her felt approach and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope, Dunciad.

68. To Go out. To proceed formally; still an academical phrase; as, to go out grand compounder.

Now heaven be praised, Silvio;

Thy all-destroying arrows and thy bow
Thou hast plied so well about these woods, that now
Thou art gone out thy arts-master.

Fanshawe, Past. Fido, p. 146.

69. To Go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it. Sidney.

If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not lost all your time there. Spenser.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.

He much feared the earl of Antrim had not stoutness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking. Clarendon.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it. South, Sermon.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money, in order to go through their part of the expence. Addison on the War.

70. To Go through. To suffer; to undergo.

I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldst go through this operation. Arbuthnot.

71. To Go upon. To take as a principal.

This supposition I have gone upon through those papers. Addison.

72. The senses of this word are very indistinct: its general notion is motion or progression. It commonly expresses passage from a place, in opposition to come. This is often observable even in figurative expressions. We say, the words that go before and that come after: to-day goes away and to-morrow comes.

Go to.† interj. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the three poetical examples. It is sometimes also a phrase of exhortation or encouragement, as in the example from Genesis; and of preparation required, as in that from the book of Kings.

They said to one another, Go to, let us make brick, &c. And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and tower, whose top may reach unto heaven. Gen. xi. 3, 4.

One went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel. And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. 2 Kings, v. 4, 5.

Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain; whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. St. James, iv. 13, 14.

Go to then, O thou far renowned son Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might In medicine. Spenser.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow; Let me be clear of thee. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

My favour is not bought with words like these: Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale. Rowe.

GO-BY. n. s. Delusion; artifice; circumvention; over-reach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go-by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect. Collier on Pride.

GO-CART. n. s. [go and cart.] A machine in which children are inclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are tried in Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding, When members knit, and legs grow stronger, Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

GOAD.† n. s. [Sax. gode, gade, gab; Icel. gadda, to prick.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

How can he get wisdom that holdeth the plough, and that glorieth in the goad, that driveth oxen, and is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bullocks? Eccles. xxxviii. 25. Oft in his harden'd hand a goad he bears. Pope.

To GOAD.† v. a. [Icel. gadda.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.

2. To incite; to stimulate; to instigate; to drive forward.

Most dangerous

Is that temptation, that doth goad us on To sin in loving virtue. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

Goaded with most sharp occasions, Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The use of your own virtues. Shakespeare, All's well.

Of all that breathes the various progeny, Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryden.

GOAL. n. s. [gaole, Fr. a long pole set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race; the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,

Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal With rapid wheels. Milton, P. L.

And the slope sun his upward beam

Shoots against the dusky pole,

Pacing toward the other goal. Milton, Comus.

2. The starting post.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,

The youthful charioteers with heaving heart

Rush to the race? Dryden, Virg.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goal;

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,

Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;

Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;

'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for gaol, or jail.

To GOAM.* See To GAUM.

GOAR.† n. s. [goror, Welsh. Dr. Johnson. — Geir, Icel. a shred. "Goar of a cloth, lacinia." Prompt. Parv.] Any edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it, according to Skinner; but rather a slip of cloth or linen, inserted in order to widen a garment in any particular place. A goar-coat was, in the time of queen Elizabeth, a gown or petticoat so cut, as to be very broad at the bottom, and narrow at the upper end; as may be observed in the pictures of that period. See Suppl. to Grose's Gloss.

A scint she wered, barred all of silk,

A harme-cloth eke as white as morwe milk

Upon her lendes, ful of many a gore. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

GO'ARISH.* adj. [from goar.] Patched; mean; doggerel.

May they know no language but that gibberish they prattle to their parcels, unless it be the goarish Latin they write in their bonds; and may they write that false, and lose their debts. Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

GOAT.† n. s. [gat, Sax. and Scottish; geit, Icel. gaitin, Goth. See the 5th sense of GATE.] A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goat, and slips of yew.

We Cyclops care not for your goat-fed Jove, Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Nor other blest ones; we are better farre. Chapman.

You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their paper mills upon goats, eagles, or dolphins. Peucham.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove,

The swan whose borrow'd shape conceal'd his love,

Are grac'd with light; the nursing goat's repaid

With heaven, and duty rais'd the pious maid. Creech.

GOATBEARD. n. s. [goat and beard; barba capri.] A plant.

GOAT'CHAFER. n. s. A insect; a kind of beetle.

Bailey.

GOATFISH.* n. s. [goat and fish.] The name of a fish, caught in the Mediterranean; called also by some caper.

G O B

GOATHERD. n. s. [gao and hynb, Saxon, a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not thilk same goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whose straying herd themself doth shrowd
Among the bushes rank?

Spenser, Shep. Cal.
They first gave the goatherd good contentment, and the marquis and his servant chased the kid about the stack.

Watton.

GOAT'ISH. adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any quality: as, rankness; lust.

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.
The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal.

More against Atheism.

GOATMARJORAM. n. s. The same with GOATS-BEARD.

GOATSMILK. n. s. [goat and milk.] This is more properly two words.

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goatmilk may be necessary.

Wiseman, Surgery.

GOATMILKER. n. s. [goat and milker.] A kind of owl so called from sucking goats.

Bailey.

GOAT'S RUE. n. s. [galega.] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorifick: the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem.

Hill.

GOATSKIN. n. s. [goat and skin.]

Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hands divine;
With water one, and one with sable wine.

Pope, Odyssey.

GOAT'SUCKER.* n. s. [goat and sucker.] A name by which the bird caprimulgus is called in some parts of England.

GOAT'S-THORN. n. s. [goat and thorn.] An herb.

GOB.† n. s. [gob, old Fr.]

1. A small quantity. A low word.

Do'st think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money?

L'Estrange.

2. A mouthful, in some parts of England; whence a gob-string also for a bridle, and gob-stick for a spoon.
[Irish, gob. See GAB.]

GOBBET.† n. s. [from gob, the mouth. See GAB.
Old Fr. gob, a gulp; gobber, to swallow.] A mouthful;
as much as can be swallowed at once; originally a morsel, a small quantity of any thing.

A litil sour-dow apeireth all the gobet.

Wicliffe, Galat. v. 9.

He saide, he hadde a gobet of the sayl

That seinte Peter hadde.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

Therewith she spew'd out of her filthy maw

A flood of poison, horrible and black,

Full of great lumps of flesh and goblets raw.

Spenser, F. Q.

By devilish policy art thou grown great,

And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd

With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The cooks, slicing it into little goblets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace.

Sandys, Travels.

The giant gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,

Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd

With purple wine and cruddl'd gore confus'd.

Addison.

To GOBBET. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and gobbets up both together.

L'Estrange.

G O B

GOBBETLY.* adv. [from gobbet.] In pieces. Obsolete. Huloet.

To GOBBLE.† v. a. [from gob; whence gobber, to swallow, old Fr. See GAB and GOB.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them.

L'Estrange.

The time too precious now to waste,

And supper gobbled up in haste,

Again afresh to cards they run.

Swift.

To GOBBLE.* v. n. To make a noise in the throat, as the turkey does. Dr. Johnson confounds this word with the verb active.

Of last year's corn in barn great store;

Fat turkies gobbling at the door.

Prior.

As a male turkey straggling on the green—

Urg'd by enkindling wrath he gobbling goes.

Crabbe.

GOBBLEGUT.* n. s. [gobble and gut.] A greedy feeder. A low expression.

Sherwood.

GOBBLER. n. s. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

GO'BETWEEN.† n. s. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties.
Commonly in an ill sense.

Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven.

Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

They only are the internuncios, or the gobetweens, of this trim devised mummery.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

The broker has his countenance ready to laugh with the merchant, though the abuse is to fall on himself, because he knows that, as a gobetweeen, he shall find his account in being in the good graces of a man of wealth.

Tatler, No. 225.

GO'BLET.† n. s. [gobelet, French; from the Gr.
κύπελλον, a sort of cup; Lat. cupellum; hence cupe-let, as it were; and so gobelet, goblet.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

Like a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor.

Cantic. vii. 2.

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;

But free from surfeits our repose is found.

Denham.

Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught;

Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought.

Dryden.

GO'BLIN.† n. s. [French, gobelin, which Spenser has once retained; writing it in three syllables.

This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elfe and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elfe is Welsh, and much older than those factions.

Eliff wilhon

are phantoms of the night; and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named

Goboldi, from which gobelin might be derived.

Dr. Johnson. — The word is probably from the Gr. κόβαλος, a kind of demon, according to the scholiast on the Plutus of Aristophanes; whence also the low Latin gobelinus.

“*Dæmon enim, quem de
Dianæ phano expulit, adhuc in eadem urbe degit, et in variis frequenter formis apparens neminem lædit. Hunc vulgus gobelinum appellat.*”

Orderic. Vitalis, lib. 5. p. 556. Du Cange represents the goblin as delighting more in mockery than mischief.

V. GOBELINUS.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

G O D

Angels and ministers of grace defend us !
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell ?
Shakspeare.

To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd,
Art thou that traitor angel ? Milton, P. L.
Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.

2. A fairy : an elf.

His son was Elfinel, who overcame
The wicked gobbelines in bloody field ;
But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Spenser, F. Q.
Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions ; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Mean time the village rouses up the fire,
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn goes the goblin story round. Thomson.

GOD. n. s. [god, Saxon, which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teuto-nick dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. St. John, iv. 24.

God above
Deal between thee and me. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ ruleth in them all. Pearson.

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being ; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

2. A false god ; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only,
he shall be utterly destroyed. Exod. xxii. 20.

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracia's Winter coast,
Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryden.

3. Any person of thing deified or too much hon- noured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Phil. iii.
I am not Licio,

But one that scorns to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a collier. Shakspeare.

TO GOD v. a. [from the noun.] To deify ; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father ;
Nay, *god*d me, indeed. Shakspeare, Coriol.

GOD'S PENNY.* An old expression for an earnest-penny ; and used in the north of England.

Young Lo. Come, strike me luck with earnest, and draw the writings.
More. There's a God's penny for thee.

GODCHILD. n. s. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation ; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a Christian.

GODDAUGHTER. v. n. s. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

How doth my cousin, your badfellow ? and your fairest daughter, and mine, my god-daughter Ellen ?
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

GODDESS. n. s. [from god.] A female divinity.

Hear, nature, hear ; dear goddess, hear a father ! Shakspeare.

G O D

A woman I forswore ; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee :
My vow was earthy, thou a heav'nly love. Shakspeare.

I long have waited in the temple nigh,
Built to the gracious goddess Clemency ;
But rev'rence thou the pow'r. Dryden, Fab.

From his seat the goddess born arose,
And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden, Fab.

When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty. Addison.

Modesty with-held the goddess' train. Pope, Odyssey.

GODDESS-LIKE. v. adj. [goddess and like.] Resembling a goddess. Mr. Malone thinks this epithet not common, and Dr. Johnson has cited only an example from Pope. The following examples will prove the frequency and the propriety of its use.

Your high self,
The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing ; and me, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like prank'd up. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

More goddess-like than wife-like. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As goddess-like to her admired lays. Shakspeare, Pericles.

In comelie garments, like some virgin maid
Of Dian's troupe, she triplie was arraid ;
Save, goddess-like, her globe-like head around
With verdant wreath of sacred bay was crown'd.

With goddess-like demeanour forth she went. Milton, P. L.

She — Delia's self
In gait surpass'd and goddess-like deport. Milton, P. L.
Then female voices from the shore I heard ;
A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd. Pope, Odyssey.

GODFATHER. v. n. s. [god and father. Sax. gofreder.
See also GODMOTHER.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfather to his child. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow ; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.

GODHEAD. v. n. s. [from god.]

1. Godship ; deity ; divinity ; divine nature. It is used both of idols and of the true God.

The Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one ; the glory equal, the majesty coeternal.
Athanas. Creed.

Be content ;
Your low-iaid son our godhead will uplift.
Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

At the holy mount
Of heaven's high-seated top, the imperial throne
Of Godhead, fix'd for ever firm and sure,
The filial pow'r arriv'd. Milton, P. L.

So may thy godhead be confest,
So the returning year be blest. Prior.

2. A deity in person ; a god or goddess.

Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device. Acts, xvii. 29.

Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakspeare, Timon.

Adoring first the genius of the place,
The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown. Dryden, Zen.

GODLESS. v. adj. [Sax. gobleas.] Without sense of duty to God ; atheistical ; wicked ; irreligious ; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker.

My lords, he bad me say, that you may know
How much he scorns, and (as good princes ought)
Defies base, indirect, and godless treacheries.

Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

That godless crew
Rebellious.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment.

Milton, P. L.

Dryden.

GO'DLESSNESS.* n. s. [from godless.] The state of being wicked.

The sinner gives himself over to a wild and loose profaneness; to a lawless course of godlessness. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 87.

GO'DLIKE. adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild.
Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of saviour to mankind, and which way first Publish his godlike office now mature.

Milton, P. L.

Milton, P. R.

That prince shall be so wise and godlike, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Locke.

GO'DLILY.* adv. [from godly.] This is the true word, though the repetition of the syllable is certainly harsh. See the adverb GODLY.] Righteously; piously.

Enjoining them upon the severest penalties to live godlily, holily, and righteously in this present world.

Hen. Wharton, Sermon. (1697.) i. 114.

GO'DLING.† n. s. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

Thy puny godlings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with brass. Dryden, Juv.
He preserved a young plump godling called Bacchus, after the death of his mother Semele. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 241.

GO'DLINESS.† n. s. [from godly.]

1. Piety to God.

Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness.

2 Pet. i. 5, 6, 7.

2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hooker.

GO'DLY.† adj. [Sax. goðlic.]

1. Pious towards God.

Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.

2. Good; righteous; religious.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men. Pt. xii. 1.

The same church is really holy in this world, in relation to all godly persons contained in it, by a real infused sanctity. Pearson.

GO'DLY. adv. Piously; righteously. By analogy it should be godlily, but the repetition of the syllable is too harsh.

The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one which will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hooker.

GO'DLYHEAD.† n. s. [from godly.] Goodness; righteousness. An old word. Dr. Johnson says, citing an example from Spenser, in which, however, the true word is goodlyhead. See GOODLY-HEAD.

GO'DMOTHER.† n. s. [god and mother. Sax. goðmōðer.] A woman who has undertaken sponsorship in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

There shall be for every male child to be baptized two god-fathers and one godmother; and for every female, two godmothers, and one godfather. Rudrick, Comm. Prayer.

The duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the child [the princess Elizabeth] richly habited in a mantle; the marchioness of Dorset, the other godmother, and ladies.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VIII.

GO'DSHIP.† n. s. [from god.] The rank or character of a god; deity; divinity. Perhaps not used in a serious sense.

Discoursing largely on this theme,
O'er hills and dales their godships came.

Prior.

Venus —

Trudg'd it away to Jove's high court,
And there his godship did entreat

To look out for his best receipt.

Swift, ed. Barret, p. 95.

GO'DSB.* See GOSSIP.

GO'DSMITH.* n. s. [god and smith.] A maker of idols.

Gods they had tried of every shape and size,
That godsmiths could produce, or priests devise.

Dryden, Abs. and Achil.

GO'DSON.† n. s. [god and son. Sax. goðsunu.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.

What, did my father's godson seek your life?

He whom my father named? your Edgar?

Shakespeare.

GO'DWARD.† adv. To Godward is toward God. So we read, Har. Arethusa tenuis, for tactenus Arethusa.

And such trust have we through Christ to Godward. 2 Cor.

What the eye of a bat is to the sun, the same is all human understanding to Godwards. Howell, Lett. ii. 11.

GO'DWIT.† n. s. [god, good, and wit, an animal. Dr. Johnson. — From the Icel. god, good, and veide, prey taken in hunting, or vist, food. Serenius.] A bird of particular delicacy.

My foot-boy shall eat pheasants, calver'd salmon,

Knots, lampreys, godwits.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

Nor ortolans nor godwits crown'd his board.

Cowley.

GO'DYELD. } adv. [corrupted from God shield or GO'DYIELD. } protect.] A term of thanks. Now not used.

Herein I teach you,

How you should bid godyield us for your pains,

And thank us for your trouble.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

GOEL.† adj. [Sax. geolepe, yellow; Su. Goth. gul.]

This word must be pronounced gool; and is of the same family as gold. Goel of gole is used in Suffolk and Essex for yellow.] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,

Hop-roots so well chosen let skillful go set;

The goeler and younger, the better I love;

Well gutted and pared, the better they prove.

Tusser.

GO'EN.* part. preter. of go; formerly so written, and indeed rightly.

GO'ER.† n. s. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,

Myself by with a needle, that I might prick

The goer back.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Such a man

Might be a copy to these younger times;

Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them

But goers backward.

Shakespeare, All's well.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Watton.

3. One that transacts business between two parties. In an ill sense. See GOBETWEEN.

Let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all Pandars.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

4. A term often applied to a horse; as, he is a good goer, a safe goer.

Is the rough French horse brought to the door? They say he is a high goer. I shall soon try his mettle.

Beaum. and Fl. Cupid's Revenge.

5. The foot. Obsolete.

A double mantle, cast

Athwart his shoulders, his faise goers grac't
With fitted shoes.

Chapman.

GO'ERY.* n. s. [Fr. goetie; Gr. γοητεια, enchantment.] A kind of magick; an invocation of evil spirits.

Porphyry and some others did distinguish these two sorts, so as to condemn indeed the grosser, which they called magick or goety.

Hallywell, Melamp. (1681), p. 51.

GOFF.* n. s. [old French, goffe, rude, blockish, clownish.]

1. A foolish clown. North. Grose. Sometimes pronounced gaff.

2. A game. See GOLF.

GO'FFISH.* adj. [from goff.] Foolish; indiscreet.

Beware of goffishe peplis speche,
That dremen things, which that never were.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 585.

GOG.* n. s. [perhaps from the Goth. gagg, the way. See AGOG.] Haste; desire to go.

You have put me into such a gog of going, I would not stay for all the world.

Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

To GOGGLE.* v. n. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology; Junius derives it from the Lat. coeles, having one eye only; and Wicliffe uses gogil yghed for having one eye, St. Mark, ix. 47. Serenius offers the Icel. gagr, prominent, which is not improbable, the meaning of goggle being not to look askint, which is the definition given of the word by Dr. Johnson; but rather to have full eyes, a kind of prominent look. See both the substantive and adjective.] To strain the eyes; to roll the eyes.

A hugye gjaunt stiffe and starke,
All foule of limbe and lere,
Two goggling eyen like fire.

Sir Cuthbert, Percy's Rel. of Anc. Poetry.

Such sight have they that see with goggling eyes.

Sidney, Arcad. b. ii.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl.

Hudibras.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want.

Dryden.

GO'GGLE.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A stare; a bold or strained look.

Do ye stare goggles? I hope to make winter boots of thy hide yet.

Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

Others will have such a divided face between a devout goggle and an inviting glance, that the unnatural mixture will make the best look to be at that time ridiculous.

Lord Halifax.

2. In the plural only, both blinds for horses that are apt to take fright, and glasses worn by persons to defend the eyes from dust or the heat of the sun. Both these senses are modern, and rather vulgar.

GO'GGLE.* adj. Staring; having full eyes.

Frowning he enters

And loursing on me with the goggle eye. Mir. for Mag. p. 427.
Give him admonition to forsake his sawcy glowering grace, and his goggle eye.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

That rolls one goggle eye in its vast brow,

Like a grim Cyclop.

Fenham, Past. Fid. p. 113.

GO'GGLE-EYED.* adj. [from goggle and eye. See the etym. of To GOGGLE.] Having eyes ready to start, as it were, out of the head.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves.

Aecham, Schoolmaster.

Every lover admires his mistress, though she be very deformed, — bald, goggle-eyed, beak-eyed, or with staring eyes, heavy, dull, hollow-eyed, black or yellow about the eyes, or squint-eyed.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 544.

GO'GGLED.* adj. [from goggle.] Prominent; staring. Ugly-faced, with long black hair, goggled eyes, wide-mouthed.

Sir T. Herbert, Trac. p. 50.

GO'ING.* n. s. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their taylor's tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenches' suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going.

Grew, Cosmol. Sacr.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes

Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound.

Milton, P. L.

4. Proceeding; series of conduct. In colloquial language we say, goings-on.

His eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings.

Job, xxxiv. 21.

To GOKE.* To stupify. See To GOWK.

GO'LA.* n. s. The same with CYNAMATHUM.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble show.

Addison, Spect. No. 415.

GOLD.* n. s. [gold, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh.

It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacham on Drawing. Dr. Johnson. — Others, noticing the Icel. guld, gold, consider gul, yellow, as the origin. See GOEL. Serenius and Wachter deduce it from the Icel. gilde, value, price.]

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies; not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain.

Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil.

Locke.

The gold fraught vessel, which mad tempests beat,

He sees now vainly make to his retreat.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive

The sooner to effect what I intended.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me,

Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;

For I have bought it with an hundred blows.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The old man's god, his gold, has won upon her.

Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσός, appoditry; and "animam-que moresque aureos educit in astra." Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an inn of fame. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

4. A flower.

Jalousie,

That wored of yelwe golde a gerlond. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

The crimson darnell flower, the bluebottle, and gold,
Which, though esteem'd but weeds, yet for their dainty hews
And for their scent not ill, they for this purpose use.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. s. [myagrum.] A plant.

GOLDBEATEN.* adj. [gold and beat.] Gilded; covered with gold.

In many gay garments that wesen goldbeaten.

Pierce, Ploughman's Crede.

GOLDBEATER. n. s. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle.

GOLDBEATER'S Skin. n. s. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a parrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GOLDBOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,

Thou other goldbound brow, is like the first.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

GOLDEN.† adj. [Sax. golden.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

The golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up. Dan. iii. 5.

O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain!

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold.

Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep.

Shakspeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born

Than wear a golden sorrow.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. I.

Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent.

Crashaw.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
How'er she shines all golden to you now.

Dryden.

And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud.

Rowe.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.

Golden running hair, a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought

Golden opinions from all sort of people,

VOL. II.

Which would be worn now in their newest gown,

Not cast aside so soon.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

That verse which they commonly call golden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.

Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us. Watts, Logic.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. Shakspeare.

GOLDEN Number.* n. s. The number, which shows the year of the moon's cycle.

This was invented, long before our Saviour's nativity, by Meton the Athenian, from whence it was styled the Metonic cycle; till afterwards it changed its name, being either from its great usefulness in ascertaining the moon's age, or else from its being written in letters of gold, called the golden number; though sometimes, for the first of these reasons, it is called the cycle of the moon. Wheatly on the Common Prayer.

GOLDEN Rod.* n. s. [virga aurea.] A plant.

GOLDEN Rule.* n. s. In arithmetick, the Rule of Three, or Rule of Proportion.

GOLDEN Saxifrage. n. s. [chrysoplenium.] An herb.

GOLDENLY. adv. [from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.

My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit. Shakspeare, As you like it.

GOLDFINCH. n. s. [goldfinc, Saxon.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire a proud taylor.

Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, Canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride

Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

GOLDFINDER. n. s. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his vitals through a quill;
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or't had been happy for goldfinders.

Swift.

GOLDHAMMER. n. s. A kind of bird.

Dict.

GOLDING. n. s. A sort of apple.

Dict.

GOLDHILTED.* adj. [Sax. goldhilted.] Having a golden hilt; a phrase applied to a sword.

GOLDBEAF.* n. s. [Saxon, goldbeaf.] Beaten gold.

GOLDNEY. n. s. A sort of fish, otherwise called, gillhead. Dict.

GOLDPLEASURE. n. s. An herb. Dict.

GOLDPROOF.* adj. [gold and proof.] Able to resist the temptation of gold.

This is most strange: Art thou goldproof?

There's for thee.

Beaum. and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

GOLDSIZE. n. s. A glue of a golden colour; glue used by gilders.

The gum of ivy is good to put into your goldsize, and other colours. Peacham on Drawing.

GOLDSMITH.† n. s. [Sax. goldsmið.]

1. One who manufactures gold.

Neither chain nor goldsmith came to me.

Shakspeare.

2. A banker; one who keeps money for others in his hands.

They [bankers] were a tribe that had risen and grown up in Cromwell's time, and never were heard of before the late troubles; till when the whole trade of money had passed through the hands of the scriveners: they were for the most part goldsmiths, men known to be so rich, and of so good reputation, that all the money of the kingdom would be trusted or deposited in their hands. Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 597.

The goldsmith or scrivener, who takes all your fortune to dispose of, when he has beforehand resolved to break the following day, does surely deserve the gallows. Swift.

G O M

Borrowed fool. of a goldsmith upon my ticket.

Spectator, vol. ix. (1715.) No. 14.

GO'LDYLOCKS.† n. s. [coma aurea, Latin.] A plant.
Fair ox-eye, goldyllocks, and columbine.

B. Jonson, Masques.

GOLF.* n. s. [Dutch and Sw. kolf, a club; kolf is also a Dutch game played in an enclosed area with clubs and balls.] A game played with a ball and a club or bat; formerly called bandy-ball. It consists in driving the ball from one hole to another; and he who drives his ball into the hole with the fewest strokes, is the winner. It is a common game in Scotland: See Dr. Jamieson's Etym. Scot. Dict. in V. GOLF. Strutt says, that it is also used in the north of England.

Golf was a fashionable game among the nobility at the commencement of the seventeenth century, and it was one of the exercises with which prince Henry, eldest son to James the first, occasionally amused himself.

Strutt, Sports and Pastimes of the People of Eng.

Golf and foot-ball appear to have been prohibited in Scotland by king James the second in 1457.

Brand, Popular Antiquities.

GOLL.† n. s. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from pal or pol, whence peulban, to handle or manage. Dr. Johnson. — May it not be a more easy corruption of the Greek γυαλον, (gualon,) the palm of the hand?] Hands; paws; claws. Used in contempt.

They set hands, and Mopsa put her golden golls among them; and blind fortune, that saw not the colour of them, gave her the pre eminence.

Sidney.

Make 'em hold up their spread golls. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Wish her

To wash her hands in bran or flour;
And do you, in like manner, scour
Your dirty golls.

Cotton, Virg. B. 4.

GOLO'RE.* n. s. [Irish, gleire, plenty, a great deal; Gael. leor; go leoir, enough; Shaw; gelore, Scottish; Jamieson in V. GELORE.] Abundance. Still used in many parts of England.

GOM.* n. s. [Goth. guma, Sax. guma; Germ. gomo, a man.] A man. Obsolete.

I Gloton, quod the gome, gylty me yelde,
That I have trespassed with tong. P. Ploughman's Vision.

This term remained on the English stage till the time of Charles the first. It occurs in The Widow, which was acted in that reign with much applause.

Rich. Say you, sir?

I'll try your ladyship, faith. — Lady, well met.

Fran. I do not think so, sir.

Rich. A scornful gom.

On which passage the commentator observes, (Old Pl. vol. xii. p. 245.) that Junius in his Etymologicon says, that gom or gone signifies a man. Richardo therefore means, that Francisco, in his assumed character of a woman, acts not with the softness and delicacy of a female, but with the scorn and haughtiness of a male. Whiter, Etymolog. Mag. p. 355.

GO'MAN.* n. s. [from gom.] A man, simply; not a goodman, an householder, a master of a family, as Verstegan, Bailey, and others have asserted. Obsolete.

From this name for man under the form of gr, gom, gone, &c. the etymologists have rightly derived gumman, which some have idly conceived to be quasi goodman. Whiter.

GOME.† n. s. The black grease of a cart-wheel. Dr. Johnson thus gives this word, without any etymology, from Bailey. It is probably a corruption of oom. See COOM.

GOMPHOSIS.† n. s. [Gr. γόμφωσις, from γόμφοις, a nail; old French, gomphose. Cotgrave.] A particular form of articulation.

G O N

Gomphosis is the connexion of a tooth to its socket. Wiseman.

GONDOLA.† n. s. [gondole, French; gondola, Ital. and low Lat. κοντελάς, Græcobarb., a kind of little vessel, "ex idiomate Italico, gondola." Meursius. Some derive it from the Gr. κόνδον, a sort of vase.] A boat much used in Venice; a small boat.

He saw did swim

Along the shore, as swift as glance of eye,

A little gondelay, bedecked trim

With boughs and arbours woven cunningly. Spenser, F. Q.

In a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica. Shakespeare.

As with gondolas and men, his

Good excellence the duke of Venice

Sails out, and gives the gulph a ring. Prior.

GONDOLI'ER.† n. s. [Fr. gondolier, Cotgrave; gondoliere, Ital.] A boatman; one that rows a gondola.

Your fair daughter,

Transported with no worse nor better guard,

But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,

To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor. Shakespeare, Othello.

GONE. part. preter. [from go. See To Go.]

1. Advanced; forward in progress.

I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, only by being put into broomlands. Mortimer.

The observer is much the brisker of the two, and, I think, farther gone of late in lyes and impudence than his Presbyterian brother. Swift.

2. Ruined; undone.

He must know 'tis none of your daughter, nor my sister we are gone else. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

3. Past.

I'll tell the story of my life,

And the particular accidents gone by,

Since I came to this isle. Shakespeare, Tempest.

4. Lost; departed.

When her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas. Acts, xvi. 19.

Speech is confined to the living, and imparted to only those that are in presence, and is transient and gone. Holder.

5. Dead; departed from life.

I mourn Atonis dead and gone. Oldham.

A dog, that has his nose held in the vapour, loses all signs of life; but carried into the air, or thrown into a lake, recovers, if not quite gone. Addison on Italy.

GONFALON.† } n. s. [gonfanon, French; gunfina, Icelandick, from gunn, a battle, and fani, a flag. Lye. Dr. Johnson. — Our old word is gonfanon, which Chaucer uses. Milton introduced gonfalon into our language immediately from the Italian gonfalone, which is a chief standard, the name of the pope's standard, and often occurs in Ariosto. The gonfanon is described by the French as a little square flag, or penon, at the end of a lance.] An ensign; a standard.

He that bare the ensigne

Of worship, and the gonfanon. Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1201.

Ten thousand thousand ensigns high advanc'd,

Standards and gonfalons, 'twixt van and rear,

Stream in the air. Milton, P. L.

GONFALONI'ER.* n. s. [old Fr. gonfalonier, and gonfanonnier; Ital. gonfalaniere.] A chief standard-bearer.

Had she not [Florence] her private councils debating, her great council resolving, and her magistrates executing? Was not the rotation too provided for by the annual election of her gonfalonier? Bp. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, (1659,) ch. 10.

GONG.* n. s.

1. A draught, or privy; a jakes. [Sax. ganz, zonz, a passage.] Obsolete.
Huloet.

A commune gong, whereas men purge their ordure.

Chaucer, Pars. Tale.

2. An instrument of a circular form, made of brass, which the Asiatics strike with a large wooden mallet; the sound of which is heard at a great distance. It has been introduced into this country in some of the entertainments of the stage and of country fairs.

GONIOMETER.* n. s. [Fr. goniomètre, from the Gr. γωνία, an angle, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring angles.

GONIOMETRICAL.* adj. See GONIOMETER. Goniometrical lines are lines used for measuring or determining the quantity of angles. Such are sines, tangents, secants, &c. Chambers.

GONORRHOEA. n. s. [γόνος and ῥέω.] A morbid running of venereal hurts.

Rarely mummy or stone mummy grows on the tops of high rocks: they powder and boil it in milk, and then give it to stop gonorrhoeas. Woodward on Fossils.

GOOD.† adj. comp. better, superl. best. [gōd, Saxon; good, Dutch; gods, goda, gotha, Gothick; ἀγαθός, Greek. The Saxon is also written good or goode.]

1. Having, either generally or for any particular end, such physical qualities as are expected or desired. Not bad: not ill.

God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good. Gen. i. 31.

A universe of death! which God by curse

Created evil; for evil only good.

Milton, P. L.

Resolv'd

From an ill cause to draw a good effect.

Dryden, Fab.

Notwithstanding this criticism the verses were good.

Spectator.

A man is no more to be praised upon this account, than because he has a regular pulse and a good digestion. Addison.

The very foundation of poetry is good sense, if we may allow Horace to be a judge of the art.

Addison, Tatler, No. 240.

Al! ne'er so dire a thirst of glory boast,

Nor in the critick let the man be lost!

Good nature and good sense must ever join;

To err is human, to forgive, divine.

Pope.

2. Proper; fit; convenient; right; not wrong.

Amongst a man's peers a man shall be sure of familiarity, and therefore it is good a little to keep state: amongst a man's inferiors one shall be sure of reverence, and therefore it is good a little to be familiar. Bacon.

If you think good, give Martius leave.

Bacon.

It was a good time to comply with the importunity of the gentlemen of Sussex. Clarendon.

3. Conducive to happiness.

It is not good that the man should be alone. Gen. ii. 18.

We may as well pretend to obtain the good which we want without God's assistance, as to know what is good for us without his direction. Bp Smalridge, Sermon.

4. Uncorrupted; undamaged.

He also bartered away plums, that would have rotted in a week, for nuts, that would last good for his eating a whole year. Locke.

5. Wholesome; salubrious.

A man first builds a country seat,
Then finds the walls not good to eat.

Prior.

6. Medicinal; salutary.

The water of Nilus is sweeter than other waters in taste, and it is excellent good for the stone and hypochondriack melancholy. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

7. Pleasant to the taste.

Kat thou honey, because it is good; and the honeycomb, which is sweet. Prov. xxiv. 13

Of herbs and plants some are good to eat raw; as lettuce, endive, and purslane. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

8. Complete; full.

The Protestant subjects of the abbey make up a good third of its people. Addison on Italy.

9. Useful; valuable.

All quality, that is good for any thing, is originally founded upon merit. Collier on Envy.

We discipline betimes those other creatures we would make useful and good for somewhat. Locke.

10. Sound; not false; not fallacious.

He is resolved now to shew how slight the propositions were which Luther let go for good. Atterbury.

11. Legal; valid; rightly claimed or held.

According to military custom the place was good, and the lieutenant of the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship in the same regiment. Wotton.

12. Confirmed; attested; valid.

Ha! am I sure she's wrong'd? Perhaps 'tis malice!

Slave, make it clear, make good your accusation. Smith.

13. With as preceding. It has a kind of negative or inverted sense; as good as, no better than.

Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude. Heb. xi.

14. With as preceding. No worse.

He sharply reproved them as men of no courage, which, being many times as good as in possession of the victory, had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knolles.

The master will be as good as his word, for his own business. L'Esrange.

15. Well qualified; not deficient.

If they had held their royalties by that title, either there must have been but one sovereign over them all, or else every father of a family had been as good as a prince, and had as good as a claim to royalty as these. Locke.

16. Skilful; ready; dexterous.

Flatter him it may, I confess; as those are generally good at flattering who are good for nothing else. South.

I make my way where e'er I see my foe;

But you, my lord, are good at a retreat.

Dryden.

17. Happy; prosperous.

[He] on the other side did so farre

From malicing or grudging his good hour,

That, all he could, he graced him with her.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 39.

Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. Ps. cxxxiii. 1.

Many good morrows to my noble lord!

— Good morrow, Catesby, you are early stirring. Shakspeare.

Good e'en, neighbours;

Good e'en to you all, good e'en to yop all. Shakspeare, Coriol.

At my window bid good morrow. Milton, L'Al.

Good morrow, Portius! let us once embrace.

Addison.

18. Honourable.

They cast to build

A city and tower, whose top may reach to heaven;

And get themselves a name; —

Regardless whether good or evil fame. Milton, P. L.

Silence, the knave's repute, the whore's good name,

The only honour of the wishing dame.

Pope.

19. Cheerful; gay. Joined with any words expressing temper of mind.

They may be of good comfort, and ever go cheerfully about their own affairs. 2 Mac. xi. 26.

There was but one who kept up his good humour to the Land's-end. Addison, Tatler, No. 192.

Quietness improves into cheerfulness, enough to make me just so good humoured as to wish that world well. Pope.

20. Considerable; not small though not very great.

A good while ago God made choice that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word. Acts, xv. 7.

The plant, having a great stalk and top, doth prey upon the grass a good way about, by drawing the juice of the earth from it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Mistle and pomegranate, if they be planted, though a good space one from the other, will meet. Peucham on Drawing.

The king had provided a good fleet, and a body of three thousand foot to be embarked. Clarendon.

We may suppose a great many degrees of littleness and lightness in these earthy particles, so as many of them might float in the air a good while, like exhalations before they fell down. Burnet, Theory.

They held a good share of civil and military employments during the whole time of the usurpation. Swift.

21. Elegant; decent; delicate; with breeding.

If the critick has published nothing but rules and observations in criticism, I then consider whether there be a propriety and elegance in his thoughts and words, clearness and delicacy in his remarks, wit and good breeding in his gallery. Addison, Guardian.

Mankind have been forced to invent a kind of artificial humanity, which is what we express by the word good breeding. Addison, Spect.

Those among them, who return into their several countries, are sure to be followed and imitated as the greatest patterns of wit and good breeding. Swift.

22. Real; serious; not feigned.

All man's works on me,

Good or not good, ingraft my merit, these Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay. Milton, P. L.

What reward

Awaits the good, the rest what punishment. Milton, P. L.

The only Son of light

In a dark age, against example good,
Against allurements. Milton, P. L.

Such follow him, as shall be registred

Part good, part bad, of bad the larger scroll. Milton, P. L.

Grant the bad what happiness they would,

One they must want, which is to pass for good. Pope.

Why drew Marseilles good bishop purer breath,

When Nature sicken'd, and each gale was death? Pope.

Such was Roscommon, not more learn'd than good,

With manners gen'rous to his noble blood. Pope.

No farther intercourse with heav'n had he,

But left good works to men of low degree. Harte.

25. Kind; soft; benevolent.

Matters being turn'd in her, that where at first liking her manners did breed good will, now good will became the chief cause of liking her manners. Sidney.

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men. St. Luke, ii. 14.

Without good nature man is but a better kind of vermin. Bacon.

Here we are lov'd, and there we love;

Good nature now and passion strive

Which of the two should be above,

And laws unto the other give. Suckling.

'Tis no wonder if that which affords so little glory to God, hath no more good will for men. Decay of Piety.

When you shall see him, sir, to die for pity,

'Twere such a thing, 'twould so deceive the world,

'Twould make the people think you were good natur'd. Denham.

To teach him betimes to love and be good natured to others, is to lay early the true foundation of an honest man. Locke.

Good sense and good nature are never separated, though the ignorant world has thought otherwise. Dryden.

Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original signification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of daily use. Dryden.

This doctrine of God's good will towards men, this command of men's proportionable good will to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very spirit and life of our Saviour's whole institution? Sprat.

It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind. Calamy, Serm.

A cheerful temper, joined with innocence, will make beauty attractive, knowledge delightful, and wit good natured.

Addison, Teller, No. 192.

How could you chide the young good natur'd prince,
And drive him from you with so stern an air. Addison, Cato.

26. Favourable; loving.

But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt. 1 Sam. xxv. 15.

Even in the soul of sound good fellowship.

Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Excellent sir, I know you use to sip
Much of the Muses' fair good fellowship. Jordan's Poems.

Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well. Clarendon.

Not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship. Locke.

It was well known, that Sir Roger had been a good fellow, in his youth. Arbuthnot.

28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of slight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill, Dr. Johnson says. Yet both the examples imply merely an husband. See GOODMAN.

My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison, Spect.

29. In a ludicrous sense.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to louse themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser on Ireland.

30. Hearty; earnest; not dubious.

He, that saw the time fit for the delivery he intended, called unto us to follow him, which we both, bound by oath and willing by good will, obeyed. Sidney.

The good will of the nation to the present war has been since but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it. Temple.

Good will, she said, my want of strength supplies;
And diligence shall give what age denies. Dryden, Fab.

31. In Good sooth. Really; seriously.

What, must I hold a candle to my shames?

They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light. Shakspeare.

32. In Good time. Not too fast.

In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute against a vacuum in the schools. Collier, on Human Reason.

33. In Good time. Opportunely.

Pr. Fye, what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not To tell us whether they will come or no.

Buck, And in good time here comes the sweating lord.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

34. In Good time. A colloquial expression for time enough; as, we are in good time for the occasion.

35. Goop [To make.] To keep; to maintain; not to give up; not to abandon.

There died upon the place all the chieftains, all making good the fight without any ground given. Bacon, Hen. VII.

He forced them to retire in spite of their dragoons, which were placed there to make good their retreat. Clarendon.

Since we claim a proper interest above others in the pre-eminent rights of the household of faith, then to make good that claim, we are obliged above others to conform to the proper manners and virtues that belong to this household. Sprat.

He without fear a dangerous war pursues;
As honour made him first the danger chuse,
So still he makes it good on virtue's score. Dryden.

36. Good [To make.] To confirm; to establish.

I farther will maintain
Upon his bad life to make all this good. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

To make good this explication of the article, it will be necessary to prove that the church, which our Saviour founded and the apostles gathered, was to receive a constant and perpetual accession. Pearson.

These propositions I shall endeavour to make good. Smalbridge.

37. Good. [To make.] To perform.

While she so far extends her grace,
She makes but good the promise of her face. Wallen.

38. Good. [To make.] To supply.

Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another. L'Estrange.

GOOD.† n. s.

1. That which physically contributes to happiness; benefit; advantage; the contrary to evil or misery.

I fear the emperor means no good to us. Tit. Andronicus.

Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me. Shakspeare, Mids. Night Dr.
He way'd indifferently 'twixt them, doing neither good nor harm. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Love with fear the only God,
Merciful over all his works, with good
Still overcoming evil. Milton, P. L.

God is also in sleep, and dreams' advice,
Which he hath sent propitious, some great good Presaging. Milton, P. L.

Nature in man's heart her laws doth pen,
Prescribing truth to wit, and good to will. Davies.

The lessening or escaping of evil is to be reckoned under the notion of good: the lessening or loss of good is to be reckoned under the notion of evil. Wilkins.

This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them the necessity of examining more than they do. Locke.

Good is what is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us: or else to procure or preserve us the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil. Locke.

Refuse to leave thy destin'd charge too soon,
And for the church's good defer thy own. Prior.

Works may have more wit than does them good,
As bodies perish through excess of blood. Pope.

A thirst after truth, and a desire of good, are principles which still act with a great and universal force. Rogers.

2. Prosperity; advancement.

If he had employ'd

Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature
Unto the good, not ruin, of the state. B. Jonson, Catiline.

3. Earnest; not jest.

The good woman never died after this, till she came to die for good and all. L'Estrange.

4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable; virtue; righteousness; piety; the contrary to wickedness.

Depart from evil, and do good. Psalms xxxiv. 14.

Not only carnal good from evil does not justify; but no good, no not a purposed good, can make evil good. Holyday.

O sons, like one of us is man become,
To know both good and evil, since his taste
Of that defended fruit, but let him boast
His knowledge of good lost, and evil got,
Happier had it suffic'd him to have known
• Good by itself, and evil not at all. Milton, P. L.

Empty of all good, wherewith consists Woman's domestick honour, and chief praise. Milton, P. L.

By good, I question not but good, morally so called, bonum honestum ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure the bonum utile, or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South.

Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight
For virtue, valour, and for noble blood,
Truth, honour, all that is compriz'd in good. Dryden.

5. Property. See GOODS. Not now in use.

Farewel my good, for it is all ago. Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.
Moreover, because I have set any affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house, even three thousand talents of gold. 1 Chron. xxix. 3.

6. That which is right and fit. See the second sense of the adjective.

In word and deede that shew'd great modestec,
And knew his good to all of each degree. Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 7.

7. Good placed after had, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See GOOD, adv.

The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves. South.

Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in a wilderness as in a society. L'Estrange.

GOOD.† adv.

1. Well; not ill; not amiss.

2. Reasonably; as, good cheap. See CHEAP.

Victuals shall be so good cheap upon earth, that they shall think themselves to be in good case. 2 Esdr. xvi. 21.

3. As Good. No worse.

Was I to have never parted from thy side,
As good have grown there still a life's rib. Milton, P. L.
Says the cuckow to the hawk, Had you not as good have been eating worms now as pigeons? L'Estrange.

GOOD, interj. Well! right! It is sometimes used ironically.

TO GOOD.* v. a. [Su. Goth. goeda.] To manure.

The husbandman looks not for a crop in the wild desert; but where he hath gooded, and plowed, and eared, and sown, why should he not look for an harvest? Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 121.

GOOD-BRE'EDING.* n. s. Elegance of manners derived from a good education. See the nineteenth sense of the adjective GOOD.

GOOD-BY.* adv. [a contraction of God, or good be with you.] A familiar way of bidding farewell. It should be written, properly, good-b'ye.

GOOD-COND'IONED. adj. Without ill qualities or symptoms. Used both of things and persons, but not elegantly.

No surgeon dilates an abscess of any kind by injections, when the pus is good-conditioned. Sharp, Surgery.

GOOD-DEN.* adv. A form of wishing, a compliment, which has been generally considered a corruption of good even; but Mr. Pegge says that it is a contraction of good-dayen, the Saxon plural of day. Good-den or good-ē'en, however, is, in the provincial Glossary of Yorkshire words, the wish of a good evening. The phrase good den is frequent in our old language.

GOOD-E'VEN.* See the seventeenth sense of the adjective GOOD, and GOOD-DEN.

GOOD-FELLOW.† n. s. A jolly companion. See the twenty-seventh sense of the adjective GOOD.

GOOD-FELLOWSHIP.† n. s. Merry or jolly society. See the twenty-seventh sense of the adjective GOOD.

To GOOD-FELLOW.* v. a. To make a jolly companion; to besot.

Let me rather be disliked for not being a beast, than be good-fellowed with a hug for being one: Some laugh at me for being sober; and I laugh at them for being drunk.

Feltham, Res. i. 84.

GOOD-HU'MOUR.† n. s. A cheerful and agreeable temper of mind. See the nineteenth sense of the adjective GOOD.

GOOD-HU'MOURED.† adj. Cheerful. See the nineteenth sense of GOOD.

Wakefield, Mem. p. 27.

GOOD-MA'NNERS.* n. s. [good and manners.] Habitual propriety of manners; polite and correct behaviour, derived from a good education.

Good-manners is such a part of good sense, that they cannot be divided; but that which a fool calleth good-breeding is the most unmannerly thing in the world.

Lord Halifax.

GOOD-MO'RROW.† See the seventeenth sense of the adjective GOOD.

GOOD-NATURE.† n. s. Kindness; habitual benevolence: the most pleasing quality that man or woman can possess. See the twenty-fifth sense of the adjective GOOD.

GOOD-NATURED.† adj. Habitually benevolent. See the twenty-fifth sense of GOOD.

GOOD-NATUREDLY.* adv. [from good-natured.] In a kind, benevolent manner.

She very good-naturedly answered, she had received that paltry fellow we just parted from, merely because he had a superior share of ease and freedom!

The Student, i. 114.

They good-naturedly invited me to their party.

Graves, Recoll. of Sheenstone, p. 16.

GOOD-NOW. interj.

1. In good time; a la bonne heure. A gentle exclamation of intreaty. It is now a low word.

Good-now, sit down, and tell me, he that knows,

Why this same watch?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. A soft exclamation of wonder.

Good-now, good-now, how your devotions jump with mine!

Dryden, Span. Prior.

GOOD-SENSE.† n. s. See the first definition of the adjective GOOD.

GOOD-SPEED.* n. s. [from good and speed. "And so good-speed me!" Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.] An old form of wishing success; success itself.

I know, downe I must;

And good-speed send me.

Middleton's Witch.

GOOD-WILL.† n. s.

1. Benevolence; kindness. See the twenty-fifth sense of the adjective GOOD.

2. Earnestness; heartiness. See the thirtieth sense of the adjective GOOD.

GOO'DINE.* adj. To go a gooding, is a custom observed in several parts of England on St. Thomas's day by women only, who ask alms, and in return for them wish all that is good, such as a happy new year, &c. to their benefactors, sometimes presenting them also with sprigs of ever-greens. In some parts of Surrey and Kent, the custom is thus kept up; and in other counties gooding is the word, among the poor, for collecting before Christmas what may enable them to keep the festival.

GOO'DLESS.* adj. [good and less.] Without goods or money.

• Goodles for to ben it is no game. Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.

GOO'DLIHOOD.† See GOODLIEAD.

GOO'DLINESS. n. s. [from goodly.] Beauty; grace; elegance.

She sung this song with a voice no less beautiful to his ears, than her goodliness was full of harmony to his eyes. Sidney.
The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye. Hooker.

GOO'DLY. adj. [from good.]

1. Beautiful; graceful; fine; splendid. Now little in use.

A prince of a goodly aspect, and the more goodly by a grave majesty, wherewith his mind did deck his outward graces.

Sidney.

A goodly city is this Antium.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Patience and sorrow strove

Which should express her goodliest: you have seen

Sunshine and rain at once. Her smiles and tears

Were like a wetter May.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Here from gracious England have I offer

Of goodly thousands.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Rebekah took goodly raiment of her eldest son Esau, and put them upon Jacob.

Gen. xxvii. 15.

There was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he.

1 Sam. ix. 2.

Both younger then they were; of stature more;

And all their formes, much goodlier then before.

Chapman.

He had not made them any recompence for their goodly houses and olive gardens, destroyed in the former wars.

Knolles.

The goodliest man of men since born

His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve.

Milton, P. L.

Of the fourth Edward was his noble song;

Fierce, goodly, valiant, beautiful, and young.

Waller.

Not long since walking in the field,

My nurse and I, we there beheld

A goodly fruit, which, tempting me,

I would have pluck'd.

*Waller.

How full of ornament is all I view

In all its parts! and seems as beautiful as new:

O goodly order'd work! O power divine!

Of thee I am, and what I am is thine!

Dryden

His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,

Excell'd the rest in shape and outward shew;

Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,

But of a heavy, dull, degen'rate mind.

Dryden, Fab.

2. Bulky; swelling; affectedly turgid.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,

Goodly and great he sails behind his link.

Dryden.

3. Happy; desirable; gay.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately inured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor.

Spenser.

We have many goodly days to see.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

GOO'DLY.* adv. Excellently. Obsolete.

There Alina, like a virgin queen most bright,

Doth flourish in all beauty excellent;

And to her guests doth bounteous banquet light,

Antempered goodly well for health and for delight.

Spenser, F. Q.

GOO'DLYHEAD.† n. s. [from goodly.] Grace; goodness. Obsolete.

For this, and many more such outrage,
Craving your goodlyhead to assuage
The ranckorous rigour of his might. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.
So be your goodlyhead do not disdain
The base kindred of so simple swaine.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

GOODMAN. † n. s. [good and man.]

1. A slight appellation of civility: generally ironical.
How now, what's the matter? part.
— With you, goodman boy, if you please: come, I'll flesh ye.
Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. A rustick term of compliment; gaffer.
Nay, dear you, goodman deliver. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
But see the sun-beams bright to labour warn,
And gild the thatch of goodman Hodge's barn. Gay, Pastorals.

Remembers he the trees has seen. Swift.

3. A familiar term for husband. See the twenty-eighth sense of the adjective GOOD.
Let us solace ourselves with loves: for the goodman is not at home. Prov. vii. 19.
The vow she made unto her goodman.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 612.

4. The master of a family. Hudocet.
The goodman of this house was Dolon Hight.
Spenser, F. Q. v. vi. 32.

If the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. St. Matt. xxiv. 43.
The goodman himself must draw the liquor.
Purchas, Pilgrim, (1617,) p. 222.

GOODNESS. † n. s. [Sax. gobner, gobner.] Desirable qualities either moral or physical; kindness; favour.

If for any thing he loved greatness, it was because therein he might exercise his goodness. Sidney.

There is in all things an appetite or desire, whereby they incline to something which they may be; all which perfections are contained under the general name of goodness. Hooker.

All goodness

Is poison to thy stomach.

— Yes, that goodness

Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,

Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion:

The goodness of your intercepted packets

You writ to the pope against the king; your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

There's no goodness in thy face. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

There is a general, or natural goodness in creatures, and a more special or moral goodness. Perkins.

The goodness of every thing is measured by its end and use, and that's the best thing which serves the best end and purpose. Tillotson.

All made very particular relations of the strength of the Scots army, the excellent discipline that was observed in it, and the goodness of the men. Clarendon.

No body can say that tobacco of the same goodness is risen in respect of itself: one pound of the same goodness will never exchange for a pound and a quarter of the same goodness. Locke.

GOODS. † n. s. [from good.]

1. Movable in a house.

That giv'st to such a guest

As my poore selfe, of all thy goods the best. Chapman.

2. Personal or movable estate; formerly used in the singular number. See the fifth sense of the substantive GOOD. Cattle are called goods in some parts. See CATTLE.

That a writ be su'd against you,

To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,

Castles, and whatsoever.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

This hinders nothing the proceedings of the civil courts, which respect the temporal punishment upon body and goods. Lettie.

3. Wares; freight; merchandise.

Her majesty, when the goods of our English merchants were attached by the duke of Alva, arrested likewise the goods of the Low Dutch here in England. Raleigh, Essays.

Saltee, that scorn'd all pow'r and laws of men,
Goods with their owners hurrying to their den. Waller.

GOODSHIP. † n. s. [from good.] Favour; kindness. Obsolete.

For the goodship of this dede

They granten him a lustie mede. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

GOODNY. † n. s. [corrupted from goodwife. This is obvious from a passage in B. Jonson's Magnetick Lady: "Her mother goodwy' Polish has confess'd it."] A low term of civility used to mean persons.

Soft, goody sheep, then said the fox, not so;

Unto the king so rash you may not go. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,

Which erst I saw when goody Dobson dy'd. Gay, Pastorals.

Plain goody would no longer down;

'Twas madam in her program gown. Swift.

GOODYSHIP. n. s. [from goody.] The quality of goody. Ludicrous.

The more shame for her goodyship,

To give so near a friend the slip. Hudibras.

GOODWIFE. † n. s. [good and wife.] The mistress of a family. Hudocet.

Which is an ordinary passion amongst our goodwives; if their husband tarry out a day longer than his appointed time, or break his hour, they take on presently with sighs and tears; he is either robbed or dead! Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 161.

By this had chancicleer the village cocke

Bidden the good-wife for her maids to knocke. W. Browne.

There is many a goodwife that understands very well all the intrigues of pepper, salt, and vinegar, who knows not any thing of the all-powerfulness of aqua-fortis!

Echard, Gr. Cont. of the Clergy, p. 66.

It serves the maiden female crew,

The ladies and the good-wives too. Sir J. Suckling.

GOODWOMAN. † n. s. [good and woman.] The mistress of a family in the lower walks of life.

She who neglected her kitchen-garden (for that was still the goodwoman's province) was never reputed a tolerable huswife.

Evelyn, Acetaria.

Goody, good-woman, gossip, n'aunt, forsooth,

Or dame, the sole additions she did hear.

Shenstone, Schoolmistress.

GOOSE. † n. s. plural geese. [go, Sax. goes, Dutch; gaas, Dan. and Iceland. gaa, Russian. See also GANZA.]

1. A large waterfowl proverbially noted, I know not why, for foolishness.

Thou cream-faced lown,

Where got'st thou that goose look? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten till lately. Shakespeare.

Birds most easy to be drawn are waterfowl; as the goose and swan. Peacham on Drawing.

Nor watchful dogs, nor the more wakeful geese,

Disturb with nightly noise the sacred peace. Dryden, Fob.

2. A taylor's smoothing iron.

Come in, taylor: here you may roast your goose.

Shakespeare.

GOOSEBERRY. † n. s. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce. Dr. Johnson. — This may surely be termed a ludicrous etymology. Yet Mr. Pegge, noticing the Latin word for a gooseberry, viz. grossula, (and he might have added our northern word groser,) says, it is certainly big, or great, in comparison with the currant or currant-berry, as they call it in Kent; wherefore it may be a corruption of grossberry, which would be more easily received on account of its use as the sauce already named! Anonym. Cent. viii. 79.—I think the goose-sauce may be easily given up, if it be only observed that goss is another word in our language for gorse, or furze, which has prickles like the gooseberry-tree; zoppe, Sax. the blackberry bush; and thus gooseberry may be goss berry or thorn berry. See Goss.] A berry and tree. The species are, 1. The common gooseberry. 2. The large manured gooseberry. 3. The red hairy gooseberry. 4. The large white Dutch gooseberry. 5. The large amber gooseberry. 6. The large green gooseberry. 7. The large red gooseberry. 8. The yellow-leaved gooseberry. 9. The striped-leaved gooseberry. Miller.

August has upon his arm a basket of all manner of ripe fruits; as pears, plums, apples, gooseberries. Peacham.

Upon a gooseberry bush a snail I found;
For always snails near sweetest fruit abound. Gay.

GOOSEBERRY Fool.* See Fool.

GOOSECAP.† n. s. [from goose and cap.] A silly person.

Why what a goosecap would'st thou make me.
Braun. and Pl. Beggar's Bush.

GOOSEFOOT. n. s. [chenopodium.] Wild orach. Miller.

GOOSEGRASS. n. s. Clivers; an herb.
Goosegrass, or wild tansy, is a weed that strong clays are very subject to. Mortimer.

GOOSEQUILL.* n. s. [goose and quill.] A pen made of the quill of a goose.

Yet think these Jesuits, with a goosequill, within four distinctions to remove the crown from the head of any king christened. Proceedings against Garnet, &c. (1606.) sign. F. i. b.
Many, wearing rapiers, are afraid of goosequills. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

GO'PPISH.* adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Proud; testy; peevish; apt to take exceptions. North.

Ray, and Grose.

GO'RBELLY.† n. s. [from zop, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Junius. It may perhaps come from gor, Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from gormand, or gormand's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch; a swelling belly. A term of reproach for a fat man. Sherwood.

The belching gorbelly hath well nigh killed me.
Breuer, Com. of Lingua. v. 2.

GO'RBELLIED.† adj. [from gorbelly. It is sometimes written gorrel-bellied, and in Derbyshire gorrel-bellied is spoken for fat-bellied.] Fat; bigbellied; having swelling paunches.

Hang ye, gorbellied knaves, are you undone? No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Gorrel-bellied Bacchus, gyant-like,
Bestrid a strong-beere barrell. Old Song of Tom of Bedlam.

GORCE.* n. s. [Norm. Fr. gors.] A pool of water to keep fish in; a wear. Obsolete. It occurs in the Statutes, 25 Edw. III. ch. 4.

GO'RCOCK.* n. s. [perhaps from gorse, furze or heath.] The moor-cock, or red game; grouse.

GO'RCROW.* n. s. [gore and crow.] The carrion crow.

Vulture, kite,
Raven, and gorcrow, all my birds of prey,
That think me turning carcass, now they come. B. Jonson, For.

GORD. n. s. An instrument of gaming, as appears from Beaumont and Fletcher. Warburton.

Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and ninespins.
Braun. and Pl. Scornful Lady.
Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gourd and Fulham holds. Shakespeare.

GO'RDIAN.* adj. [from Gordius, a Phrygian husbandman, made king by the oracle of Apollo; who is said to have then tied up his utensils of husbandry in the temple, and in a knot so intricate that no one could find out where it began or ended. It was pretended, that whoever should loose this knot, should be king of all Asia. Alexander the Great, without staying to untie it, cut it with his sword. The Latin nodus gordianus, or gordian knot, was hence adopted to express any difficult matter; and has passed into our language.] Intricate; difficult.

Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter. Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.
As slippery, as the Gordian knot was hard.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
The binding knot of the late Gordian conspiracie.

Proceedings against Garnet, &c. sign. S. s. 3.
Strange power of home, with how strong-twisted arms,
And Gordian-twined knot, dost thou enchain me!

P. Fletcher, Poetics.
What power, what force, what mighty spell, if not
Your learned hands can loose this Gordian knot?

Milton, Vac. Ex.
Close the serpent sly,
Insinuating, wove with Gordian twine
His braided train. Milton, P. L.

GORE.† n. s. [zop, Saxon; gôr, Welsh, sanious matter; gorr, Swed. the same; gar, Goth. blood.]

1. Blood effused from the body.
A griesly wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of gore-blood thick,
That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
And into a deep sanguinod'd the grassy ground. Spenser, F. Q.
Another's crime the youth unhappy bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden, Æn.
Their veins, after forty days' burial, extended with blood, being opened with a lancet, have yielded a gore as plentiful, fresh, and thick, as that which issues from the vessels of young and sanguine persons.

Ricaut, State of the Greek Church, p. 278.

2. Blood clotted or congealed.
The bloody fact
Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die,
Rolling in dust and gore. Milton, P. L.
His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood
Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood. Denham.

3. Dirt; mud. The Saxon and Swedish words have also the same meaning. Gor is used in the north of England for miry or dirty.
As a sowe waloweth in the stynkyng gore pytte, or in the puddell. Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 18.

To GORE. v. a. [zebopian, Sax.]
1. To stab; to pierce.
Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
Nor from his larger tusks the forest boar
Commission takes his brother swine to gore. Tate, Juv.
For arms his men long pikes and jav'lins bore,
And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle gore. Dryden.

2. To pierce with a horn.
Some toss'd, some gor'd, some trampling down he kill'd. Dryden.

He idly butteth, fights
His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Thomson, Spring.

GORGE.† n. s. [gorge, Fr.]
1. The throat; the swallow.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the sight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor.

This mighty sail-winged monster, that menaces to swallow up the land, unless her bottomless gorge may be satisfied with the blood of the king's daughter of the church.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed. Not in use.

And all the way, most like a brutish beast, He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest.

3. A meal or gorgeful given unto birds, especially hawks.

No lure will cause her stoop, she bears full gorge.

Watson, Sonnets.

Because the vultures had but small pickings, shall we therefore go and fling them a full gorge?

Milton, Apol. for Smeectymn.

4. In architecture, a kind of concave moulding.

5. In fortification, the entrance of a bastion, a ravelin, or other outwork.

To GORGE. v. a. [gorgier, Fr.]

1. To fill up to the throat; to glut; to satiate.

Being with his presence glinted, gorg'd, and full.

He that makes his generation messes,

To gorge his appetite.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite.

Dryden.

I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonsense or obscenity.

Addison.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain

On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,

To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.

Addison, Cato.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den.

Addison.

2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the hook.

To GORGE. * v. n. To feed.

The very garbage that draws together all the fowls of prey and ravin in the land, to come and gorge upon the church.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

GORGED. † adj. [from gorge.]

1. Having a gorge or throat.

Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard.

Shakespeare.

2. In heraldry, denoting a crown of a peculiar form about the neck of a lion or other animal.

GORGEFUL. * n. s. [gorge and full.] A meal for birds. See the third sense of GORGE. Not now in use.

GORGEOUS. † adj. [gorgias, old Fr. Skinner.—Our own word at first was gorgiose.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

The houses be curioslye builded after a gorgiose and gallant sorte.

Robinson, Tr. of More's Utopia, ii. 2. (1551).

They make themselves believe that they are faire and gorgeous.

Outred, Tr. of Cope on Proverbs, xi. 22. (1580.)

O, that deceit should dwell

In such a gorgeous palace!

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

As full of spirit as the month of May,

And gorgeous as the sun at Midsummer.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He had them look upon themselves and upon their enemies, themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave.

Hayward.

The gorgeous East, with richest hand,

Pours on her kings barbaric pearl and gold.

Milton, P. L.

With gorgeous wings, the marks of sov'reign way,

The two contending princes make their way.

Dryden, Virg.

GORGEOUSLY. † adv. [from gorgeous.] Splendidly; magnificently; finely.

They which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts.

St. Luke, vii. 25. Transl. of 1578.

Most precious stones, gorgeously and cunningly set in divers manners.

Wotton, Life of D. of Buckingham.

GORGEOUSNESS. † n. s. [from gorgeous.] Splendour; magnificence; show.

Hulot.

They ought to be diligently admonished to flye gorgeousness and sumptuousness.

Outred, Tr. of Cope on Proverbs, xi. 22. (1580.)

In that day shall the Lord take away the gorgeousness of their apparel.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 7.

What gorgeousness of shews with the vulgar and simple, what multitude of ceremonies with the superstitious!

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

GORGET. † n. s. [from gorge.]

1. The piece of armour that defends the throat.

He with a pulsy fumbling on his gorget,

Shakes in and out the rivet.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him.

Knolles.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,

To tell the people in what danger he was.

B. Jonson.

About his neck a threefold gorget,

As rough as trebled leathern target.

Hudibras.

2. It is now a small convex ornament, gilt or of silver, worn by the officers of foot upon their breasts when on duty.

3. Formerly it was used for that part of the female dress called a ruff. It is in our old lexicography, and is so used by Cleaveland in his poems; but is now obsolete; though Dr. Johnson explains neckerchief by gorget. See NECKERCHIEF.

GORGON. n. s. [γεργών, Gr.] A monster with snaky hairs, of which the sight turned beholders to stone; any thing ugly or horrid.

Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire.

Milton, P. L.

Why did'st thou not encounter man for man,

And try the virtue of that gorgon face

To stare me into statue.

Dryden.

GORGONIAN. * adj. Having the power of the gorgon to terrify or strike with horror.

Gorgonian scolds, and harpies.

GORHEN. * n. s. The female of the goroock.

GORMAND. † n. s. [gourmand, Fr. See GOURMAND.] A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.

The gourmand's paunch is fed.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. (1599.) i. 4.

That great gormond, sat Apicius.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

Many are made gormonds and gluttons by custom, that were not so by nature.

Locke.

GORMANDER. * n. s. [gourmand, French.] A great eater.

Hulot.

GORMANDIZE. * n. s. [from gormand.] Voraciousness. See GOURMANDIZE.

To GORMANDIZE. † v. n. [from gormand.] To eat greedily; to feed ravenously.

Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace;

Leave gormandizing.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

He that censures the good fellow, commonly makes no conscience of gluttony, and gormandizing at home.

Houell, Let. iii. 3.

No scene of it must pass without an eating and gormandizing parasite.

Hales, Serm. at the end of his Rem. p. 29.

GORMANDIZER.† n. s. [from the verb.] A voracious eater.

Not fit that you should be the sheriff's tasters;
It were enough, you being such gormandisers,
To make the sheriffs, henceforth, turn arrant misers!
Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 113.

GORREL-BELLIED.* See GORBELLIED.

GORSE.† n. s. [γορτ, Sax.] Furze; a thick prickly shrub that bears yellow flowers in winter.

And for fair corn-ground are our fields surchoy'd
With worthless gorse. Kyd, Trag. of Cornelia, (1594.)
I see thee breathing on the barren moor,
That seems to bloom although so bleak before;
There if beneath the gorse the primrose spring,
Or the pied daisy smile below the ling,
They shall new charms, at thy command, disclose.
Crabbe, Birth of Flattery.

GO'RY. adj. [from gory.]

1. Covered with congealed blood.

When two boars with rankling malice met,
Their gory sides the fresh wounds fiercely fret. Spenser.
Why do'st thou shake thy gory locks at me?
Thou can'st not say I did it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Bloody; murderous; fatal. Not in use.

The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

GO'SHAWK.† n. s. [го, goose, and hawc, a hawk. It is said to prey on wild geese.] A hawk of a large kind.

Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at goshawks sight aghast. Fairfax.
Here are also ayeries of hawks, and sundry other birds; as, goshawks, lamars, hobbies, &c. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

GO'SLING. n. s. [from goose.]

1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.

Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hipshot? Says the goose to her gosling. L'Estrange.
Nature hath instructed even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.

2. A katkin on nut-trees and pines.

GO'SPEL.† n. s. [godeþ rpel, Sax. God's or good tidings; ευαγγέλιον, Greek; goskel, skcal suach, happy tidings, Erse.]

1. The glad tidings of the actual coming of the Messiah; and hence the evangelical history of Christ.

What the word ευαγγέλιον in Greek, which we render gospel, signifies among authors, is ordinarily known, viz. from εὖ and ἀγγέλλω, good news, or good tidings. Thus the angel speaks of the birth of Christ, ΕΓΑΓΓΕΛΙΖΟΜΑΙ ὑμῖν χαρὰν μεγάλην, I bring you good tidings of great joy, i. e. very joyful good tidings. Only in this sacred use of it, there seems to be a metonymy, or figure very ordinary, whereby the word which signifies good news, is set to denote the history of that good news, the birth, and life, and resurrection of Christ, which all put together is that joyful news or good tidings. — And so this word godeþpel, or by euphony gospel, in Wicliffe's translation, and ever since, notes these good tidings delivered; as first by an angel; and after that, by the apostles by word of mouth; so here in writing, by way of history also; and in brief signifies that blessed story of the birth, life, actions, precepts, and promises, death, and resurrection of Christ; which, of all other stories in the world, we Christians ought to look on with most joy, as an ευαγγέλιον or good word, i. e. a gospel. Hammond on the Gospels, Annot. 1.

2. God's word; the holy book of the Christian revelation.

Thus say the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first begun. Waller.

All the decrees whereof Scripture treateth are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobation. Hammond.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a stedfast belief of the promises of the gospel! Bentley.

3. Divinity; theology.

Help us to save free conscience from the paw
Of hireling wolves, whose gospel is their maw.

Milton, Sonnet to Cromwell.

4. Any general doctrine.

The propagators of this political gospel are in hopes, their abstract principle would be overlooked. Burke.

To GO'SPEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakspeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gospellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you so gospel'd

To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave? Shakspeare.

GO'SPELLARY.* adj. [from gospel.] Theological.

Let any man judge, how well these gospellary principles of our presbyterians agree with the practice and doctrine of the holy apostles. The Cloak in its Colours, (1679,) p. 8.

GO'SPELLER.† n. s. [Sax. godeþpellepe, evangelista. Sax. Chron.]

1. An evangelist. This is the primary sense, of which Dr. Johnson takes no notice, but assigns the use of this word merely to the name of the followers of Wicliffe. Wicliffe himself uses it for an evangelist. Mathew that was of Judee, as he is sett first in order of gospellers, so he wroote first the gospel in Judee.

Wicliffe, N. Test. Prologue on St. Matthe w.

Men made in the gospel rede
Of saint Mathewe the gospellere. Chaucer, Rom. R. 6887.

2. A name of the followers of Wicliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the Papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

Our new gospellers do spurne and kicke against it.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.) sign. Q. iii. b.

What, is Juvenius become so tame,
To be a new gospeller? Old Morality of Lusty Juvenius.

The blynde papiste, the weake papiste, and simple gospeller, as you terme them. Bp. Hooper on the Ministers' Apparel.

That as well the catholicks with the gospellers, as they againe with the catholicks, be and remain in true and unfeigned peace.

Accord of Ulm, (1620.) Wotton's Rem. p. 533.

How much have we declined from that zeal and love, which our fathers bore to the Reformation! There were two things that were visible in the practice of those who first embraced it among us: the one was the great pleasure they took in reading the Scriptures, from whence they were in derision called gospellers.

Bp. Burnet, Fast Sermon, 1680.

These gospellers have had their golden days,
Have traddled down our holy Roman faith. Rowe, Jane Shore.

3. He who reads the Gospel at the altar. See EPISTLER.

These be my gospellers,

These be my pistillers,

These be my queristers.

Skelton, Poems, p. 113.

The principal minister using a decent cope, and being assisted with the gospeller and epistler. Conat. and Can. Eco. 24.

To GO'SPELLIZE.* v. a. [from gospel.] To form according to the gospel.

This command, thus gospellized to us, hath the same force with that whereon Ezra grounded the pious necessity of divorcing.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

GOSS.* n. s. A kind of low furze or gorse. See GORSE. Gorse is called goss in Kent.

Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, pricking goss, and thorns.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

GO'SSAMER.† n. s. [gossipium, low Lat.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of Autumna. Hammer.

The substance called gossamer is formed of the collected webs of flying spiders, and during calm weather in Autumn sometimes falls in amazing quantities. Holt White.

A lover may bestride the gossamer
That idle in the wanton Summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamer. Drayton, Nymphidia.

The filmy gossamer now flits no more,
Nor bales on bask on the short sunny shore. Dryden, Virg.
GOSSAMERY.* adj. [from gossamer.] Light; flimsy; unsubstantial.

Filmy, gawzy, gossamer lines,
With lucid language, and most dark designs.

GOSSIP.* n. s. [god and yrb, relation, affinity, Saxon; i. e. relation by a religious obligation. Our own word was accordingly at first godsib, as in Chaucer; then godsip, as in Campion's Hist. of Ireland; and lastly, gossip. It is now commonly understood of the godmother. Chaucer uses it for godfather.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Our christian ancestors, understanding a spiritual affinity to grow between the parents and such as undertook for the child at baptism, called each other by the name of Godsib, which is as much as to say, that they were sib together, that is of kin together through God. And the child, in like manner, called such his God-fathers, or God-mothers.

Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell.

Go to a gossip's feast and go with me;
After so long grief, such nativity, Shakspeare.
At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies on Ireland.

2. A tippling companion. From the familiarity of conversation, or merry making, at some christenings, this sense of gossip perhaps arose.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's howl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab,
And when she drinks against her lips I bob. Shakspeare.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras.

'Tis sung in ev'ry street,
The common chat of gossips when they meet. Dryden.

4. In a good sense, as a friend or neighbour.

One mother, whenas her foolhardy child
Did come too neare, and with his talous play,
Half dead through feare, her little babe revild,
And to her gossips gan in counsell say;
How can I tell, &c. Spenser, F. Q.

A woman said to her neighbour, alas, gossip, what should we now do at church, since all our saints are taken away?

Homil. of Place and Time of Prayer, P. ii.

5. In modern conversation, mere tattle; trifling talk.

TO GOSSIP.* v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.

Go to a gossip's feast and go with me.—
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shakspeare.
His mother was a votress of my order,
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often hath she gossip'd by my side. Shakspeare.

Such swarms of men that had renounced their virility, and led an idle life, &c. went gadding and gossiping up and down, telling odd stories to the people, as old wives and nurses do to children. More on the Soc. Churches, Pref.

2. To be a pot-companion.

Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,
Fullwarm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping. Shakspeare, K. John.

GOSSIPING.* n. s. [from gossip.] A going about to collect or report mere tattle; a meeting of gossips.

Let not customary sluggishness make us unwieldy for any thing but gossipings. Bp. Rainbow, Serms. (1635), p. 40.

'Tis possible to go into a masculine company, where 'twill be as hard to edge in a word as at a female gossiping.

Gov. of the Tongue, p. 73.

The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking, and gossipings not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Locke

GOSSIPRED. n. s. [from gossip, from gossip.]

Gossipred or compaternity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent.

Davies on Ireland.

GOSSEON.* n. s. [Fr. garçon.] A lad, a low attendant formerly in the wealthy families in the Irish. The Scotch use garson as an attendant.

In most Irish families there used to be a bare-footed gossoon, who was slave to the cook and the butler, and who in fact, without wages, did all the hard work of the house. Gossoons were always employed as messengers. Castle Rackrent, p. 93.

GO'STING. n. s. [rubia.]* An herb. Ainsworth.

GOT. pret. of get.

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius got off. Shakspeare, Coriol.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
Though foul Thersites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteen'd. Dryden, Jun.

These regions and this realm my wars have got;
This mournful empire is the loser's lot. Dryden, State of Inn.

When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

GOT. part. pass. of get.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil hays, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason.

Knolles, Hist.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do. Locke.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world? Arbutnot, John Bull.

Thou wert from Ætna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder born. Pope.

GOTH.* n. s. [Lat. Gothus; old French, Goth; Sax. Lota; from Gothia, or Gothland.]

1. One of the people in the northern parts of Europe, first called Getes, afterwards Goths.

There are considerable reasons to persuade us, that the Getes and Goths, who were of Aramaean original, made their incursions out of the northern parts of Asia, through Sarmatia, into Scandia and other regions of Europe, where they settled themselves. Hibbott, Dict. i. 307.

Not very solicitous whether originally a Goth or a Celt. Campbell, Lit. Hist. of Ireland, p. 72.

The Goths [spoken of by Hickee, in his remarks on the Mæso-Gothick language] were those who inhabited Mæsia, not far from the northern borders of Greece, a vast tract of country now comprehended in Turkey; whose language, with different dialects, probably extended over all the north of Europe, nearly in the same latitude, from the coast of Norway to the Black Sea. Pegge, Anec. of the Eng. Language.

2. One not civilized; one deficient in general knowledge; a barbarian.

I look upon these writers as Goths in poetry. Addison, Spect. No. 62.

What do you think of the late extraordinary event in Spain? Could you have ever imagined, that those ignorant Goths would have dared to banish the Jesuits? Lord Chesterfield.

GO'THAMIST.* n. s. [from the old saying, "As wise as a man of Gotham," a place in Nottinghamshire formerly, it is feigned, noted for some pleasant blunders; whence a man of Gotham denoted a simple person. See Grose's Local Proverbs.] One who is not wise.

As those scholars in their tales, even so the Romish writers have been so defective in uttering of their meaning concerning the same speech of Christ, that they have merited, like to the former Gothamists, to be dismissed with laughter for speaking so foolishly.

Bp. Morton, Discharge of Imputations, &c. (1633), p. 123.

GO'THICAL.* } adj. [old Fr. gothique, from Goth]
GO'THICK. }

1. Respecting the country or language of the Goths.

In which box were certain scrolls of parchment written with Gothical characters, but containing Castilian verses, which comprehended many of his acts. Shelton, Don Quix. iv. 24.

Francis Junius published those precious fragments of the ancient Teutonic language, [the fragments of the Mæso-Gothick gospels,] under the name of Uphil, a Gothick bishop in Mesia. M. Shelton, Tr. of Wotton's View of Hickee, p. 200.

Dr. Hickee points out a very striking feature of resemblance in the similar pronunciation of gg when in contact, by observing that, in this situation, the first g had, in the Mæso-Gothick, the sound of z, as it has in the Greek. This he exemplifies in the Gothick verb gaggan, to go, which, he tells us, from such pronunciation produced the Saxon verb gagan.

Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Language.

2. Denoting a particular kind of architecture, distinguished by the terms ancient and modern, the heavy or light; the former being that which the Goths brought with them from the north in the fifth century, which is very coarse and massive; the latter being introduced about the tenth century, which runs into the other extreme of delicacy and lightness, and is sometimes called arabesque. See ARABESQUE.

There is nothing in this city [Sienna] so extraordinary as the cathedral, which — can only be looked upon as one of the master-pieces of Gothick architecture. Addison on Italy.

York-minster I look upon to be the criterion, according to which the beauties or defects of every Gothic church are to be estimated. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

3. Rude; uncivilized.

Ah! rustic ruder than Gothic.

Congreve.

GO'THICK.* n. s. The Gothick language.

Besides Wormius, Verelius, and Gudmundus Andreæ, there are very few that have professedly treated the ancient Gothick.

Pref. to Serenius's Sued. and Eng. Dict. 2d edit. 1757.

GO'THICISM.* n. s. [from Gothick.]

1. A Gothick idiom.

This peculiarity Mr. Sibbald, the chronicler of the Scottish poetry, in his zeal for Gothicism, has endeavoured to derive from an unknown character (s) in the Gothic Gospels of Uphilas, which were written in the fourth century.

Chalmers on the Language of Sir D. Lindsay.

2. Conformity to Gothick architecture.

I am glad you enter into the spirit of Strawberry Castle, it has a purity and propriety of Gothicism in it. Gray, Letters.

3. The state of barbarians.

Night, Gothicism, confusion, and absolute Chaos are come again. Shenstone.

To GO'THICIZE.* v. a. [from Gothicks] To bring back to barbarism.

The language and manners of the higher ranks are not gothicized. Strutt, Queen-Hoo Hall.

GO'TTEN. part. pass. of get.

Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold. Job, xxviii. 15.

Few of them, when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it. Temple.

GO'VE. n. s. Wood: a plant.

Dict.

GOVE. n. s. A mow.

Tusser.

To GOVE. v. n. To mow; to put in a gove, guff, or mow. An old word.

Load safe, carry home, follow time being fair,
Gove just in the barn, it is out of despair.

Tusser.

To GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French; gubernare, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external. Spenser on Ireland.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then

It grows impossible to govern men.

Waller.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

I am at present against war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and naughty spirits as you are, govern all things in times of peace. Davenant.

The chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions.

Atterbury.

3. To manage; to restrain.

Go after her, she's desperate; govern her.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax: as, and governs the accusative case.

Listen, children, unto me,

And let this your lesson be,

In our language evermore

Words that govern go before.

Mauger, French Gram.

5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.

To GOVERN. v. n. To keep superiority; to behave with haughtiness.

By that rule,

Your wicked atoms may be working now

To give bad counsel, that you still may govern.

Dryden.

GO'VERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule; obedient; manageable.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe.

Locke.

GO'VERNANCE. n. s. [from govern.]

1. Government; rule; management.

Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas. 1 Mac. ix. 31.

2. Control, as that of a guardian.

Me he knew not whether his own ill,

Till through wise handling, and fair governance,

I him recured to a better will.

Spenser, F. Q.

What! shall king Henry be a pupil still,

Under the surly Gloster's governance? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.

He liketh is to fall into mischance

That is regardless of his governance.

Spenser, Muirpottmas.

GO'VERNANT.* n. s. [gouvernante, French.] A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.

I saw Envy there drest up in a widow's veil, and the very picture of the gouvernante of one of your noblemen's houses.

L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo's Vis. p. 38.

GO'VERNESS. n. s. [gouvernesse, old French, from gove.]

1. A female invested with authority.

The moon, the governess of floods,

Pale in her anger, washes all the air,

That rheumatick diseases do abound.

Shakespeare.

2. A tutoress; a woman that has the care of young ladies.

He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Danae is painted, when she suddenly saw the golden shower.

His three younger children were taken from the governess in whose hands he put them. Clarendon.

3. A tutoress; an instructress; a directress.

Great affliction that severe governess of the life of man brings upon those souls she seizes on. More against Atheism.

GOVERNMENT. n. s. [gouvernement, French.]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many.

Temple.

No government can do any act to limit itself: the supreme legislative power cannot make itself not to be absolute. Lockey.

2. An established state of legal authority.

There they shall sound

Their government, and their great senate choose
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd.

Milton, P. L.

While he survives, in concord and content
The commons live, by no divisions rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government.

Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.

Addison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one.

Swift.

3. Administration of publick affairs.

Safety and equal government are things

Which subjects make as happy as their kings.

Waller.

Those governments which curb not evils, cause;
And a rich knave's a libel on our laws.

Young.

4. Regularity of behaviour. Not in use.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage, blood,
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion and disdain.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

'Tis government that makes them seem divine;

The want thereof makes thee abominable. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death.

Shakspeare.

6. Management of the limbs or body. Obsolete.

Their god
Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I then ward'd all with wary government.

Spenser, F. Q.

7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

GOVERNOUR. n. s. [gouverneur, French.]

1. One who has the supreme direction.

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governour of the world by providence, all are partakers.

Hooker.

They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise.

Bentley.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations.

Ps. xxii. 28.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion.

South.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governour,
Remains the censure of this hellish villain.

Shakspeare, Othello.

4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Eham will I, where the young king is,

Being ordain'd his special governour;

And for his safety there, I'll best devise.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The great work of a governour is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom.

Locke.

During the minority of kings, the election of bishops, and other affairs of the church, must be left in the hands of their governors and courtiers.

Lockey.

5. Pilot; regulator; manager.

Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governour listeth.

Ja. iii. 1.

GOUGE. n. s. [French.] A chissel having a round edge, for the cutting of such wood as is to be rounded or hollowed.

Moxon.

To GOUGE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To scoop out as with a gouge or chissel.

I will save in cork,

In my meer stop'ling, 'bove three thousand pound,

Within that term; by gouging of 'em out

Just to the size of my bottles, and not slicing.

B. Jonson, Dev. is an Ass.

GO'UJEERS.† n. s. [from gouge, French, a camp trull.]

The French disease.

Hammer.

The goujeers shall devour them, flesh and fell.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Pinks, goulands, king-cups, and sweet sops-in-wine.

B. Jonson, Masques.

GOUL'RD.* n. s. An extract of lead, so called from M. Goulard, the inventor of it, used as a remedy for inflammations, bruises, sprains, and the like.

GOURD.† n. s. [gourhorde, French.]

1. A plant. The fruit of some species are long, of others round, or bottle-shaped.

Miller.

But I will haste, and from each bough and brake,

Each plant, and juiciest gourd, will pluck such choice

To entertain our angel-guest.

Milton, P. L.

Gourd seeds abound so much in oil, that a sweet and pleasant one may be drawn from them by expression: they are of the four greater cold seeds, and are used in emulsions.

Hill.

2. A bottle [from gourd, old French. Skinner.] The large fruit so called is often scooped hollow, for the purpose of containing and carrying wine, and other liquors: from thence any leathern bottle grew to be called by the same name, and so the word is used by Chaucer.

Hammer.

3. An instrument of gaming. See GORD.

GO'RDINESS. n. s. [from gourd.] A swelling in a horse's leg after a journey.

Farrier's Dict.

GO'URMAND.* n. s. [French. See GORMAND.]

Written also gurmand, as are also the derivatives, gurmandize. A glutton; a greedy eater.

This gurmand sacrifices whole hecatombs to his paunch.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

With difficulty I return to what remains of this ignoble task, for the disdain I have to change a period more with the filth and venom of this gourmand, swelled into a confuter.

Milton, Colasterion.

To GO'URMANDIZE.* v. n. [from gourmand.] To play the glutton. See To GORMANDIZE.

Cockeram.

GO'URMANDIZE.* n. s. [from gourmand.] Gluttony; voraciousness.

A tiger forth out of the wood did rise,

That with fell claws, full of fierce gourmandize,

And greedy mouth wide gaping like hell gate,

Did run at Pastorell, her to surprize.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 34.

Lacedemon, whence gourmandize, drunkenness, luxury, dissolutiion, avarice, envy, and ambition were banished.

Summary of Du Bartas, (1621.) P. ii. p. 54.

GOURNET. n. s. [cuculus.] A fish.

GOUT. n. s. [goutte, French.]

1. The arthritis; a periodical disease attended with great pain.

The gout is a disease which may affect any membranous part, but commonly those which are at the greatest distance from the heart or the brain, where the motions of the fluids is the slowest, the resistance, friction, and stricture of the solid parts the greatest, and the sensation of pain, by the dilaceration of the nervous fibres, extreme. Arbutnot on Diet.

One that's sick o' th' gout, had rather Groan so in perplexity, than be cur'd
By th' sure physician death. Shakespeare, Cymb.

This very rev'rend lecher, quite worn out
With rheumatism, and crippled with his gout,
Forgets what he in youthful times has done
And swings his own vices in his son. Dryden, Juv.

2. A drop. [goutte, French; gutta, Latin.] Gut for drop is still used in Scotland by physicians.

I see thee still;
And on thy blade, and dudgeon, gouts of blood,
Which was not so before. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

GOUT. n. s. [French.] A taste. An affected cant word.

Catalogues serve for a direction to any one that has a gout for the like studies. Woodward on Fossils.

GOUT-SWOLLEN.* adj. [gout and swollen.] Inflamed with the gout.

The best lies low —
Quoth old Endemon, when his gout-swolne list
Gropes for his double ducats in his chist. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 1.

GO'UTWORT. n. s. [gout and wort, podagraria.] An herb. Ainsworth.

GO'UTY.* adj. [from gout.]
1. Afflicted or diseased with the gout. Huloet.

The sickly ladie, and the goutie peere,
Still would I haunt, that love their life so deare.
Bp. Hall, Sat. li. 4.

There dies not above one of a thousand of the gout, although I believe that more die gouty. Graunt.
Knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found. Dryden, Pers.

Most commonly a gouty constitution is attended with great acuteness of parts, the nervous fibres, both in the brain and the other extremities, being delicate. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. Relating to the gout.
There are likewise other causes of blood-spitting; one is the settlement of a gouty matter in the substance of the lungs.
Blackmore.

3. Boggy; as, gouty land.

4. Swelled.
This humour in historians hath made the body of ancient history in some parts so gouty and monstrous. Spenser on Prod. p. 105.

GO'UTINESS.* n. s. [from gout.] The pain of the gout. Sherwood.

GOWD.* n. s. A gaud; a toy; whence gowdies, play-things. Used in the north of England. See GAUD.

GOWK.* n. s. [Teut. gauch.] A foolish fellow; and also, a cuckoo. See GAWK.

To GOWK.* v. a. [Teut. gauch, a fool; whence a goke, or gawky. See GAWK.] To stupify.

Nay, look how the man stands as he were gok'd!
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

To GOWL.* v. n. [Icel. goela.] To howl. Used by Wicliffe. Obsolete. See To HOWL, and To YELL.

GOWN. n. s. [gorra, Italian; gwn, Welsh and Erse.]

1. A long upper garment.
They make garments either short, as cloaks, or, as gowns, long to the ground. Abbot, Descrip. of the World.

If ever I said a loose-bodied gown, sew me up in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread;
I said a gown. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

In length of train descends her sweeping gown,
And by her graceful walk the queen of love is known. Dryden.

2. A woman's upper garment.

I despise your new gown, till I see you dressed in it. Pope.
3. The long habit of a man dedicated to acts of peace, as divinity, medicine, law.

The benefices themselves are so mean in Irish counties, that they will not yield any competent maintenance for any honest minister, scarcely to buy him a gown. Spenser on Ireland.

Girt in his Gabin gown the hero sat. Dryden, Æn.

Yet not superior to her sex's cares,
The mode she fixes by the gown she wears;
Of silks and china she's the last appeal;
In these great points she loads the common weal. Young.

4. The dress of peace.
He Mars depos'd, and arms to gowns made yield;
Successful councils did him soon approve
As fit for close intrigues as open field. Dryden.

GO'WNED.* adj. [from gown.] Dressed in a gown.

A noble crew about them waited round

Of sage and sober peers, all gravely gown'd. Spenser, F. Q.

Well might the gowned Romans fear, when Pompey fled.
Bp. Taylor, Sermon. (1651,) p. 215.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
The seams with sparkling emeralds set around. Dryden.

GO'WNMAN. n. s. [gown and man.] A man devoted to the acts of peace; one whose proper habit is a gown.

Let him with pedants
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen. Rowe.

Thus will that whole bench, in an age or two, be composed of mean, fawning gownmen, dependants upon the court for a morsel of bread. Swift.

GO'WNSMAN.* n. s. An academical phrase of modern times for a member of the university, at least of Oxford; formerly gownman.

Those were all the gownmen that I knew above 80 years old in Oxford.

Bp. Lloyd to Dr. Charlett, (1770,) Aubrey's Lett. i. 208.
If townsmen by our influence are so enlightened, what must we gownmen be ourselves. The Student, (1750,) i. 56.

GO'ZZARD.* n. s. [a corruption of goosherd.] One who tends geese used in the north of England, and perhaps elsewhere, Mr. Malouin says: In Lincolnshire, Mr. Pegge says, but in the meaning of a fool.

GRAB.* n. s. A vessel peculiar to the Malabar coast; having usually two masts, but sometimes three.

To GRA'BBLE. v. n. [probably corrupted from grapple.]

1. To grope; to feel eagerly with the hands.

My blood chills about my heart at the thought of these rogues, with their bloody hands grabbling in my guts, and pulling out my very entrails. Arbutnot, John Bull.

2. To lie prostrate on the ground. Ainsworth.

3. To grapple, in the west of England. Grose.

GRACE.* n. s. [grace, French; gratia, Latin;
gracc, Erse.]

1. Favour: kindness.

If the highest love in no base person may aspire to grace, then may I hope your beauty will not be without pity. Sidney.

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God. Shakespeare.

Such as were popular,
And well deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.

Is this the reward and thanks I am to have for those many acts of grace I have lately passed? King Charles.

Yet those remov'd,
Such grace shall one just man find in his sight,
That he relents, not to blot out mankind. Milton, P. L.

He receiv'd all the graces and degrees, the proctorship and the doctorship could be obtained there. Clarendon.

Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace;
Then either of you knights may well deserve
A princess born. Dryden, Fab.

None of us, who now your grace implore,
But held the rank of sovereign queen before. Dryden.

- Proffer'd service I repaid the fair,
That of her grace she gave her maid to know
The secret meaning of this moral show. Dryden.
2. Favourable influence of God on the human mind.
In simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world. 2 Cor. i. 12.
The evil of sin is that we are especially to pray against, most earnestly begging of God, that he will, by the power of his grace, preserve us from falling into sin. Duty of Man.
Prevenient grace descending had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh Regenerate grow instead. Milton, P. L.
3. Virtue; effect of God's influence.
Within the church, in the publick profession and external communion thereof, are contained persons truly good and sanctified, and hereafter saved; and together with them other persons void of all saving grace, and hereafter to be damned.
Pearson.
How Van wants grace, who never wanted wit. Pope?
4. Pardon; mercy.
Noble pity held
His hand a while, and to their choice gave space
Which they would prove, his valour or his grace. Waller.
Bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, Milton, P. L.
5. Favour conferred.
I should therefore esteem it great favour and grace,
Would you be so kind as to go in my place. Prior.
6. Privilege.
But to return and view the chearful skies,
To see great Jupiter imparts this grace. Dryden.
7. A goddess, by the heathens supposed to bestow beauty.
This forehead, where your verse has said
The loves delighted and the graces play'd. Prior.
8. Behaviour, considered as decent or unbecoming.
The same words in Philoclea's mouth, as from one woman to another, so as there were no other body by, might have had a better grace, and perchance have found a gentler receipt.
Sulney.
Have I reason of good grace in what I do. Temple.
9. Adventitious or artificial beauty; pleasing appearance.
One lilac only, with a statelier grace,
Presum'd to claim the oak's and cedar's place;
And, looking round him with a monarch's care,
Spread his exalted boughs to wave in air. Harte.
Her purple habit sits with such a grace
On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face. Dryden, Æn.
To write and speak correctly gives a grace, and gains a favourable attention to what one has to say. Locke.
10. Natural excellence.
It doth grieve me, that things of principal excellency should be thus bitten at by men whom God hath endued with graces, both of wit and learning, for better purposes. Hooker.
To some kind of men,
Their graces serve them but as enemies.
Shakespeare, As you like it.
In his own grace he doth exalt himself
More than in your advancement. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
The charming Lausus, full of youthful fire,
To Turnus only second in the grace
Of manly mien, and features of the face. Dryden, Æn.
11. Embellishment; recommendation; beauty.
Where justice grows, there grows the greater grace,
The which doth quench the brand of hellish smart. Spenser.
Set all things in their own peculiar place,
And know that order is the greatest grace. Dryden.
The flow'r which lasts for little space,
A short liv'd good, and an uncertain grace. Dryden.
12. Single beauty.
I pass their form and every charming grace. Dryden.
13. Ornament; flower; highest perfection.
By their hands this grace of kings must die,
If hell and treason hold their promises. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

14. Single or particular virtue.

The king-becoming grace,
As justice, verity, temperance, stability,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
The graces of his religion prepare him for the most useful discharge of every relation of life. Rogers.

15. Virtue physical.

O, mickle is the powerful grace that he
In plants, herbs, stones and their true qualities. Shakespeare

16. The title of a duke or archbishop; formerly of the king, meaning the same as your goodness, or your clemency.

Here come I from our princely general,
To know your grief; to tell you from his grace,
That he will give you audience. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
High and mighty king, your grace, and those your nobles here present, may be pleas'd to bow your ears.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

According to the usual proceedings of your grace, and of the court, with delinquents which are overtaken with error in simplicity, there was yielded unto him a deliberate, patient, and full hearing, together with a satisfactory answer to all his main objections. White.

17. A short prayer said before and after meat. [from the first word of the Latin prayer, "Gratias Tibi agimus." Wicliffe uses graces for thanks, St. Mark, xiv.]

Your soldiers use him as the grace fore meat,
Their talk at table, and their thanks at end.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Our excess of modesty makes us shamed in all the exercises of piety and devotion. This humour prevails upon us daily; insomuch, that at many well-bred tables the master of the house is so very modest a man that he has not the confidence to say grace at his own table; a custom which is not only practised by all the nations about us, but was never omitted by the heathens themselves. Addison, Spect. No. 458.

While grace is saying after meat, do you and your brethren take the chairs from behind the company. Swift.

Then cheerful healths, your mistress shall have place;
And what's more rare, a poet shall say grace. Pope.

GRACE-CUP. n. s. [grace and cup.] The cup or health drunk after grace.

The grace-cup serv'd, the cloth away,
Jove thought it time to shew his play. Prior.

TO GRACE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adorn; to dignify; to embellish; to recommend; to decorate.

This they study, this they practice, this they grace with a wanton superfluity of wit. Hooker.

I do not think a braver gentleman,
More daring, or more bold is now alive,
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV

Little of this great world can I speak,
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for myself. Shakespeare, Othello.

There is dye from the judge to the advocate; some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled. Bacon.

Rich crowns were on their royal scutcheons plac'd,
With sapphires, diamonds, and with rubies grac'd. Dryden.

By both his parents of descent divine;
Great Jove and Phœbus grac'd his noble line. Pope.

Though triumphs were to generals only due,
Crowns were reserv'd to grace the soldiers too. Pope.

2. To dignify or raise by an act of favour.

He writes
How happily he lives, how well belov'd,
And daily graced by the emperor.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

 Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
 Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

GRA'CEFUL.† adj. [from grace.]

1. Full of grace and virtue. Not now in use.

You have a holy father,
 A graceful gentleman, against whose person,
 So sacred as it is, I have done sin. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

2. Beautiful with dignity.

Amid the troops, and like the leading god;
 High o'er the rest in arms the graceful Turnus rode. Dryden.
 Matchless his pen, victorious was his lance;
 Bold in the lists, and graceful in the dance. Pope.
 Yet graceful ease, and sweetness void of pride,
 Might hide her faults, if belles had faults to hide. Pope.
 Graceful to sight, and elegant to thought,
 The great are vanquish'd, and the wise are taught. Young.

GRA'CEFULLY.† adv. [from graceful.] Elegantly;
 with pleasing dignity.

Through nature and through art she rang'd,
 And gracefully her subject chang'd. Swift.
 Walking is the mode or manner of man, or of a beast; but walking gracefully implies a manner or mode super-added to that action. Watts, Logic.

GRA'CEFULNESS.† n. s. [from graceful.] Elegance of manner; dignity with beauty.

Petrarch's Tuscan gracefulness,
 Or Theban Pindar's lofty strain.
Hakewill on Providence, p. 256.

His neck, his hands, his shoulders, and his breast,
 Did next in gracefulness, and beauty, stand
 To breathing figures. Dryden, Ovid.

He executed with so much gracefulness and beauty that he alone got money and reputation. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

There is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden, Ovid, Pref.

If hearers are amaz'd from whence
 Proceeds that fund of wit and sense,
 Which, though her modesty would shroud,
 Breaks like the sun behind a cloud;
 While gracefulness its art conceals,
 And yet through every motion steals.
Swift.

GRA'CELESS.† adj. [from grace.] Void of grace;
 wicked; hopelessly corrupt; abandoned.

This graceless man, for furtherance of his guile,
 Did court the handmaid of my lady dear. Spenser.

Whose hap shall be to have her,
 Will not so graceless be, to be ingrate. Shakespeare.

In all manner of graceless and hopeless characters, some are lost for want of advice, and others for want of heed. L'Estrange.

Furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way
 Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey. Dryden.

GRA'CELESSLY.† adv. [from graceless.] Without elegance.

The French, in his whole language, hath not one word that hath his accent in the last syllable, saving two, called antepenultima; and little more hath the Spanish; and therefore very gracelessly may they use dactyls. Sidney, Def. of Poetry.

GRA'CES.† n. s. Good graces for favour is seldom used in the singular.

Demand deliv'ry of her heart,
 Her goods, and chattels, and good graces,
 And person, up to his embraces. Hudibras.
 He knows that, as a go-between, he shall find his account in being in the good graces of a man of wealth.

Taylor, No. 225.

 Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; leanness.

Cockeram.

GRA'CIOUS.† adj. [gracieux, French.]

1. Merciful; benevolent.

Common sense and reason could not but tell them, that the good and gracious God could not be pleased, nor consequently worshipped, with any thing barbarous or cruel. South.

To be good and gracious, and a lover of knowledge, are two of the most amiable things. Burnet, Theory.

2. Favourable; kind.

And the Lord was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them. 2 Kings xlii. 23.

Unblam'd Ulysses' house,
 In which I finde receipt so gracious. Chapman.

From now revive
 A gracious beam of light; from now inspire
 My tongue to sing, my hand to touch the lyre. Prior.

3. Acceptable; favoured.

Doctrine is much more profitable and gracious by example than by rule. Spenser.

He made us gracious before the kings of Persia, so that they gave us food. 1 Esdr. viii. 80.

Goring, who was now general of the horse, was no more gracious to prince Rupert than Wilnot had been. Clarendon.

4. Virtuous; good.

Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them when they have approved their virtues. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

5. Excellent. Obsolete.

The grievous abuse which hath been of councils, should rather cause men to study how so gracious a thing may again be reduced to that first perfection. Houker.

6. Graceful; becoming; pleasing. Obsolete, Dict.

Johnson says, citing only the example from Camden. There is no usage of this word more ancient than in the present sense; and it has been employed, in our own time, by one of our ablest writers.

A knave child the bare by this Walter
 Ful gracious, and fair for to behold. Chaucer, Clerk's Tale.
 There was not such a gracious creature born.

Being season'd with a gracious voice.
Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Rutilia, that is, red head. Camden.

Sallust's expression would be shorter and more compact;
 Cicero's more gracious and flowing. Bp. Hurd.

GRA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from gracious.]

1. Kindly; with kind condescension.

His testimony he graciously confirmed, that it was the best of all my tragedies. Dryden.

He heard my vows, and graciously decreed
 My grounds to be restor'd, my former flocks to feed. Dryden.

If her majesty would but graciously be pleased to think a hardship of this nature worthy her royal consideration. Swift.

2. In a pleasing manner.

GRA'CIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from gracious.]

1. Mercifulness.

Their enemies shall laugh, when themselves shall have cause to weep, unless the graciousness of God stir up some worthy princes of renown, and reputation, with both sides to interpose their wisdom. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

2. Kind condescension.

The graciousness and temper of this answer made no impression on them. Clarendon.

3. Possession of graces or good qualities.

The acts derive their graciousness from the habits. Ep. Barlow, Rem. p. 437.

4. Pleasing manner.

He possessed some science of graciousness and attraction which books had not taught. Johnson, Rambler, No. 147.

GRADATION. n. s. [gradation, French; gradus, Latin.]

1. Regular progress from one degree to another.

The desire of more and more rises by a natural gradation to most, and after that to all. T. Estrange.

2. Regular advance step by step.

From thence,
By cold gradation, and well balanc'd form,
We shall proceed with Angelo. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
The psalmist very elegantly expresseth to us the several gradations by which men at last come to this horrid degree of impiety. Tillotson.

3. Order; sequence; series.

'Tis the curse of service;
Promerment goes by letter and affection,
Not, as of old, gradation, where each second
Stood heir to th' first. Shakspeare, Othello.

4. Regular process of arguments

Certain it is, by a direct gradation of consequences from this principal of merit, that the obligation to gratitude flows from, and is enjoined by, the first dictates of nature. South.

GRADATORY. n. s. [gradus, Lat.] Steps from the cloisters into the church. Ainsworth.

GRADATORY.* adj. [from gradation.] Proceeding step by step.

Could we have seen his [Macbeth's] crimes darkening on their progress, till they attain the direst excess of human depravity; could this gradatory apostacy have been shown us; could the noble and useful moral, which results, have been thus forcibly impressed upon our minds, without a violation of those senseless unities [of time and place]? Seward, Lett. iii. 243.

GRADE.* n. s. [French.] Rank; degree. This word has been brought forward in some modern pamphlets, but it will hardly be adopted.

GRADIENT. adj. [gradiens, Lat.] Walking; moving by steps.

Amongst those gradient automata, that iron spider is especially remarkable, which, being but of an ordinary bigness, did creep up and down as if it had been alive. Wilkins.

GRADUAL. adj. [graduel, Fr.] Proceeding by degrees; advancing step by step; from one stage to another.

Nobler birth
Of creatures animate with gradual life,
Of growth, sense, reason, all summ'd up in man. Milton, P. L.

Men still suppose a gradual natural progress of things; as that, from great, things and persons should grow greater, till at length, by many steps and ascents, they come to be at greatest. South.

GRADUAL.† n. s. [gradus, Lat.]

1. An order of steps.

Before the gradual prostrate they ador'd,
The pavement kiss'd, and thus the saint implor'd. Dryden.

2. A gail; an ancient book of hymns or prayers. [Fr. graduel.] See GRAIL.

GRADUALITY. n. s. [from gradual.] Regular progression.

This some ascribe unto the mixture of the elements, others to the graduality of opacity and light. Brown.

GRADUALLY. adv. [from gradual.]

1. By degrees; in regular progression.

When the moon passes over the fixed stars, and eclipses them, your light vanishes; not gradually, like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton, Opticks.

The Author of our being weans us gradually from our fondness of life the nearer we approach towards the end of it. Swift.

Human creatures are able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Arbuthnot.

2. In degree.

Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically differ from the fantastick reason of brutes. Greiv.

TO GRADUATE. v. g. [graduere, French; gradus, Latin.]

1. To dignify with a degree in the university.

John Tregonwel, graduated a doctor and dubbed a knight, did good service. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Concerning columns and their adjuncts, architects make such a noise as if the terms of architraves, frizes, and cornices were enough to graduate a master of this art. Walton.

2. To mark with degrees.

The places were marked where the spirits stood at the severest cold and greatest heat, and according to these observations he graduates his thermometers. Derham.

3. To raise to a higher place in the scale of metals: a chemical term.

The tincture was capable to transmute or graduate as much silver as equalled in weight that gold. Boyle.

4. To heighten; to improve.

Not only vitriol is a cause of blackness, but the salts of natural bodies; and dyers advance and graduate their colours with salts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO GRADUATE.* v. n.

1. To take an academical degree; to become a graduate: as, he graduated at Oxford.

2. To proceed regularly, or by degrees.

A grand light falls beautifully on the principal figure, but it does not graduate sufficiently into distant parts of the cave. Gilpin.

GRADUATE.† n. s. [gradué, Fr. graduytus, low Lat. from gradus, Lat.] A man dignified with an academical degree.

I know the mts
And sciences do not directlier make
A graduate in our universities,
Than an habitual gravity prefers
A man in court. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

An oath taken by Oxford graduates [was] that they should not profess at Stamford. Selden on Drayton's Polyglot, S. 8.

Of graduates I dislike the learned rout,
And choose a female doctor for the gout. Bramston.

GRADUATESHIP.* n. s. [from graduate.] The state of a graduate.

An English concordance, and a topick folio, the gatherings and savings of a sober graduateship. Milton, Arcopagistica.

GRADUATION.† n. s. [graduation, French; from graduate.]

1. Regular progression by succession of degrees.

The graduation of the parts of the universe is likewise necessary to the perfection of the whole. Greiv.

2. Improvement; exaltation of qualities.

Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its graduation, that heated in fire, and often extinguished in oil of mars or iron, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fastened in a wall. Brown.

3. The act of conferring academical degrees.

The ministers are now reconciled to distinction; and as it must always happen, that some will excel others, have thought graduation a proper testimony of uncommon abilities or acquisitions. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

GRAFF. n. s. A ditch; a moat. See GRAVE.

Though the fortifications were not regular, yet the walls were good, and the graff broad and deep. Clarendon.

GRAFF.† } n. s. [graffe, French. Dr. Johnson. —
GRAFT. } Rather from the Sax. græfan, as Lye long since observed, which signifies to dig, to excavate. So also Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley,
 ii. 376. And see To GRAFF.] A small branch inserted into the stock of another tree, and nourished by its sap, but bearing its own fruit; a young cyon.

God gave unto man all kind of seeds and grafts of life; as the vegetative life of plants, the sensual of beasts, the rational of man, and the intellectual of angels. Raleigh.

It is likely, that as in fruit-trees the graft maketh a greater fruit, so in trees that bear no fruit it will make the greater leaves. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

'Tis usual now an inmate graft to see
 With insolence invade a foreign tree. Dryden, Virg.

If you cover the top with clay and horse-dung, in the same manner as you do a graft, it will help to heel the sooner.

Mortimer.

Now the cleft rind inserted graft receives,
 And yields an offspring more than nature gives. Pope.

To GRAFF.† } v. a. [greffer, French. Dr. John-
To GRAFT. } son. — It is the Sax. verb græfan, to dig; Goth. grabar, the same; and Iceland.
grafa.]

1. To insert a cyon or branch of one tree into the stock of another.

His growth is but a wild and fruitless plant;
 I'll cut his barren branches to the stock,
 And graft you on to bear. Dryden, Don Sebast.

With his pruning hook disjoin
 Unbearing branches from their head,
 And graft more happy in their stead. Dryden.

2. To propagate by insertion or inoculation.

Now let me graft my pears, and prune the vine. Dryden.

3. To insert into a place or body to which it did not originally belong.

And they also, if they bide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in; for God is able to graft them in again.

Romans, xi. 23.

These are th' Italian names which fate will join
 With ours, and graft upon the Trojan line. Dryden, Æn.

4. To impregnate with an adscititious branch.

We've some old crab-trees here at home, that will not
 Be grafted to your relish. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
 Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

5. To join one thing so as to receive support from another.

This resolution against any peace with Spain is a new incident grafted upon the original quarrel, by the intrigues of a faction among us. Swift.

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
 And graft my love immortal on thy fame. Pope.

To GRAFF. v. n. To practise insinuation.

In March is good grafting the skilful do know,
 So long as the wind in the East do not blow:
 From moon being changed, till past be the prime,
 For grafting and cropping is very good time. Tusser.

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graft, not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit; whereas, if you graft but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few.

Bacon.

GRAFFER.† } n. s. [from graft or graft.] One who GRAFTER. } propagates fruit by grafting. Hulot.

Or that the grafter and waterer be nothing — without whose work there should be no increase.

Ahp. Cranner, Answer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 378.

I am informed, by the trials of the most skilful graffiers of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which the insinuation is made.

Evelyn.

GRAIL.† } n. s. [grêle, Fr. from gracilis, Lat. Menage.]
 Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was;
 And, lying down upon the sandy grail,
 Drank of the stream as clear as crystal glass. Spenser, F. Q.
 The bottom yellow, like the golden grail,
 That bright Pactolus washeth with his streams.

Spenser, Vis. of Bellay.

GRAIL.* } n. s. [low Lat. graduale, gradale; old French, greel.] A book containing some of the offices of the Roman church.

The greyle is not said. Lib. Fest. fol. 33.

Among the books they found there, were one hundred psalters, as many grayles, and forty missals, which undoubtedly belonged to the choir of the church.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. vol. 1. Diss. 2.

GRAIN.† } n. s. [graine, French; granum, Latin;
grano, Italian; have all the following significations.
 Dr. Johnson. — Icel. and Norv. grion, corn, fruits of the earth; from the Su. Goth. gro, to germinate, to grow.]

1. A single seed of corn.

Look into the seeds of time,
 And say which grain will grow, and which will not.

Shakspeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
 Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
 But with a grain a day, I would not buy
 Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakspeare, Coriol.
 Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty. Mortimer.

2. Corn.

As it ebbs, the seedsman

Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
 And shortly comes to harvest. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
 Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,
 Nor Phœbus fed his oxen on the plain. Dryden, Pastorals.
 'Tis a rich soil, 't grant you; but oftener covered with weeds than grain. Collier on Fame.

As to the other grains, it is to be observed, as the wheat ripened very late, the barley got the start of it, and was ripe first. Burke on the Scarcity.

3. The seed of any fruit.

4. Any minute particle; any single body.

Thou exist'st on many thousand grains
 That issue out of dust. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

By intelligence

And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
 We see each grain of gravel. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

5. The smallest weight, of which in physick twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a pennyweight; and so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

Unity is a precious diamond, whose grains as they double, twice double in their value. Holyday.

They began at a known body, a barley-corn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which ariseth, being multiplied, to scruples, drachms, ounces and pounds. Holder.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air; the balance in the water weigheth only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abateth of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains:
 the balance kept the same depth in the water.

Bacon.

His brain

Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain.

Hudibras.

6. Any thing proverbially small.

For the whole world before thee is as a little grain of the balance. Wisd. xi. 22.

It is a sincerely pliable, ductile temper, that neglects not to make use of any grain of grace. Hammond.

The ungrateful person lives to himself, and subsists by the good nature of others, of which he himself has not the least grain. South.

7. GRAIN of Allowance. Something indulged or remitted; something above or under the exact weight. He, whose very best actions must be seen with grains of allowance, cannot be two mild, moderate, and forgiving.

Addison.
I would always give some grains of allowance to the sacred science of theology.

Watts on the Mind.

8. The direction of the fibres of wood, or other fibrous matter.

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shakspeare.

9. The body of the wood as modified by the fibres.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
Hard box, and linden of a softer grain. Dryden.

10. The body considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles.

The tooth of a sea-horse, in the midst of the solid parts, contains a curled grain not to be found in ivory. Brown.
Stones of a constitution so compact, and a grain so fine,
that they bear a fine polish. Woodward.

11. Died or stained substance.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,
Like crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser, Epithalam.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd,
Livelier than Melibeean, or the grain
Of sarra, worn by kings and heroes old. Milton, P. L.

Come pensive nun, devout and pure,
All in a robe of darkest grain,
Flowing with majestick train. Milton, Il. Pens.

The third, his feet
Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail,
Sky-tinctur'd grain! Milton, P. L.

12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour from the direction of fibres. This and the next sense are adopted from the eighth.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do than with what you should do,
Made you against the grain to voice him consul. Shakspeare.

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,
I see, to argue against the grain. Hudibras.

Old clients, weary'd out with fruitless care,
Dismiss their hopes of eating, and despair;
Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,
Buy roots for supper, and provide a fire. Dryden, Jun.

13. The heart; the bottom.

The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain. Hayward.

14. The form of the surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.

The smaller the particles of cutting substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but he they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton, Opticks.

15. A tine; a spike.

A grain-staff is a quarter-staff with a pair of short tines at the end, which they call grains.

Ray, E. and South Country Words.

The boatswain struck with a pair of grains out of the cabin window a most beautiful fish, about ten pounds' weight.

White's Journal, p. 36.

- To GRAIN.* v. n. [from the noun. Fr. grainer.] To yield fruit.

The londs began to greyne,
Which whilom had ben bare ne. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

- To GRAIN, or GRANE.* v. n. [Sax. granian.] To groan. Yorkshire dialect, and more conformable to the original word than groan.

GRAINED.* adj. [from grain.]

1. Rough; made less smooth.

Though now this grained face of mind be hid
In sap, consuming Winter's drizzled snow,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakspeare.

2. Dyed in grain.

Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul;
And there I see such black and grained spots,
As will not leave their tinct. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Persons lightly dipt, not grained in generous honesty, are but pale in goodness. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 9.

GRAINING.* n. s. [from grain.] Indentation.

It is called by some the unmilled guinea, as having no grain-ing upon the rim. Leake.

GRAINS. n. s. [without a singular.] The husks of malt exhausted in brewing.

Give them grains their fill,
Husks, draft, to drink and swill. B. Jonson, New Inn.

And greithen hem, and take hir horse anon,
And eke hir mele, and on hir way they gon. Chaucer, Ree's Tale.

GRAITH.* n. s. [Sax. geþæbe; Germ. gerath.] Furniture; equipage; goods; riches. North.

GRAM.* adj. [Sax. gram; old Fr. grams, "fâché, * en colere." Lacombe.] Angry. In our old lexicography, grame. See GRIM and GRUM.

GRAME'RCY.* interj. [contracted from grant me mercy. Dr. Johnson.—This is a mistake: It is the Fr. grand merci, great thanks. Our old lexicography thus explains it: "Gramercy to thee; which is a manner of thanksgiving among the vulgares." Huloet. Chaucer writes it after the original, "Grand mercy, lord, God thank it you, quoth she." Clerk's Tale.] An obsolete expression of obligation.

Gramercy, Mammon, said the gentle knight,
For so great grace. Spenser, F. Q.

Gramercy, sir, said he; but mote I weet
What strange adventure do ye now pursue? Spenser.

Gramercy, lovely Lucius, what's the news? Shakspeare.

We have our several psalms for several occasions, without gramercy to your liturgy. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

Madam, quoth he, gramercy for your care. Dryden, Cock and the Fox.

GRAMMAR.* n. s. [grammaire, French; grammatica, Latin; γραμματική.]

1. The science of speaking correctly; the art which teaches the relations of words to each other.

To be accurate in the grammar and idioms of the tongue, and then as a rhetorician to make all their graces serve his eloquence. Fell, Life of Hammond.

We make a countryman dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

- Men, speaking language according to the grammar rules of that language, do yet speak improperly of things. Locke.
2. Propriety or justness of speech; speech according to grammar.

Varium & mutabile semper femina, is the sharpest satire that ever was made on woman; for the adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make them grammar. Dryden.

3. The book that treats of the various relations of words to one another.

To speak and write without absurdity the language of one's country, is commendable in persons of all stations, and to some indispensably necessary; and to this purpose, I would recommend above all things the having a grammar of our mother tongue first taught in our schools, which would facilitate our youths learning their Latin and Greek grammars.

Tatler, No. 234.

GRAMMAR School. n. s. A school in which the learned languages are grammatically taught.

Thou hast most traiterously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

The ordinary way of learning Latin in a grammar school I cannot encourage. Locke.

To GRAMMAR.* v. n. To discourse according to the rules of grammar.

GRAMMATICAL. adj. [grammatical, Fr. grammaticus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to grammar.

The beauty of virtue still being set before their eyes, and that taught them with far more diligent care than grammatical rules. Sidney.

I shall take the number of consonants, not from the grammatical alphabets of any language, but from the diversity of sounds framed by single articulations with appulse. Holder.

2. Taught by grammar.

They seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless born with a poetical genius. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

GRAMMATICALLY. adv. [from grammatical.] According to the rules or science of grammar.

When a sentence is distinguished into the nouns, the verbs, pronouns, adverbs, and other particles of speech which compose it, then it is said to be analysed grammatically. Watts.

As grammar teacheth us to speak properly, so it is the part of rhetoric to instruct how to do it elegantly, by adding beauty to that language that before was naked and grammatically true. Baker on Learning.

GRAMMATICASTER.* n. s. [Latin.] A mean verbal pedant; a low grammarian.

He tells thee true, my noble neophyte; my little grammaticaster, he does! B. Jonson, Poetaster.

There would not then be so many fustian and unworthy preachers in divinity, so many petty loggers in law, so many quack-salvers in physick, so many grammaticasters in country schools. Sir W. Petty, Advice to Harlib, (1648,) p. 23.

I have not vexed language with the doubts, the remarks, and eternal triflings of the French grammaticasters. Rymer.

To GRAMMATICISE.* v. a. [from the Lat. grammaticus.] To render grammatical.

I always said, Shakspeare had Latin enough to grammaticise his English. Johnson, Boswell's Life of Johnson.

GRAMMATICA'TION.* n. s. [from the Lat. grammaticus.] Rule of grammar.

A language of a philosophical institution, or a real character, would be by much the most easy; as being free from all anomaly, equivocalness, redundancy, and unnecessary grammatications. Dalgarno, Didascaloph. (Ox. 1686,) p. 52.

GRAMMATICK.* adj. [Lat. grammaticus.] Pertaining to grammar.

They having but newly left those grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably to learn a few words with lamentable construction. Milton on Education.

We conclude, therefore, that what was thus inspired was the terms, and that grammatick congruity in the use of them, which is dependent thereon. Warburton, Doctrine of Grace.

GRAMMATIST.* n. s. [Lat. grammatista. & Græci grammaticum à grammatista distinguunt; et illum quidem absolutè, hunc mediocriter doctum existimant. V. Sueton. de Gramm. Illustr. cap. 4.] A grammaticaster.

Among colours, such as are soft or cheerful (except perhaps a strong red which is cheerful) are unfit to produce grand images. Burke of the Sublime and Beautiful, § 16.

6. It is used to signify ascent or descent of consanguinity.

GRANDAM. n. s. [grand and dam or dame.]

1. Grandmother; my father's or mother's mother.

I meeting him, will tell him that my lady
Was fairer than his grandam and as chaste
As may be in the world. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

We have our forefathers and great grandames all before us,
as they were in Chaucer's days. Dryden.

Thy tygres heart belies thy angel face:
Too well thou shew'st thy pedigree from stone;
Thy grandam's was the first by Pyrrha thrown. Dryden.

2. An old withered woman.

The women
Cry'd, one and all, the suppliant should have right,
And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight. Dryden.

GRANDCHILD. † n. s. [grand and child.] There is something very absurd in this. Grandfather is properly the great or greater father; but the case seems to be just the contrary with grand-child, who is the little or less child. The French therefore express it much more sensibly than we do, by petit fils. Pegge.] The son or daughter of my son or daughter; one in the second degree of descent.

Augustus Cæsar, out of indignation against his daughters and Agrippa his grandchild, would say that they were not his seed, but imposthumes broken from him. Bacon.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so
May great grandchildren of thy praises grow. Donne.
He hoped his majesty did believe, that he would never make the least scruple to obey the grandchild of king James. Clarendon.

Fair daughter, and thou son and grandchild both!
Milton, P. L.

He 'scaping with his gods and reliques fled,
And tow'rs the shore his little grandchild led. Denham.

GRANDDAUGHTER. † n. s. [grand and daughter.] The daughter of a son or daughter.

This grandaughter of a man, who will be an everlasting glory to the nation, has now for some years with her husband kept a little chandler's or grocer's shop for their subsistence. Bp. Newton, Life of Milton.

GRANDEUR. † n. s. [grand, French; grandis, Latin.] At first our word was grandy.] A man of great rank, power, or dignity.

In a great person, right worshipful sir, a right honourable
.. grandy, 'tis not a venial sin; no, not a peccadillo!
Burton, Anal. of Mel. To the Reader.

In this mercy-seat, it is observable, three grandies are met together; blessing, joy, and hope; and yet there is no strife for precedence. Abp. Laud, Serm. p. 83.

They had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an interview of grandees, both vehement on the parts which they sway'd. Wotton.

When a prince or grandee manifests a liking to such a thing, men generally set about to make themselves considerable for such things. South.

Some parts of the Spanish monarchy are rather for ornament than strength: they furnish out viceroalties for the grandees, and posts of honour for the noble families. Addison.

GRANDESHIP. * n. s. [from grandee.] The rank, or estate, of a grandee; a lordship.

I think the Conde de Altamira has no less than nineteen grandeships centered in his person. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 42.

GRANDEVITY. n. s. [from grandævus, Latin.] Great age; length of life. Dict.

GRANDEVIOUS. adj. [grandævus, Latin.] Long lived; of great age. Dict.

GRANDEUR. † n. s. [French.]

1. State; splendour of appearance; magnificence.

As a magistrate or great officer, he locks himself from all approaches by the multiplied formalities of attendance, by the distance of ceremony and grandeur. South.

2. Greatness, as opposed to minuteness.

Let a man try to conceive the different bulk of an animal, which is twenty, from another, which is a hundred times less than a mite; or to compare, in his thoughts, a length of a thousand diameters of the earth with that of a million; and he will quickly find that he has no different measures in his mind adjusted to such extraordinary degrees of grandeur or minuteness. Addison, Spect. No. 420.

3. Elevation of sentiment, language, or mien.

To want little is true grandeur; and very few things are great to a great mind. Taller, No. 170.

GRANDFATHER. n. s. [grand and father.] The father of my father or mother; the next above my father or mother in the scale of ascent.

One was saying that his great grandfather, and grandfather, and father died at sea: said another, that heard him, an' I were as you, I would never come at sea. Why, saith he, where did your great grandfather, and grandfather, and father die? He answered, where but in their beds? He answered, an' I were as you, I would never come in bed. Bacon.

Our grandchildren will see a few rags hung up in Westminster-hall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boast that their grandfathers were rich and great. Swift.

GRANDIFICK. adj. [grandis and facio, Latin.] Making great. Dict.

GRANDILOQUENCE. * n. s. [Lat. grandis, great, and loquor, to speak. In our old lexicography, the word is grandiloquy.] High, lofty, big speaking. Cockeram, and Scott.

GRANDILOQUOUS. * adj. [Lat. grandiloquus.] Using lofty words. Cockeram.

GRANDINOUS. adj. [grando, Latin.] Full of hail; consisting of hail. Dict.

GRANDITY. n. s. [from grandis, Latin.] Greatness; grandeur; magnificence. An old word.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness. Candem, Rem.

GRANDLY. * adv. [from grand.] Sublimely; loftily. I now saw what I never saw before, a prodigious sea, with immense billows, coming upon a vessel, so as that it seemed hardly possible to escape. There was something grandly horrible in the sight. Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides, p. 348.

GRANDMOTHER. n. s. [grand and mother.] The mother of my father or mother.

Thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice. 1 Tim. i. 5.

GRANDNESS. * n. s. [from grand.] Greatness.

In order to prove to any one the grandness of this fabrick of the world, one needs only to bid him consider the sun. Wallaston, Rel. of Nat. § v. 14.

GRANDSIRE. n. s. [grand and sire.]

1. Grandfather.

Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,
Whercin my grandsire and my father sat? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Thy grandsire, and his brother, to whom fame
Gave, from two conquer'd parts o' th' world, their name. Denham.

The wreaths his grandsire knew to reap
By active toil and military sweat. Prior.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster? Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Above the portal, carv'd in cedar wood,

So mimic ancient wits at best,
As apes our grandsires in their doublets drest. Pope.

GRANDSON. n. s. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy store,
Give much to you, and to his grandsons more. Dryden.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes. Swift.

To GRANE. * To groan. See To GRAIN.

GRANGE.† n. s. [grange, French; low Lat. grangia; probably from grana gerenda, the grange being in former times the place where the rents of monasteries were paid in grain, which was there stored up; the custody of which was assigned to one of the monks, who was called grangiarus; and hence grange means simply a granary also, though Dr. Johnson takes no notice of the distinction. The grange, in Lincolnshire, and other northern counties, signifies any lone house; and, in some places, bears with it the name of the village or town to which it is near.]

1. A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, said he;—the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

It is only the poor grange,

The patrimony which my father left me,

I would be tenant to.

Beaumont and Fl. The Prophetess.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate: and of this sort were their granges and priories.

Ayliffe.

2. A granary. [Fr. grange, a barn. Cotgrave.]

Methought it was the sound

Of riot and ill-manag'd merriment,
Such as the jocund flute, or gamesome pipe,
Stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds;
When for their teeming flocks, and granges full,
In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan.

Milton, Comus.

GRA'NITE. n. s. [granit, Fr. from granum, Lat. because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcifiable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moor-stone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall it is found in prodigious masses, and brought to London, for the steps of public buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish.

Hill on Fossils.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite.

Woodward.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple.

Addison on Italy.

GRANITICAL.* adj. [from granite.] Consisting of granite.

Viewed at a distance, this enormous mass of stone has the appearance of a human figure; and its gigantic form has given rise to a variety of fables. On approaching it, we find that it consists of several ledges of granite, piled one upon another in the rudest manner. If, however, we bow down to this granitic god, we shall meet deities at every step.

Polakoff, Hist. of Devonsh. vol. i. P. i.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bills, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without mastication.

Brown.

Panick affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

GRAN'NAM.† n. s. [for grandam.] Grandmother.

Only used in ludicrous or low language.

Her mother goodwy' Polish has confess'd it

To granum Keep, the nurse, how they did change

The children in their cradles. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Ghosts never walk till after midnight, if I may believe my granmam.

Beaumont and Fl. Lover's Progress.

I stripped again, as well to find what ailed me, as to satisfy my granam's further curiosity.

Tatler, No. 15.

Oh my kind granmam told me, Tim, take warning.

Gay.

To GRANT.† v. a. [from garantin, French, Junius and Skinner; perhaps, as Minshew thinks, from gratuito, or rather from gratia or gratificor.

Dr. Johnson.—It is directly from the old French verb, granter, or grauunter, to promise, to satisfy. V. Roquesfort, Gloss. in V. GRANTER. Probably from the Latin gratum, what is agreeable. Our word at first, like the French, was graunt, and so continued to be late in the seventeenth century.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant, that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church.

Hooker.

I take it for granted, that though the Greek word which we translate saints, be in itself as applicable to things as persons; yet in this article it signifieth not holy things, but holy ones.

Pearson.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree,

The Trojan race to reign in Italy.

Dryden, Æn.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire

A moment elder than my rival fire,

Can chance of seeing first thy title prove?

Dryden.

If he be one indifferant as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man.

Addison, Frecholder.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him.

1 Sam. xvii.

Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

Acts, xiii. 18.

Did'st thou not kill this king?

— I grant ye.

— Do'st grant me, hedgehog? Then God grant me too,

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

He heard, and granted half his prayer;

The rest the winds dispers'd.

Pope.

GRANT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.
2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.

Courtiers juggle for a grant,

And when they break their friendship plead their want.

Dryden.

3. [In law.] A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politic; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth it is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed.

Cowell.

All the land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shewed from her majesty.

Spenser on Ireland.

Not only the laws of this kingdom, but of other places, and the Roman laws, provide that the prince should not be deceived in his grants.

Davenant.

4. CONCESSION; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage.

Hooker.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before.

Dryden.

GRANTABLE.† adj. [from grant.] That which may be granted.

The office of the bishop's chancellor was grantable for life.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

I will inquire therefore in what cases dispensations are grantable, and by whom.

Bp. of London's (Sherlock) Charge, 1759, p. 6.

GRANTE'E. n. s. [from grant.] He to whom any grant is made.

To smooth the way for popery in Mary's time, the grantees were confirmed by the pope in the possession of the abbey-lands.

Swift.

GRANTOR. n. s. [from grant.] He by whom a grant is made.

A duplex querela shall not be granted under pain of suspension of the grantor from the execution of his office.

Ayliffe.

GRANULARY. adj. [from granule.] Small and compact; resembling a small grain or seed.

Small-coal, with sulphur and nitre, proportionably mixed, tempered, and formed into granulary bodies, do make up that powder which is in use for guns.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To GRANULATE. v. n. [granuler, French, from granum, Latin.] To be formed into small grains.

The juice of grapes, inspissated by heat, granulates into sugar.

Sprat.

To GRANULATE.† v. a.

1. To break into small masses or granules.

Most of the Scheemnitz silver ore holds some gold, which they separate by melting the silver, then granulating it.

Brown's Travels, p. 59.

2. To raise into small asperities.

I have observed, in many birds, the gullet, before its entrance into the gizzard, to be much dilated, and thick set, or as it were granulated with a multitude of glandules, each whereof was provided with its excretory vessel.

Ray.

GRANULATION. n. s. [granulation, French, from granulate.]

1. The act of pouring melted metal into cold water, so as it may granulate or congeal into small grains: it is generally done through a colander, or a birchen broom. Gunpowder and some salts are likewise said to be granulated, from their resemblance to grain or seed.

Quincy.

2. The act of shooting or breaking in small masses.

Tents in wounds, by resisting the growth of the little granulations of the flesh, in process of time harden them, and in that manner produce a fistula.

Sharp, Surgery.

GRANULE. n. s. [from granum, Latin.] A small compact particle.

With an excellent microscope, where the naked eye did see but a green powder, the assisted eye could discern particular granules, some blue, and some yellow.

Bayle on Colours.

GRANULOUS. adj. [from granule.] Full of little grains.

GRAPE. n. s. [grappe, French; krappe, Dutch.] The fruit of the vine, growing in clusters; the fruit from which wine is expressed.

And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger.

Lev. xix. 10.

Anacreon, for thy sake
I of the grape no mention make;

Ere my Anacreon by thee fell,
Cursed plant, I lov'd thee well.

Cowley.

Here are the vines in early flow'r descri'd,
Here grapes discolour'd on the sunny side.

Pope, Odys.

GRAPE Hyacinth, or GRAPE Flower. n. s. A flower.

GRAPE Shot.* n. s. In artillery, a combination of small shot, put into a thick canvass bag, and corded strongly together, so as to form a kind of cylinder, the diameter of which is equal to that of the ball which is adapted to the cannon.

Chambers.

GRAPELESS.* adj. [grape and less.] Wanting the strength and flavour of the grape.

The entertainment consisted of cold fish, lean chickens, rusty hams, raw venison, and grapeless wines.

Jennys.

GRAPESTONE. n. s. [grape and stone.] The stone or seed contained in the grape.

When obedient nature knows his will,

A fly, a grapestone, or a hair can kill.

Prior.

GRAPHICAL.† adj. [γράφω.] Well delineated.

Write with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young; for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In this so graphical a description of the Son of God, clothed in all the pomp and majesty of his Father, the attitude is most observable: "His right foot" was on the sea, and his left on the earth.

Warburton, Serm. xx.

GRAPHICALLY.† adv. [from graphical.] In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation.

After it, succeeded their third dance; than which a more numerous composition could not be seen; graphically disposed into letters, and honouring the name of the most sweet and ingenious prince, Charles duke of York.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Very rhetorical delineations follow their miseries by this invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, graphically as in a map described.

Bp. Richardson, on the O. Test. p. 419.

The hyena odorata, or civet cat, is delivered and graphically described by Castellus.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GRAPHICK.* adj.

1. Graphical.

He can

Find all our atoms from a point t' a span;
Our closest creeks and corners; and can trace
Each line, as it were graphick, in the face.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. Relating to engraving.

Availing himself of his poetical talent, and his facility in the graphick art.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. ii. 157.

GRAPHO'METER.* n. s. [Fr. graphomètre, from the Gr. γράφω, to write, and μέτρον, a measure.] A surveying instrument.

As for the bearings and distances, they are very different from those I have given, which answered in every part, almost as exactly as if I had surveyed a field with a graphometer.

Drummond, Trav. (1749,) p. 244.

GRAPNEL.† n. s. [grappil, and grappin, Fr. the grapple of a ship. Cotgrave.]

1. A small anchor belonging to a little vessel.

2. A grappling iron with which in fight one ship fastens on another.

With grisly soune out goeth the grete gunne —
In goth the grapnel so ful of crokes.

Chaucer, Leg. of Cleopatra.

To GRAPPLE.† v. n. [grabbelen, Dutch; kruppeln, German. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the M. Goth. greipan, to seize, to lay hold of any thing; Su. Goth. gripan; Sax. gripan.]

1. To contend by seizing each other, as wrestlers.

Your grace and I

Must grapple upon even terms no more.

Bacon, and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

G R A

They must be also practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tug or grapple, and to close.

Milton on Education.

Living virtue, all achievements past,
Meets envy, still to grapple with at last.

Waller.

Does he think that he can grapple with divine vengeance, and endure the everlasting burnings?

South.

Antæus here and stern Alcides strive,
And both the grappling statures seem to live.

Addison.

2. To contest in close fight.

I'll in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Sometimes, from fighting squadrons of each fleet,
Two grappling Ætnas on the ocean meet,
And English fires with Belgian flames contend.

Dryden.

To GRA'PPLE. v. a.

1. To fasten; to fix; to join indissolubly. Now obsolete.

Grapple your minds to sternage of the navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

That business
Grapples you to the heart and love of us.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. To seize; to lay fast hold of.

For hippagines, vessels for the transporting of horse, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for grappling hooks to Apacharis.

Heylyn.

GRA'PPLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Contest hand to hand, in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestlers hold.

As when earth's son, Antæus, strove
With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose
Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd,
Throttled at length in the air, expir'd and fell.

Milton, P. R.

Or did his genius

Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate.

To skulk behind my sword.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

2. Close fight.

In the grapple I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.

But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd.

Dryden.

GRA'PPLEMENT. n. s. [from grapple.] Close fight;
hostile embrace. Not in use.

They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overthrew, and down him stay'd
With their rude hands and grisly grapplement.

Spenser, F. Q.

GRA'PY.  adj.* [Fr. grappu.]

1. Full of clusters of grapes.

Cotgrave.

The grapy clusters spread
On his fair brows, and dangle on his head.

Addison, Ovid.

2. Made of the grape.

And on the marble altar's polish'd frame
Pours forth the grapy stream.

Gay, Ovid.

GRASHOPPER. † n. s. [grass and hop.] A small insect that hops in the summer grass. The cicada of the Latins is often by the poets translated grashopper, but improperly.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The cover of the wings of grashoppers.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Grashoppers eat up the green of whole countries. Bacon.
While cicada is rendered a grashopper, we commonly think that which is so called among us to be the true cicada; wherein, as we have elsewhere declared, there is a great mistake; for we have not the cicada in England, and indeed no proper word for that animal, which the French nameth égale: That which we commonly call a grashopper, and the

G R A

French sautterelle, being one kind of locust, so rendered in the plague of Egypt, and in old Saxon named gerithop.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 109.

Where grass lakes, with verdant shadows crown'd,

Disperse a grateful chillness all around;

The grashopper avoids th' untainted air,

Nor in the midst of summer ventures there.

Addison.

The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grashoppers before them.

Addison, Spect.

GRA'SIER. † n. s. One who feeds cattle. See GRAZIER.

He was by turns a fiddler and a farmer, a grasier and a poet, with equal success.

Warton, Hist. Eng. Poet. iii. 299.

To GRASP. v. a. [graspere, Italian.]

1. To hold in the hand; to gripe.

O fool that I am, that thought I could grasp water and bind the wind.

Sidney.

In his right hand
Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent
Before him, such as in their souls infix'd Plagues.

Milton, P. L.

Kings, by grasping more than they could hold,
First made their subjects, by oppression, hold.

Denham.

Doom, as they please, my empire not to stand,
I'll grasp my sceptre with my dying hand.

Dryden, Ind. Emperor.

2. To seize; to catch at.

This grasping of the militia of the kingdom into their own hands, was desired the summer before.

Clarendon.

For what are men who grasp at praise sublime,
But bubbles on the rapid stream of time?

Young.

To GRASP. v. n.

1. To catch; to endeavour to seize; to try at.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less.

Swift.

2. To struggle; to strive; to grapple. Not now in use.

See, his face is black and full of blood;
His hands abroad display'd, as one that graspt
And tugg'd for life.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. To gripe; to encroach.

Like a miser 'midst his store,
Who grasps and grasps till he can hold no more.

Dryden.

GRASP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The gripe or seizure of the hand.

Nor wanted in his grasp.

What seem'd both spear and shield.

Milton.

This hand and sword have been acquainted well;

It should have come before into my grasp,

To kill the ravisher.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

The left arm is a little defaced, though one may see it held something in its grasp formerly.

Addison on Italy.

2. Possession; hold.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st

For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,

And the rich East to boot.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. Power of seizing.

Within the direful grasp

Of savage hunger, or of savage heat.

Milton, Comus.

They looked upon it as their own, and had it even within their grasp.

Clarendon.

GRA'SPER. † n. s. [from grasp.] One that grasps, seizes, or catches at.

Sherwood.

GRASS. † n. s. [græp, Sax. gras, Goth. græs, Icel.
from gro, to germinate, to sprout.] The common herbage of the field on which cattle feed; an herb with long narrow leaves.

Ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bulls.

Ser. l. ii.

The beef being young, and only grass fed, was thin, light, and moist, and not of a substance to endure the salt.

Temple.

You'll be no more your former you;

But for a blooming nymph will pass,
Just fifteen, coming Summer's grass.

Swift.

GRASS of Parnassus. n. s. [parnassia, Latin.] A plant.

This plant is called parnassia from mount Parnassus, where it was supposed to grow; and because the cattle feed on it, it obtained the name of grass, though the plant has no resemblance to the grass kind. Miller.

To GRASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed grass; to become pasture.

Land arable, driven, or worn to the proof,
With cats ye may sow it, the sooner to grass,
More soon to be pasture, to bring it to pass. Tusser.

GRASS-GREEN.* adj. [grass and green.] Green with grass.

He is dead and gone, lady,
He is dead and gone;
At his head a grass-green turf,
At his heels a stone. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

He lyes him to the fatal place,
Where Margaret's body lay;
And stretch'd him on the grass-green turf,
That wapt her breathless clay. Mallet, William and Margaret.

GRASS-GROWN.* adj. [grass and grown.] Grown over with grass.

Desolating Famine, who delights
In grass-grown cities, and in desert fields. Thomson, Liberty, P. iv.

Desolation o'er the grass-grown street
Expands his raven wings. Akenide, Pleas. of Imog. B. 2.
If a friend my grass-grown threshold find,
O, how my lovely cot resounds with gloe! Shenstone, Eleg. 7.

GRASS-LOT. n. s. [grass and plot.] A small level covered with short grass.

Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
Come and sport. Shakespeare, Tempest.
The part of your garden next your house should be a parterre for flowers, or grass-plots bordered with flowers. Temple.

They are much valued by our modern planters, to adorn their walks and grass-plots. Mortimer.

GRASS-POLY. n. s. A species of Willow-wort.

GRASSATION.* n. s. [Lat. grassatio.] A ranging about to do wrong.

If in vice there be a perpetual grassation, there must be in virtue a perpetual vigilance. Feltham, Res. ii. 8.

GRASSLESS.* adj. [grass and less.] Wanting grass.

The wintrie snow had covered all their greene, Nought else upon the grassless ground but winter's waste was scene. Mir. for Mag. p. 556.

GRASSINESS. n. s. [from grassy.] The state of abounding in grass.

GRASSY. adj. [from grass.] Covered with grass; abounding with grass.

No did he leave the mountains bare unseen,
Nor the rank grassy fens delights untry'd. Spenser.

Rais'd of grassy turf
Their table was, and mossy seats had round. Milton, P. L.
The most in fields, like herded beasts, lie down,
To dew obnoxious, on the grassy floor. Dryden.

GRATE. n. s. [exates, Lat.]

1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other: such as are in cloysters or prisons.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch-fellow, Nim; or else you had looked through the grate, like a gemmy of baboons. Shakespeare.

Out at a little grate his eyes he cast
Upon those bounding hills, and open plain. Daniel.
A fan has on it a number of lively black-eyed vestals, who are endeavouring to creep out at the grates. Addison.

2. The range of bars within which fires are made.
My dear is of opinion that an old fashioned grate consumes coals, but gives no heat. Spectator.

VOL. II.

To GRATE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up with bars. Sherwood.

To GRATE. v. a. [grater, Fr.]

1. To rub or wear any thing by the attrition of a rough body.

Threat the fiend his gnashing teeth did grate. Spenser.
Blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

If the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton, Opticks.

2. To offend by any thing harsh or vexatious.

Threat enraged, soon he got upstart,
Grinding his teeth, and grating his great heart. Spenser.
They have been partial in the gospel, culled and chosen out those softer and more gentle dictates which should less grate and disturb them. Decay of Piety.

Just resentment and hard usage coin'd
Th' unwilling word; and, grating as it is,
Take it, for 'tis thy due. Dryden, Don Sebast.

This habit of writing and discoursing, wherein I unfortunately differ from almost the whole kingdom, and am apt to grate the ears of more than I could wish, was acquired during my apprenticeship in London. Swift.

3. To form a sound by collision of asperities or hard bodies.

The grating shock of wrathful iron arms. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
The infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook
Of Erebus. Milton, T. L.

To GRATE. v. n.

1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend; to offend, as by oppression or importunity.

Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been importuned to grate on you,
That you should seal this lawless bloody book
Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, or else you had looked through the grate. Shakespeare.

Paradoxing is of great use; but the faculty must be so tenderly managed as not to grate upon the truth and reason of things. L'Estrange.

This grated harder upon the hearts of men.
I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have filled their lives with discontent. Locke.

2. To make a harsh noise, as that of a rough body drawn over another.

We are not so nice as to cast away a sharp knife, because the edge of it may sometimes grate. Hooker.

GRATE.* adj. [Fr. grate, "grateful," Cotgrave; Lat. gratus.] Agreeable. Not now in use; but if ingrate, as Dr. Johnson asserts, be proper for what is unpleasing to the sense, grate for what is the contrary seems also to be proper.

It becomes grate and delicious enough by custom. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 311.

GRATEFUL. adj. [gratus, Lat.]

1. Having a due sense of benefits; willing to acknowledge and to repay benefits.

A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays. Milton, P. L.
When some degree of health was given, he exerted all his strength in a return of grateful recognition to the author of it. Fell, Life of Hammond.

Years of service past,
From grateful souls exact reward at last. Dryden, Fob.

2. Plesing; acceptable; delightful; delicious.

Whatsoever is ingrate at first, is made grateful by custom; but whatsoever is too pleasing at first, groweth quickly to satiate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A man will endure the pain of hunger and thirst, and refuse such meats and drinks as are most grateful to his appetite, if he be persuaded that they will endanger his health. Wilkins.

This place is the more grateful to strangers in respect that it being a frontier town, and bordering upon divers nations, many languages are understood here. Brown, Travels.

Now golden fruits on loaded branches shine, And grateful clusters swell with floods of wine. Pope.

GRA'TEFULLY. adv. [from grateful.]

1. With willingness to acknowledge and repay benefits; with due sense of obligation.

He, as new wak'd, thus gratefully replied. Milton, P. L.

Enough remains for household charge beside,

His wife and tender children to sustain,

And gratefully to feed his dumb deserving train. Dryden, Virg.

In Cyprus long by men and gods obey'd,

The lover's toil she gratefully repaid. Grayville.

2. In a pleasing manner.

Study detains the mind, by the perpetual occurrence of something new, which may gratefully strike the imagination. Watts.

GRA'TEFULNESS. † n. s. [from grateful.]

1. Gratitude; duty to benefactors. Now obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, citing Sidney and Herbert. The authority of others, especially of Pope, might have been added to defend the usage of the word. Nor is it yet, perhaps, disused.

A Laconian knight having sometime served him with more gratefulness than good courage defended him. Sidney.

Blessings beforehand, ties of gratefulness,

The sound of glory ringing in our ears. Herbert.

I am pitch'd so high,

To such a growth of full prosperities,

That, to conceal my fortunes, were an injury

To gratefulness, and those more liberal favours

By whom my glories prosper. Beaumont and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

He [Ferdinand] died poor, but honest; leaving no debts, or legacies, except of a few pounds to Mr. Trumbull and my lady, in token of respect, gratefulness, and mutual esteem. Pope, Lett. to Broome.

2. Quality of being acceptable; pleasantness.

GRA'TER. n. s. [gratoir, Fr. from grate.] A kind of coarse file with which soft bodies are rubbed to powder.

Tender handed touch a nettle,

And it stings you for your pains,

Grasp it like a man of nettle,

And it soft as silk remains.

So it is with common natures,

Treat them gently, they rebel,

But be rough as nutmeg-graters,

And the rogues obey you well. A. Hill.

GRATIFICATION. † n. s. [gratification, Fr. gratificatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pleasing.

They are incapable of any design above the present gratification of their palates. South.

2. Pleasure; delight.

How hardly is his will brought to change all its desires and aversions, and to renounce those gratifications in which he has been long used to place his happiness? Rogers.

3. Reward; recompence. A low word.

Calling drunkenness, good fellowship; pride, comeliness; rage, valour; bribery, gratification.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633) p. 233.

TO GRA'TIFY. † v. a. [gratifier, old Fr. gratificor, Latin.]

1. To indulge; to please by compliance.

You steer between the country and the court,

Nor gratify what'er the great desire,

Nor grudging give what publick needs require. Dryden.

2. To delight; to please; to humour; to soothe.

But pride stood ready to prevent the blow;

For who would die to gratify a foe! Dryden, Fab.

The captive generals to his car are ty'd;

The joyful citizens tumultuous tide

Echoing his glory, gratify his pride. Prior.

A palled appetite is humorous, and must be gratified with sauces rather than food. Tatler.

At once they gratify their scent and taste,

While frequent cups prolong the rich repast. Pope.

A thousand little impertinencies are very gratifying to curiosity, though not improving to the understanding. Addison.

3. To requite with a recompence: as, I'll gratify you for this trouble.

GRA'TING.  n. s.* [from grate.]

1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other; as, the iron gratings of a prison.

2. In a ship, gratings are small ledges of sawed plank on the upper deck.

GRA'TINGLY. adv. [from grate.] Harshly; offensively.

GRATIS. adv. [Latin.] For nothing; without a recompence.

The people cry you mock'd them; and of late,

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Shakespeare.

They sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee. Shakespeare.

The taking of use, though he judged lawful, yet never approved by practice, but lent still gratis both to friends and strangers. Fell, Life of Hammond.

Kindred are no welcome clients, where relation gives them a title to have advice gratis. L'Estrange.

I scorned to take my degree at Utrecht or Leyden, though offered it gratis by those universities. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

GRA'TITUDE. n. s. [gratitudo, low Latin.]

1. Duty to benefactors.

Forbid

That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude

Tow'rd her deserving children is enroll'd,

Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare, Coriol.

Suspicious thoughts his pensive mind employ,

A sullen gratitude, and clouded joy. Harte.

2. Desire to return benefits.

The debt immense of endless gratitude. Milton, P. L.

Gratitude is properly a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense and an outward acknowledgment of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, or the like. South, Sermon.

GRATUITOUS. adj. [gratuitus, Latin; gratuit, Fr.]

1. Voluntary; granted without claim or merit.

We mistake the gratuitous blessings of heaven for the fruits of our own industry. L'Estrange.

2. Asserted without proof.

The second motive they had to introduce this gratuitous declination of atoms, the same poet gives us. Ray.

GRATUITOUSLY. adv. [from gratuitous.]

1. Without claim or merit.

2. Without proof.

I would know whence came this obliquity of direction, which they gratuitously tack to matter: this is to ascribe will and choice to these particles. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

GRATU'ITY. n. s. [gratuité, Fr. from gratuitous.] A present or acknowledgment; a free gift.

They might have pretended to comply with Ulysses, and dismissed him with a small gratuity. Broome on the Odyssey.

He used every year to present us with his almanack, upon the score of some little gratuit we gave him. Swift.

TO GRATULATE. † v. z. [gratulator, Latin.]

1. To congratulate; to salute with declarations of joy.

To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admires. M. Andronicus.
Whither away so fast?

— No farther than the Tower,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Envy itself cannot but gratulate the church of England that is so furnished with learned bishops.

Sir J. Harrington, Br. View of the Church, p. 10.
Since nature could behold so dire a crime,
I gratulate at least my native clime,
That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore. Dryden, Fab.

2. To declare joy for; to mention with expressions of joy.

Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy scape from rumour gratulate,
No less than if from pestil; and devout,
Do beg thy care unto thy after state. B. Jonson.

3. To reward. Not now in use.

A thanks to ev'ry one; and to gratulate
So great a service done at my desire,
Ye shall have many floods fuller and higher Than you have wish'd for. Ben Jonson, and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.
I could not chuse but gratulate your honest endeavours with this remembrance. Heywood, Apol. for Actors.

GRATULATIO'N. n. s. [from gratulation, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.

They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him. Hooker.

The earth
Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Milton, P. L.
Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a Christian desire, require no addition; I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their fulness, only wish their continuance. South, Sermon.

GRA'TULATORY.† adj. [from gratulate.]

1. Congratulatory; expressing congratulation.

After a short preamble gratulatory, and signifying his majesty's summons. Conference at Hampton Court, (1602), p. 23.
There is a gratulatory gift, when one sendeth to another to testify their love and joy. Willet, Treat. of Salomon's Marriage, p. 31.

2. Expressing thanks.

They make a gratulatory oration unto God, for that he has been pleased to assist and accept their services.

tent with gratulatory, after the Protestant way.

Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 54.

GRAVE, a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon græf, a grove or cave.

Gibson's Camden.

GRAVE.† n. s.

1. The place in the ground in which the dead are reposed. [græf, græf, Sax. from græpan, to dig;
græfa, Icel. graban, Goth. and thus the Germ.
grab, a grave; and perhaps all may be referred to the Heb. kaber, a grave. Graves were formerly called by the English pits.]

Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spright,
In the church-way paths to glide. Shakespeare.
Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave. Milton, P. L.

To walk upon the graves of our dead masters,
Is our own security. Denham, Sophy.

A flood of waters would overwhelm all those fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave
all the inhabitants of the earth. Burnet.

They were wont once a year to meet at the graves of the martyrs: there solemnly, to recite their sufferings and triumphs, to praise their virtues, to bless God for their pious examples, for their holy lives and their happy deaths. Nelson.

2. In the plural only, graves is a word used to signify the sediment of tallow melted for the making of candles.

3. [graf, Germ. A count; low. Lat. gravius, and gra-phio.] A ruler; usually in composition, as land-grave, margrave.

GRAVE-CLOTHES. n. s. [grave and clothes.] The dress of the dead.

But of such subtle substance and unsound,
That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-clothes were unbound. Spenser.

And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes. St. John, xi. 44.

GRAVE-DIGGER.* n. s. [grave and digger.] One who digs graves.

Shakspeare, who was a great copier of nature, whenever he introduces any artisans, or low characters, into his plays, never fails to dash them strongly with some distinguishing stain of humour; as may be seen more remarkably in the scene of the grave-diggers in Hamlet. Guardian, No. 144.

GRAVE-MAKER.* n. s. [grave and maker.] A gravedigger.

When you are asked this question next, say a grave-maker;
the houses that he makes last till doomsday. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

If you would hear more of this rare physician, and his feats,
(for I am sick of him,) enquire of sad families, and merry grave-makers. Whitlock, Mem. of the Eng. p. 100.

GRAVE-STONE.† n. s. [grave and stone.] The stone that is laid over the grave; the monumental stone.

Timon, presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone daily. Shakspeare, Timon.
The grave-stone of Christ's tomb was sealed. Ep. Hall, Rem. p. 132.

To GRAVE.† v. a. preter. graved; part. pass.
graven.

1. To dig. [Sax. græpan. See GRAVE. This is the primary sense, which Dr. Johnson has overpassed.
To grave is our northern expression for to break up ground with a spade.

He hath graven and digged up a pit.

Ps. vii. 16. Comm. Prayer.

2. To insculp; to carve a figure or inscription in any hard substance. [græpan, Sax. graven, Dutch;
graver, Fr. graver, Gr.]

O! may they graven in thy heart remain,

Be humble and be just.

Prior.

3. To carve or form.

What profiteth the graven image, that the maker thereof hath graven it? Heb. ii. 18.

4. To copy paintings upon wood or metal, in order to be impressed on paper.

The gravers can and ought to imitate the bodies of the colours by the degrees of the lights and shadows: 'tis impossible to give much strength to what they grave, after the works of the schools, without imitating in some sort the colour of the objects. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

5. [From grave.] To entomb. Not now in use, but formerly common in this sense, among our writers, from Gower to Shakspeare.

There's more gold :

Do you damn others, and let this damn you ;

And ditches grave you all !

Shakespeare, Timon.

6. To clean, caulk, and sheath a ship. Ainsworth.

To GRAVE. v. n. To write or delineate on hard substances.

GRAVE. adj. [grave, French ; gravis, Latin.]

1. Solemn ; serious ; sober ; not gay ; not light or trifling.

To the more mature,

A glass that featu'd them ; and to the grave,

A child that guided dotards.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

We should have else desir'd

Your good advice, which still hath been both grave

And prosperous, in this day's council. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

That grave awfulness, as in your best breed of mastives, or elegance and prettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty.

More against Atheism.

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity.

Dryden, Fab. Pref.

Youth on silent wings is flown ;

Graver years come rolling on.

Prior.

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace ;

And to be grave, exceeds all power of face.

Pope.

Folly-painting humour, grave himself,

Calls laughter forth.

Thomson

They have as much reason to pretend to, and as much necessity to aspire after, the highest accomplishments of a Christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest among Christian philosophers.

Law.

2. Of weight ; not futile ; credible. Little used.

The Roman state was of all others the most celebrated for their virtue, as the gravest of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear them witness.

Grew, Cosmol.

3. Not showy ; not tawdry : as, a grave suit of cloaths.

4. Not sharp of sound ; not acute.

Accent, in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice ; the acute accent raising the voice, in some syllables, to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation.

Holder.

GRAVEL. n. s. [gravier, French ; gravel, Dutch ; gravel, Armorick.]

1. Hard sand ; sand consisting of very small pebble-stones.

Gravel consists of flints of all the usual sizes and colours, of the several sorts of pebbles ; sometimes with a few pyrites, and other mineral bodies, confusedly intermixed, and common sand. Woodward.

His armour, all gilt, was so well handled, that it shewed like a glittering sand and gravel, interlaced with silver rivers.

Sidney.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when

We see each grain of gravel.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Providence permitted not the earth to spend itself in base gravel and pebbles, instead of quarries of stones.

More.

So deep, and yet so clear, we might behold

The gravel bottom, and that bottom gold.

Dryden.

The upper garden at Kensington was at first nothing but a gravel pit.

Spectator.

Gravel walks are best for fruit-trees.

Mortimer.

2. [gravelle, French.] Sandy matter concreted in the kidneys.

If the stone is brittle it will often crumble, and pass in the form of gravel ; if the stone is too big to pass, the best method is to come to a sort of a composition or truce with it.

Arbutnot.

To GRAVEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pave or cover with gravel.

Moss groweth upon alleys, especially such as lie cold, and upon the North, as in divers terrasses ; and again, if they be much trodden, or if they were at the first gravelled.

To GRA'VITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the centre of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursu'd,
That matter is with active force endu'd,
That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert,
And to each other gravitate, assert. Blackmore.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITA'TION. n. s. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope.

GRA'VITY. n. s. [gravitas, Latin; gravité, French.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unsolvable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specifick gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastick tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton, Opticks.

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hopker.

3. Seriousness; solemnity

There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

For the advocates and council that plead, patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of justice. Bacon.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd. Dryden, Æn.
The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity. Addison.

He will tell you with great gravity, that it is a dangerous thing for a man that has been used to get money, ever to leave it off. Law.

GRA'VY.† n. s. [krav, Cambro-Brit. grav, Germ. crur, blood, Sereisius.] The serous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

Meat we love half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey on Consumption.

There may be a stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GRAY.† adj. [græz, Saxon; grau, Danish; grau, Germ. and Dutch. Mr. H. Tooke thinks that it is from the Sax. gepegnan, to dye, to colour.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray hooded even,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton, Comus.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton, Opticks.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grisly, and many others. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton, Life of Bp. Sanderson.

Anon
Gray headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,
Assemble. Milton, P. L.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glanville, Scepia.

Gray headed infant! and in vain grown old!
Art thou to learn that in another's gold
Lie charms resistless? Dryden, Juv.

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison, Spect.

Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,
And Bacon trembling for his brazen head. Pope.

3. Dark like the opening or close of day; of the colour of ashes.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Cæcilia, that is, gray eyed. Cowden, Rem.

The gray ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,
Chequ'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light. Shakespeare.

Soon as the gray ey'd morning streaks the skies,
And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies. Gay, Trivia.

GRAY.† n. s. A gray colour. The gray of the morning is common in many places for the break of day.

I'll say yon gray is not the morning's eye;
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Down sunk the sun, the closing hour of day
Came onward, mantled o'er with dusky gray. Parnel.

GRAY.† n. s. [from its colour.] A badger. Ainsworth.

This fine
Smooth bawson's cub, the young grice of a gray. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

GRAY.* n. s. A kind of salmon, having a gray back and sides; probably the same as the gilse.

G R A

GRAYBEARD.† n. s. [gray and beard.] An old man : in contempt.

Youngling, thou can'st not love so dear as I.
— Graybeard, thy love doth freeze. Shakspeare.

Have I in conquest stretcht mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth?
Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

A dull relation of the acts of grave graybeards to a young prince might grow fastidious.

Sir J. Harrington, Br. View of the Church, p. 35.

GRAYFLY.* n. s. [gray and fly.] The trumpet-fly.

We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the grayfly winds her sultry horn. Milton, Lycidas.

GRAYISH.* adj. [from gray.] Approaching to a gray colour. Sherwood.

On either side did shine a grayish eye
Warner, Albion's England.

GRAYLE.* See GRAIL.

GRAYLING. n. s. [thymallus.] The umber, a fish.

The grayling lives in such rivers as the trout does, and is usually taken with the same baits, and after the same manner : he is of a fine shape, his flesh white; and his teeth, those little ones that he has, are in his throat. He is not so general a fish as the trout, nor so good to eat. Walton, Angler.

GRAYNESS.† n. s. [from gray.] The quality of being gray. Sherwood.

TO GRAZE.† v. n. [Sax. gnazian.]

1. To eat grass; to feed on grass.
The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck. Shakspeare, As you like it.
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me. Shakspeare.

Leaving in the fields his grazing cows,
He sought himself some hospitable house. Dryden, Fab.

The more ignoble throng
And their stately steps, and slowly graze along. Dryden.

2. To supply grass.

Physicians advise their patients to remove into airs which are plain campaigns, but grazing, and not overgrown with heath. Bacon.

The sewers must be kept so as the water may not stay too long in the Spring; for then the ground continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze to purpose that year. Bacon.

A third sort of grazing ground is that near the sea, which is commonly very rich land. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To move on devouring.

As every state lay next to the other that was oppressed, so the fire perpetually grazed. Bacon on the War with Spain.

4. [From raser, French.] To touch lightly.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

A bullet grazes on any place, when it gently turns up the surface of what it strikes upon. Cowel, in V. Grass-Hearth.

The shot—

Pierc'd Talgon's gaberdine, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing,
Lodg'd in Magnano's brass haburgeon,
Who straight a surgeon cried, a surgeon! Hudibras, i. iii.

TO GRAZE. v. a.

1. To tend grazing cattle; to set cattle to feed on grass.

Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep. Shakspeare.
O happy man, saith he, that, lo! I see
Grazing his cattle in those pleasant fields,
If he but know his good. Daniel, Civil Wars.

2. To feed upon.

I was at first as other beasts, that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low. Milton, P. J.
Their steeds around,
Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

Some graze their land till Christmas, and some longer. Mortimer.

G R E

This Neptune gave him, when he gave to keep His scaly flocks that graze the wat'ry deep. Dryden, Virg.
The lambs with wolves shall graze the verdant mead. Pope.

3. To supply with grass.

He hath a house and barn in repair, and a field or two to graze his cows, with a garden and orchard. Swift.

4. To strike lightly. [Fr. raser.]

Whose solid virtue
The shot of accident, nor dart of chance,
Could neither graze, nor pierce. Shakspeare, Othello.

We still say, the skin is grazed, or slightly hurt. Cowel, in V. Grass-Hearth.

GRAZER. n. s. [from graze.] One that grazes or feeds on grass.

His flock daily crops
Their verdant dinner from the mossy turf
Sufficient : after them the cackling goose,
Close grazer, finds wherewith to ease her want. Philips.

GRAZIER. n. s. [from graze.] One who feeds cattle.
All graziers prefer their cattle from meaner pastures to better. Bacon.

Gentle peace, which filleth the husbandman's barns, the grazier's folds, and the tradesman's shop. Howell.

His confusion increased when he found the alderman's father to be a grazier. Spectator.

Of agriculture, the depolation made in the country by engrossing graziers, and the great yearly importation of corn from England are lamentable instances under what discouragement it lies. Swift.

GREASE. n. s. [graisse, French.]

1. The soft part of the fat : the oily or unctuous part of animals.

Grease, that's sweaten
From the murth'rer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To take out a spot of grease they use a coal upon brown paper. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thou hop'st, with sacrifice of oxen slain,
To compass wealth, and bribe the god of gain
To give thee flocks and herds, with large increase;

Fool! to expect them from a bullock's grease. Dryden, Juv.
A girdle, foul with grease, binds his obscene attire. Dryden.

2. [In horsemanship.] A swelling and gourdiness of the legs, which happens to a horse after a journey, or by standing long in the stable.

TO GREASE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smear or anoint with grease.

A treatise—never to be thumbed or greased by students, nor bound to everlasting chains of darkness in a library. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 7.

2. To bribe; to corrupt with presents.

Envy not the store
Of the greas'd advocate that grinds the poor. Dryden, Pers.

GREASILY.* adv. [from greasy.]

1. With an appearance, as if smeared with grease.

His sweaty neck did shine right greasily. More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 77.

2. Grossly; indelicately.

You talk greasily, your lips grow foul. Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost

GREASINESS. n. s. [from grease.] Oiliness; fatness.

Upon the most of these stones, after they are cut, there appears always, as it were, a kind of greasiness or unctuousity. Boyle.

GREASY.† adj. [from grease.]

1. Oily; fat; unctuous.

The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
Of her o'ercrent faith. Shakspeare.

2. Smeared with grease.

Even the lewd rabble
Govern'd their roaring throats, and grumbled pity;
I could have hug'd the greasy rogues; they pleas'd me. Otway.

Buy sheep, and see that they be big-boned, and have a soft, greasy, well curled close wool. Mortimer, Husbandry.

G R E

3. Fat of body; bulky: in reproach.

Let's consult together against this greasy knight.

Shakespeare.

4. Gross; indelicate; indecent.

Chaste cells, when greasy Aretine,
For his rank rido, is surnam'd divine.

Marston, Scourge of Vill. i. 3.

GREAT. adj. [great, Saxon; groot, Dutch; from the Su. Goth. gro, to encrease.]

1. Large in bulk or number.

Judas one of the twelve came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves. St. Mat. xxvi. 47.

All these cities were fenced with high walls, gates and bars, besides unwall'd towns a great many. Deut. iii. 5.

Elemental air diffus'd

In circuit to the uttermost convex

Of this great round.

And God created the great whales.

A dungeon horrible, on all sides round,

As one great furnace flamm'd.

The tallest pine

Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast

Of some great ammiral.

Broome.

3. Having number or bulk, relative or comparative.

The idea of so much is positive and clear: the idea of greater is also clear, but it is but a comparative idea. Locke.

4. Considerable in extent or duration.

Thou hast spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come. 2 Sam. vii. 19.

5. Important; weighty.

Make sure

Her favours to thee, and the great oath take

With which the blessed gods assurance make.

Many

Have broke their backs with laying manors on them,

For this great journey.

What is low raise and support,

That to the highth of this great argument

6. Chief; principal.

Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal, who commands you
To render up the great seal presently. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

7. Venerable; adorable; awful.

Thou first art wont God's great authentick will,
Interpreter, through highest heaven to bring. Milton, P. L.

8. Wonderful; marvellous.

Great things, and full of wonder.

Milton, P. L.

9. Of high rank; of large power.

Then the king made Daniel a great man.

Dan. ii. 48.

Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
Whilst they behold a greater than themselves.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Worthiest by being good,
Far more than great or high.

Milton, P. L.

The fantastick complaisance, which is paid to them, may blind the great from seeing themselves in a just light.

Fermented the great mother to conceive.

Milton, P. L.

11. Illustrious; eminent; noble; excellent.

O Lord, thou art great, and thy name is great in might.

Jer. x. 6.

The great Creator thus replied.

Milton, P. L.

The great Son return'd

Victorious with his saints.

Milton, P. L.

Fair angel, thy desire which tends to know

The works of God, thereby to glorify

The great Work-master, leads to no excess

That reaches blame.

Milton, P. L.

Great are thy works Jehovah, infinite

Thy power! what thought can measure thee, or tongue

Relate thee! greater now in thy return,

Than from the giant angels: Thee that day

Thy thunders magnified, but to create

Is greater than created to destroy.

Milton, P. L.

The great luminary

Aloof the vulgar constellations thick,

That from his lordly eye keep distance due,

Dispenses light from far.

Milton, P. L.

Here Cesar grac'd with both Minervas shone,

12. Grand of aspect: of elevated mien.

Such Dido was; with such becoming state,

Amidst the crowd, she walks serenely great.

Dryden, Virg.

13. Magnanimous; generous; high minded.

In her every thing was goodly and stately; yet so, that it might seem that great mindedness was but the ancient-bearer to the humbleness.

Sidney.

14. Opulent; sumptuous; magnificent.

Not Babylon,

Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence

Equal'd in all their glories.

Milton, P. L.

He disdain'd not to appear at great tables and festival entertainments.

Atterbury.

15. Intellectually great; sublime.

This new created world, how good, how fair,

Answering his great idea.

Milton, P. L.

16. Swelling; proud.

Solyman perceived that Vienna was not to be won with words, nor the defendants to be discouraged with great looks;
wherefore he began to batter the walls.

Knolles.

17. Familiar; much acquainted. A low word, Dr.

Johnson says. It is used in this sense in Scotland, and Dr. Jamieson thinks it not the adjective great improperly used, but as immediately formed from the Sax gṛād, peace, gṛodian, to agree, to be in a state of agreement.

Those that would not censure, or speak ill of a man immediately, will talk more boldly of those that are great with them, and thereby wound their honour.

Bacon.

18. Pregnant; teeming.

His eyes sometimes even great with tears.

Sidney.

Because he slew me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb always great with me.

Jerem. xx. 17.

Sandys.

This fly, for most he stings in heat of day,

From cattle great with young keep thou away.

May, Virgil.

19. It is added in every step of ascending or descending consanguinity: as, great grandson is the son of my grandson.

G R E

I dare not yet affirm for the antiquity of our language, that our great-great-grandfathers tongue came out of Persin.

What we call great-great grandfather they called forthfader.

Your great uncle, Edward the black prince of Wales.

He has crack'd the league
Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew.

Their holyday-cloaths go from father to son, and are seldom worn out till the second or third generation; so that 'tis common enough to see a countryman in the doublet and breeches of his great grandfather.

20. Hard; difficult; grievous. A proverbial expression.

It is no great matter to live lovingly with good-natured and meek persons.

GREAT. n. s. [from the adjective.] The whole; the gross; the whole in a lump.

To let out thy harvest by great or by day,
Let this by experience lead thee the way:
By great will deceive thee with ling'ring it out,
By day will dispatch.

It were behoveful, for the strength of the navy, that no ships should be builded by the great; for by daily experience they are found to be weak and imperfect.

He did at length so many slain forget,
And lost the tale, and took them by the great.
Carpenters build an house by the great, and are agreed for the sum of money.

I set aside one day in a week for lovers, and interpret by the great for any gentlewoman who is turned of sixty.

GREATBELLIED. adj. [great and belly.] Pregnant; beeming.

Greatbellied women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams
In the old time of war, would shake the press.

A greatbellied woman, walking through the city in the day-time, had her child struck out of her womb, and carried half a furlong from her.

TO GREATEN.† v. a. [from great.] To aggrandize; to enlarge; to magnify. A word little used, Dr. Johnson says; yet it is found in the writings of some of our best authors.

After they sought to greaten themselves in Italy itself, using strangers for the commanders of their armies, the Turks by degrees beat them out of all their goodly countries.

Whither doth he bend all his powers but to attain his own ends, to cross another's, to greaten himself, to supplant a rival?

The popes are accustomed to do the like, in consideration of their nephews whom they would greaten.

A favourite's business is to please his king, a minister's to greaten and exalt him.

TO GREATEN.† v. n. To encrease; to become large.

Being commuted against an infinite majesty, it [sin] greatens, and rises to the height of an infinite demerit.

GREATHEARTED. adj. [great and heart.] High spirited; undefeeted.

The earl, as greathearted as he, declared that he neither cared for his friendship, nor feared his hatred.

GREATLY. adv. [from great.]

1. In a great degree.
Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply.

2. Nobly; illustriously.
Yet London, empress of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly didst expire.

3. Magnanimously; generously; bravely.
Where are these bold intrepid sons of war,
That greatly turn their backs upon the foe,
And to their general send a brave defiance?

G R E

GREATNESS.† n. s. [Sax. gæatnesse.]

1. Largeness of quantity or number.

By greatness I do not only mean the bulk of any single object, but the largeness of a whole view, considered as one entire piece.

2. Comparative quantity.

We can have no positive idea of any space or duration, which is not made up of and commensurate to repeated numbers of feet or yards, or days or years, and whereby we judge of the greatness of these sort of quantities.

All absent good does not, according to the greatness it has, or is acknowledged to have, cause pain equal to that greatness, as all pain causes desire equal to itself; because the absence of good is not always a pain, as the presence of pain is.

3. High degree of any quality.

Zeal, in duties, should be proportioned to the greatness of the reward, and the certainty.

4. High place; dignity; power; influence; empire.

The most servile flattery is lodged most easily in the grossest capacity; for their ordinary conceit draweth a yielding to greatness, and then have they not wit to discern the right degrees of duty.

Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness.

As will to greatness dedicate themselves.
I beg your greatness not to give the law
In other realms; but beaten, to withdraw.

Approaching greatness met him with her charms
Of pow'r and future state;
He shook her from his arms.

Themistocles raised the Athenians to their greatness at sea, which he thought to be the true and constant interest of that commonwealth.

5. Swelling pride; affected state.

My lord would have you know that it is not of pride or greatness that he cometh not aboard your ships.

6. Merit; magnanimity; nobleness of mind.

Greatness of mind and nobleness their seat
Build in her loveliest.

7. Grandeur; state; magnificence.

Greatness with himself dwells in such a draught,
As brings all Brobdignag before your thought.

GREAVE.† n. s.

1. A grove. [Sax. græf. This is a very ancient form of our word grove.]

Phebus — with his strelnes drieth in the greves
The silver droppes, hanging on the leves.
She fled into that covert greave.
Some hid among the leaves,
Some in the taller trees, some in the lower greaves.

Yet when there haps a honey-fall,
We'll lick the sirupt leaves,
And tell the bees that their's is gall
To that upon the greaves.

2. A groove. [Icel. groof, from grafa, to dig.]

Either fast closed in some hollow greave,
Or buried in the ground from jeopardy.

GREAVES. n. s. [from greves, French.] Armour for the legs; a sort of boots. It wants the singular number.

He had greaves of brass upon his legs.
A shield make for him, and a helm, fair greaves, and curets such

As may renown thy workmanship, and honour him as much.

GRE'CIAN.* n. s. [Lat. Græcus, from Græcia.]

1. A native or inhabitant of Greece.

The children also of Judah, and the children of Jerusalem, have ye sold unto the Grecians.
For every false drop in her lawdy veils
A Grecian's life hath sunk.

2. A Jew who understood or spoke Greek.

There arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews.

He — disputed against the Grecians.

3. One skilled in the Greek language; as, he is a good Grecian. A colloquial expression.

GRE'CIAN.* adj. Relating to the country of Greece.

The royal towers
Of great Selucia, built by Grecian kings. Milton, P. L.

Look upon Greece under its free states, and you would think its inhabitants lived in different climates, and under different heavens from those at present; so different are the geniuses which are formed under Turkish slavery, and Grecian liberty.

Addison, Spect. No. 287.

GRECIAN Fire.* [Fr. feu Gregeois.] Wildfire; such as will burn within water.

To GRE'CIANIZE.* v. n. [from Grecian; Fr. grecianizer.] To play the Grecian; to speak Greek; to use phrases borrowed from the Greek.

Cotgrave, in V. Grecizer.

To GRE'CISE.* v. a. [Fr. grecizer.] To translate into Greek.

The name — is grecised, with many other German words.

Warton, Hist. E. P.

GRE'CISM.† n. s. [græcismus, Lat.] An idiom of the Greek language. This word was in use early in the seventeenth century. It is in the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor, 1656.

Milton has infused a great many latinisms, as well as græcisms, and sometimes hebraisms, into his poem. Addison, Spect.

That the present Latin Dictys had a Greek original, now lost, appears from the numerous græcisms with which it abounds.

Warton, Hist. E. P.

Literal renderings of hebraisms and græcisms should be given in the margin.

Abp. Newcome, Ess. on the Transl. of the Bible, p. 378.

GRE'DALIN.* See GRIDELIN.

GREE.† n. s.

1. Good will; favour; good graces. [gré, French; probably from the Lat. gratia, or gratus. Ital. "Prendi in grado;" and so our old phrase, "to take in gree," i. e. in good part, favourably; frequent in Spenser.]

And falling her before on lowly knee,
To her makes present of his service seen,
Which she accepts with thanks and goodly gree. Spenser, F. Q.

2. Rank; degree. [Lat. gradus.]

He is a shepherd great in gree. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

3. A step. [Lat. gradus; Fr. grez. Dr. Johnson gives greece, which he says is also written greeze or grice, and is corrupted from degrees; and he defines it "a flight of steps." But the word, thus varied, seems to be nothing more than the plural of gree, a step; whence, in the north of England, grees are stairs, steps. Grees has been also used in the singular number, and greeces in the plural. See GREES.]

And when he suffr'd, Paul stood in the grees, [on the stairs, present translation.] Wicliffe, Acts, xxi. 40.

By many a gree ymade of marbyll graye.

Lydgate, cited by Warton, H. F. P. li. 89.

To GREE.* v. n. [old Fr. greer.] To agree. It is common in our old poetry, but in modern editions is printed with an elision 'gree, as if it were merely an abbreviation of agree.

Ludgate — for free-men debtors, free
From hurt, till with their creditors they gree.

Mir. for Mag. p. 116.

We have 'greed so well together,
That upon Sunday is the wedding day.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

The meane that grees with country musicke best.

Greene, Farewell to Folly, (1617.)

GREECE.† n. s. [a corruption of grees. See GREE.]

A flight of steps.

After the procession, the king himself remaining seated in the quire, the lord archbishop, upon the greece of the quire, made a long oration. Bacon, Hen. VII.

GREED.* n. s. [Sax. græbiz; Goth. gredags, from gredon, to hunger; Icel. gred, voracity; probably from the Gr. γράω, to devour.] Greediness. I find it so used by Scottish writers; and Chaucer once mentions a "rich grede," meaning a greedy person, Rom. R. 6p02.

Whose avarice and greed of geare is such, that they care not whom with they joine.

Graham, Anat. of Humours, (Edinh. 1609.)

His insatiable greed of money and power. Bruce, Trav. iv. 61.

GRE'EDILY.† adv. [Sax. græbelice.]

1. Eagerly; ravenously; voraciously; with keen appetite or desire.

He coveteth greedily all the day long.

Prov. xxi. 26.

Greedily she ingorg'd without restraint.

Milton, P. L.

He swallow'd it as greedily

As parched earth drinks rain.

Denham.

Ev'n deadly plants, and herbs of pois'nous juice,

Wild hunger seeks; and to prolong our breath,

We greedily devour our certain death.

Dryden.

2. With vehemence; with desire.

In the primitive church was the gospel greedly receiv'd of the universall worlde.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543), fol. 96. b.

They have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedly after the error of Balaam for reward.

St. Jude, ver. 11.

GRE'EDINESS.† n. s. [Sax. græbiznere.] Ravenousness; voracity; hunger; eagerness of appetite or desire.

Let not the greediness of the belly, nor lust of the flesh, take hold of me.

Eccles. xxiii. 6.

Fox in stealth, wolf in greediness.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Thither with all greediness of affection are they gone.

there they intend to sup.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

If thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee.

Shakespeare, Timon.

I with the same greediness did seek,

As water when I thirst, to swallow Greek.

Denham.

GREEDY.† adj. [græbiz, Sax. graadig, Dan. gretig, Dutch. See also GREED.]

1. Ravenous; voracious; hungry.

As a lion that is greedy of his prey.

Psaln xvii. 12.

Be not unsatiable in any dainty thing, nor too greedy upon meats.

Eccles. xxxvii. 29.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food.

King Charles.

2. Eager; vehemently desirous. It is now commonly taken in an ill sense.

Greedy to know, as is the mind of man,

Their cause of death, swift to the fire she ran.

Fairfax.

The ways of every one that is greedy of gain.

Prov.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will,

Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill.

Dryden.

While the reaper fills his greedy hands,

And binds the golden sheaves in brittle hands.

Dryden, Virg.

How fearful would he be of all greedy and unjust ways of raising their fortune?

Laure.

GRE'EDY-GUT.* n. s. A glutton; a devourer: a belly-god. Cotgrave and Sherwood both give this word; and it is yet retained in low conversation.

GREEK.* n. s. [Lat. Græcus.]

1. A native of Greece. [Sax. Ipeca; Fr. Grec.]

Titus, who was with me, being a Greek.

Gul. ii. 3.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long

Perplex'd the Greek, and Cytherea's son.

Milton, P. L.

He [Homer] makes his countrymen and favourites, the Greeks, move forward in a regular determined march, and in the depth of silence.

Addison, Spect. No. 133.

2. The Greek language.

Paul said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee?
who said, Canst thou speak Greek? Acts, xxi. 37.
When thou taught'st Cambridge, and king Edward Greek.
Milton, Sonnet.

3. A term applied to a merry person. [supposed to be from the Lat. græcor, to play the Greek, to use their exercises; or, as some take it, to drink and revel, as they used to do. Sherwood has the phrase, "a merry Greek," which he renders into the French gale-bon-temps; and Cotgrave renders that by "a merrie grig." However, see CRICK and GRIG.]

She's a merry Greek indeed. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

GREEK.* adj. Belonging to Greece; relating to that country.

In the Greek tongue he hath his name Apollyon.

I shall publish, very speedily, the translation of a little Greek manuscript. Revel. ix. 17.
Addison, Spect. No. 227.

GREEKISH.* adj. [Sax. Græcisc.] Peculiar to Greece; pertaining to Greece.

He forthwith brought his own nation to the Greekish fashion.

I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night.

They allege their numbers, and the promised help of Assaracus, a noble Greekish youth. Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.
Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 1.

GREEKLING.* n. s. [from Greek.] An inferior Greek writer. A contemptuous word.

Which of the Greeklings durst ever give precepts to Demosthenes?

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

GREEKROSE.* n. s. [lychnis.] The flower campion.

Thy beauty, Champion, very much may claim;
But of Greek-rose how didst thou gain thy name?

Tale, Tr. of Cowley.

GREEN.† adj. [grun, German; groen, Dutch. Dr.

Johnson.—Our word is the Saxon adjective græne. Junius derives green from the verb grōpan, frondere, virere; Mr. H. Tooke represents it as the past participle of grænian, virescere.]

1. Having a colour formed commonly by compound-ing blue and yellow; of the colour of the leaves of trees or herbs. The green colour is said to be most favourable to the sight.

The general colour of plants is green, which is a colour that no flower is of: there is a greenish primrose, but it is pale, and scarce a green.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There are writers of great distinction, who have made it an argument for Providence, that the whole earth is covered with green, rather than with any other colour, as being such a mixture of light and shade, that it comforts and strengthens the eye instead of weakening or grieving it. For this reason several painters have a green cloth hanging near them, to ease the eye upon, after too great an application to their colouring.

Addison, Spect. No. 387.

Groves fix ever green.

Pope.

2. Pale; sickly: from whence we call the maid's disease the green sickness, or chlorosis. Like it is Sappho's χλωροτέρα ποίας.

Was the hope drunk

Wherein you drest yourself? Hath it slept since?
And wakes it now to look so green and pale

At what it did so freely? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof: they fall into a kind of male green sickness.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Till the green sickness and love's force betray'd

To death's remorseless arms th' unhappy maid. Garth.

3. Flourishing; fresh; undecayed: from trees in Spring.

If I have any where said a green old age, I have Virgil's authority; Sæcunda deo viridisque senectus.

Dryden.

4. New; fresh: as, a green wound.

The door is open, air; there lies your way:
You may be jogging while your boots are green. Shakespeare.

Griefs are green;

And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,
Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

In a vault,

Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies festering in his blood. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

A man that studieth revenge keepeth his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well. Bacon, Essays.

I might dilate on the temper of the people, the power, arts, and interest of the contrary party, but those are invidious topicks, too green in our remembrance. Dryden.

5. Not dry.

If a spark of error have thus far prevail'd falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts; must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are of themselves as dry twel, apt beforehand unto tumults? Hooker, Dedication.

Being an olive tree

Which late he fell'd; and being greene, must be Made lighter for his manage.

Chapman.

Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be extended, and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so dry wood is more fragil than green.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If you but consider a piece of green wood burning in a chimney, you will readily discern, in the disbanded parts of it, the four elements.

Boyle.

The green do often heat the ripe, and the ripe, so heated,
give fire to the green.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

6. Not roasted; half raw.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say the meat is green when it is half roasted.

Watts, Logick.

7. Unripe; immature; young; because fruits are green before they are ripe.

My sallad days,

When I was green in judgement, cold in blood! Shakespeare.

O charming youth, in the first op'ning page;

So many graces in so green an age. Dryden.

You'll find a difference

Between the promise of his greener days,

And these he masters now. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

If you would fat green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

Stubble geese at Michaelmas are seen

Upon the spit, next May produces green. King, Cookery.

GREEN.† n. s.

1. The green colour; green colour of different shades.

His mother hath intended,

That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd. Shakespeare.

But with your presence cheer'd, they cease to mourn!

And walks wear fresher green at your return. Dryden.

Cinnabar, illuminated by this beam, appears of the same red colour as in daylight; and if at the lens you intercept the green making and blue making rays, its redness will become more full and lively.

Newton, Opticks.

Let us but consider the two colours of yellow and blue: if they are mingled together in any considerable proportion, they make a green.

Watts, Logick.

2. A grassy plain.

For this down-trodden equity, we tread

In warlike march these greens before your town. Shakespeare.

O'er the smooth enamell'd green,

Where no print of step hath been,

Follow me as I sing.

Milton, Arcades.

The young Æmilia, fairer to be seen

Than the fair lilly on the flow'ry green,

Dryden, Fab.

3. Leaves; branches; wents; herbs; plants.

With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty hives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives.

Dryden, Virg.

The fragrant greens I seek, my brows to bind.

Dryden.

The vineyard seems to have been a plantation distinct from the garden; as also the beds of greens mentioned afterwards at the extremity of the inclosure, in the nature and usual place of our kitchen-gardens. Addison, Guard. No. 173.

To GREEN.† v. a. [Sax. gneman.] To make green. A low word.

• Great spring before
Green'd all the year; and fruits and blossoms blush'd
In social sweetness on the self-same bough. Thomson, Spring.

With his unkindness.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

GRIEVABLE.† adj. [from grieve.] Lamentable.

There is a vice full grievable.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

GRIEVANCE.† n. s. [grevance, old Fr.]

1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

Madam, I pity much your grievances.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Swift.

TO GRIEVE.† v. a. [grevor, Fr. griever, Flemish; gravis, Lat.]

1. To afflict; to hurt.

For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Luke, iii. 33.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psal.

It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen. vi. 6.

Griev'd at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour

Should be to close those breaches. Rowe.

2. To make sorrowful.

When one man kills another, thinking that he killeth a wild beast; if the same man remembereth afterwards what he hath done, and is not grieved for the fact, in this case he hath sinned; because his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were merely besides his will. Perkins.

3. To lament.

The beholders believed his [lord Stafford's] words, and grieved his destiny. Reesby, Mem. p. 112.

TO GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends. It has sometimes at and sometimes for before the cause of grief: perhaps at is proper before our misfortunes, and for before our faults.

Do not you grieve at this.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

How didst thou grieve then, Adam, to behold

The end of all thy offspring end so sad. Milton, P. L.

With equal mind what happens let us bear;

Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.

Dryden, Feb.

GRIEVER.† n. s. [from grieve.] That which causes grief.

A griever and quencher of the Spirit, a more perfect piece of atheism. Hammond, Works, iv. 514.

GRIEVINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.

Grievingly, I think,

The peace between the French and us not values

The cost that did conclude it. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

GRIEVOUS.† adj. [grevouz, old Fr. gravis, Lat.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be born.

To the flesh, as the apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous. Hooker.

Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die. Prov. xv. 10.

2. Such as causes sorrow.

To own a great but grievous truth, though they quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper. Watts.

3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness.

He durst not disobey, but sent grievous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to. Clarendon.

4. Atrocious; heavy.

It was a grievous fault,

And grievously hath Caesar answer'd it. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

Crying sins I call those, which are so heinous, and in their kind so grievous, that they hasten God's judgements and call down for speedy vengeance upon the sinner. Perkins.

5. Sometimes used adverbially in low language.

He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick. Shakespeare.

GRIEVOUSLY. adv. [from grievous.]

1. Painfully; with pain.

Wide was the wound, and a large lukewarm flood,
Red as the rose, thence gushed grievously. Spenser, F. Q.

2. With discontent; with ill will.

Gritius perceiving how grievously the matter was taken, with the danger he was in, began to doubt. Knolles.

3. Calamitously; miserably.

I see how a number of souls are, for want of right information, oftentimes grievously vexed. Hooker.

4. Vexatiously; to a great degree of uneasiness.

Houses built in plains are apt to be grievously annoyed with mire and dirt. Ray on the Creation.

GRIEVOUSNESS. † n. s. [from grievous.]

1. Sorrow; pain; calamity.

They fled from the swords, from the drawn sword and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war. Is. xxi. 15.

That the grievousness of the penalty in many statutes be mitigated. Bacon, Prop. on the Laws of England.

2. Atrociousness.

Deferring of time, or grievousness of sinners, do not prejudicate his grace. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 709.

GRIFFIN. † n. s. [It should rather be written gry-griffon.] fon, or gryphon; Lat. gryphus and gryps; Gr. γρύψ; Icel. griffon or griffun; Goth.
grip, from gripan, to seize; and so, in our old language, this fabled animal is termed the gripe.
See GRIPE.] A fabled animal, said to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.

Of all bearing among these winged creatures, the griffin is the most ancient. Peckham on Blazoning.

Aristeus, a poet of Proconesus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold. Brown.

GRIFFON-LIKE.  adj.* [griffon and like.] Resembling the rapacity of a griffin.

Citations and processes to be served by a corporality of griffonlike promoters and apparitors. Milton, Of Reformat. B. I.

GRIG. † n. s. [kricke, Bavarian, a little duck.]

1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.2. A small eel. [Some derive this appellation from the Sax. cpecca, the bank of a river, because these animals are fond of harbouring under it. But, from the contortion of this fish, the name may be a corruption of crook, Su. Goth. krok, kroka, to bend.
And thus Serenius gives the Iceland. "krokaell, anguilla contorta, a hrokwa, Su. kroka, corrugari,
item contorquari."]

There be several sorts or kind of eels; as the silver eel; and green or greenish eel, with which the river of Thames abounds;
and those are called grigs. Walton, Angl. ch. 13.

3. A merry creature. [supposed from Greek; the Lat. græculus denoting festive, Dr. Johnson says; rather perhaps, trifling, silly. But see the third sense of GREEK. Grig may be thus adopted from the old Fr. Grigois, which means Greek. Yet the French have not this proverbial expression. "A merry grig or Greek" is, in that language, rendered gale-bon-temps. V. Cotgrave and Sherwood. Some pretend, that the origin of this expression is from the nimble and lively motion of the small eel. I find a "merry cricke," however, to be an expression of at least two centuries date in our language, and of that word grig may be a corruption. See the third sense of Crick.]

Hard is her heart as flint or stone,
She laughs to see me pale;
And merry as a grig is grown,
And brisk as bottle-ale.

Swift.
Grose.

4. Health. Shropshire.

To GRILL. † v. a. [Fr. griller, from grill, a gridiron; grille, an iron grate.] To broil on a grate or gridiron.

GRILL.  adj.* [gryl, horridus. Pr. Parv. The Lat. horridus is used in a similar sense, "cold through fear;" and the Teut. grouzel is horror.] Causing to shake through cold. Obsolete.

They han suffrid cold ful stronge
In wethers grille, and darke to sight. Chaucer, Rom. R. 73.

GRILLADE. n. s. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.

To GRILLY. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harass; to hurt: as we now say, to roast a man, for to teaze him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,
We are grillyed all at Temple-bar.

Hudibras.

GRIM. † adj. [Sax. grim, sour, savage, furious;
gryman, to rage; Germ. grimm, furious; grimmen, to rage; Su. Goth. gram, enraged, angry; all which, perhaps, may be referred to the Celt. grim, war, battle. "Nothing is so common through the whole compass of language, as to find a word, which was originally applied in an appropriate sense, afterwards converted into some other term with a different meaning, though with a kindred idea. — Grim, which originally meant war in the dialects of the Celtic, still continued among our ancient poets to be attached to the same subject, though from its accidentally similarity to grim, in the sense of fierce-looking, it was used as an epithet of war, and oftentimes with a metaphorical application derived from the idea of a furious countenance or menacing form. — In a celebrated passage of Shakespeare we have the addition of the countenance, to which grim was imagined to belong, and the metaphorical imagery arising from this notion:
Grim-visag'd War hath smooth'd his wrinkled brow." Whiter, Etymol. Magn. p. 368. See also GRIM-VISAGED.]

1. Having a countenance of terroure; horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,
With change of fear to see the lion look so grim. Spenser, F. Q.

Grim Saturn yet remains,

Bound in those gloomy caves with adamant chains.

Dryden.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Their dear causes

Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm

Excite the mortified man. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,

Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage? Milton, P. L.

Expert to turn the sway

Of battle, open when and where to close

The ridges of grim war.

Milton, P. L.

Here we have him in the grimmer dress of a revenging judge.

Whether it would not be the grimmeat dispensation that ever befel him, to be thrust out of the world with his sins about his ears. South, Sermon. ix. 185.

G R I

He that dares to die,
May laugh at the grim face of law and scorn,
The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow. Denham, Sophy.
Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim. Addison, Cato.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.

Strait stood up to him
Divine Ulysses; who with looks exceeding grave and grim.
This better check gave. Chapman.
Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim. Shakespeare.

GRIM-FACED.* adj. [grim and face.] Having a stern countenance.

Like the grim-fac'd god of war. Mir. for Mag. p. 863.

GRIM-GRINNING.* adj. [grim and grin.] Grinning horribly, as Milton expresses it, a ghastly smile.

Hateful divorce of love, (thus chides the Death,)
Grim-grinning ghastly earth's worm, what dost thou mean
To stifle beauty, and to steal his breath? Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

He, grim-grinning king,
Who cultiffs scorn, and doth the blest surprise,
Late having deck'd with beauty's rose his tomb,
Disdains to crop a weed, and will not come. Drummond, Madrigal.

GRIM-VISAGED.* adj. [grim and visage.] Grim-faced. Apparently a favourite expression of our old poets; one of whom Gray has literally followed, in the fine application of it to Despair.

Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Death-darting pestilence did seem to slide,
Grim-visag'd, like the grisly dreaded night. Mir. for Mag. p. 777.

I, for my part, grim-visaged goblin, do no more fear death than I fear my best bliss. Stafford's Niobe, P. ii. p. 83.
Grim-visaged Despair.

Yarrington, Two Tragedies in One, (1601.)
Grim-visag'd comfortless Despair. Gray, Ode on Elton Coll.

GRIMA'CE.† n. s. [French, from grim. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius, and Lye in his additions to Junius, refer the word to the Icel. grima, the skin of the face; but the former also says, that the Icel. gryma, a mask or hood, in which pilgrims concealed the face so as not to be known, affords the best root of grimace. Bishop Hurd says, that grimace, in the time of Addison, meant, simply, such a turn of the countenance as expressed acquaintance or civility; but because this air of complaisance was assumed, or was taken by our surly countrymen to be assumed, without meaning, the word came to be used, as it is now, in an ill sense, for any affected distortion of features. Addison's Works, edit. Hurd, vol. iii. p. 176. note.]

1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insolence.

He had not spar'd to shew his piques,
Against th' haraiguers' politicks,
With smart remarks of leering faces,
And annotations of grimaces! Hudibras.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South, Serm.

The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Estrange.

The French nation is addicted to grimace. Spectator.

2. Air of affection.

Vice in a visard, to avoid grimace,
Allows all freedom, but to see the face. Granville.

G R I

GRIMA'LRIN. n. s. [gris, French, gray, and mallin, or little Moll.] Gray little woman; the name of an old cat.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. Philips.

To GRIME.† v. a. [from the Icel. gryma, the mask, already noticed in grimace. See also Dr. Jamieson's Scott. Dict. in V. GRYMING. "Our peasants call him grimug, whose face is covered with spots of dirt, as if he used this as a mask." Ihre, Lex. Su. Goth. — Belg. griemen, to daub with spots.] To dirt; to sully deeply; to daub with filth.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakespeare.

GRIME.† n. s. [from the verb.] Dirt deeply insinuated; sully blackness not easily cleansed.

Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing so clean kept;
for why? she sweats: a man may go over shoes in the grime of it. Shakespeare, Com. of Errors.

Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood. Woodward on Fossils.

GRIMLY.* adj. [from grim.] Having a frightful or hideous look.

When it was grown to dark midnight,
And all were fast asleep,
In came Margaret's grimly ghost,
And stood at William's feet. Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Pestle.

GRIMLY.† adv. [Sax. gnumlice.]

1. Horribly; hideously; terribly.

We've landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters. Shakespeare, Wint. T. 2. l. 2.
So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd pleas'd with the beauteous fate,
Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison, Cato.

2. Sourly; suddenly.

The augurs
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

GRIMNESS.† n. s. [Sax. gnumnerre.] Horror; frightfulness of visage.

The grimness of her visage disguised, yet will it be fearful enough. Bp. King, Thanksgiving. Serm. (1619) p. 26.

GRIMY.* adj. [from grime.] Dirty; cloudy.

Mines of grimy coal low-hid. More, Song of the Soul, Inf. of Worlds, st. 73.

To GRIN.† v. n. [Grennian, gnumian, Saxon; grinnen, grindlen, Dutch; grina, Su. Goth. undoubtedly of the same origin with grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French. At first our own word was gren. "They grennyden with teeth on hym." Wicliffe, Acts, vii. 54. See also To GERN.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips either in anger or in mirth.

Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st. Shakespeare.

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,

When he might spurn him with his foot away? Shakespeare.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous means and outcries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth. Stillingfleet.

A lion's hide he wears;

About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;

The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin.

Dryden, Æn.

They neither could defend, nor can pursue;

But grin'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view.

Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth

To grinning laughter and to frantic mirth.

Prior.

Fools grin on fools, and Stoiclike support,

Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court.

Young.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.

I like not such grinning honour as sir Walter hath; give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

GRIN. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and shewing them.

He laughs at him: in's face too.

— O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,

The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs.

Dryden.

The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin.

Addison.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and argument; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace.

Watts on the Mind.

What lords are those saluting with a grin?

One is just out, and one is lately in.

Young.

GRIN. n. s. [gryne, gryn, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like a bird that hasteth to his grin,

Not knowing the perils.

Chaucer.

The grin shall take him by the heel; and the robber shall prevail against him.

Job, xviii. 9.

To GRIND. † v. a. preter. I ground; part pass.

ground, [gundan, gryndan, ground, Saxon;

genna, Icelandic; grincer, French. Our own word at first was grint or grins. "There shall be wepinge and gryntunge of teeth." Wicliffe, St.

Luke, xiii. "Grynstung of teeth." St. Matt. viii.

"Grint with his teeth." Chaucer, C. T.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

St. Matt. xxi. 44.

He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meat?

Bentley, Serm.

2. To comminute by the teeth or grinders.

Fierce famine is your lot for this misdeed,

Reduce'd to grind the plates on which you feed.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with thee, slack thing, said I,

Thy sith is dull; whet it, for shame:

No marvel, sir, he did reply,

If it at length deserve some blame;

But where one man would have me grind it,

Twenty to one too sharp do find it.

Herbert.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,

And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds.

Dryden, Fab.

4. To rub one against another.

So up he let him rise; who with grim look,

And count'rance stern, upstanding, gan to grind

His grated teeth for great disdain.

Spenser, F. Q.

Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. To harass; to oppress.

Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty.

Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take of the colony from themselves.

Addison.

6. In the following lines, I know not whether it be not corruptly used for grinding, cutting:

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain

Of sudden shootings and of grinding pains,

My throws come thicker and my cries encrease'd.

Dryden.

To GRIND. v. n.

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they and thee

Into the common prison, there to grind

Among the slaves and asses.

Milton, S. A.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.

Shrinking sinews start,

And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws.

Rowe.

GRINDER. † n. s. [Sax. grynþene.]

1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

Those manacles put upon him were exceedingly inconvenient for a grinder in a mill.

Smith on old Age, p. 115.

2. The instrument of grinding.

His heart a solid rock, so fear unknown,

And harder than the grinder's nether stone.

Sandys.

Now exhort

Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel

On the hard rock, and give a wheely fortu

To the expected grinder.

Philips.

3. [grynd-tooth.] The back teeth; the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the fore-teeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He the raging rhinoceros confounds,

The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;

Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they

With the old hunter strive for want of prey.

Sandys.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molars, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and commix the aliments.

Ray on the Creation.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much.

Arbuthnot.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide

His jaws before, and whetted grinders tried.

Dryden, Juv.

Both he brought;

He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught.

Dryden.

GRINDLESTONE. † n. s. [from grind and stone.] The GRINDSTONE. } stone on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and metall'd dance

Saw you never yet in France;

And by the lead-men, for the nonce,

That turn round like grindlestons.

H. Jonson.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coals, and to whet their natural faculties.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone till bright.

Morson.

GRINNER. n. s. [from grin.] He that grins.

The frightful grimmer

Be the winner.

Addison, Spect. No. 173.

GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.

GRIP. † n. s. [Sax. gryp, from grypan, to dig.] A little ditch, or trench. Not peculiar to the north of England, as Ray states; but of general use.

Another will make the grip or foss of the ditch serve for the area of his habitation.

Phil. Survey of the South of Ireland.

To GRIP.* v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into ditches; to drain. Gripes is delved to draw away water. Yorkshire Glossary.

GRIP, or GRIPE.* n. s. [Lat. gryps. See GRIFFIN.] The fabulous animal called the griffon, as Barret defines it; and, as Huloet the older lexicographer explains it, "the grype bird." This squares with the old Gothick greip, used for a bird of prey, probably a vulture.

An horrible cage for every foule byrde and sylthie gryppe.
Anderson, Expos. upon Benedictus, (1573,) fol. 45. b.
Like a white hind under the grype's sharp claws.
Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

To GRIPE.† v. a. [greipan, M. Goth. gripa, Su. Goth. gupan, Sax. gripen, Dutch; old French, grip or gripe, both plunder and the hand; and thus here deduces gripa from grip, an old Gothick word also for the hand.]

1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.

He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows. Shakespeare, K. John.

2. To hold hard.

He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold. Dryden, Æn.

3. [gripper, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.
You took occasion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the gen'ral way into your hands.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

4. To close; to clutch.

Unlucky Welsted! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster. Pope.

5. To pinch; to press; to squeeze.

A wond'rous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey. Spenser.
And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that sought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood. Dryden, Fob.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.

Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent. Dryden.

7. To afflict. This would now be considered a ludicrous usage of the word; but it was formerly not so. See the fourth sense of the substantive gripe.

Griefe gripte me so, I pin'd away, and died. Mir. for Mag. p. 292.

Whom gripping sorrow doth so sore attain. Ibid. p. 447.

Grief gripes my heart, when I think that the Mars of men received his death's blow from a pen-maker, a pedagogue.
Stafford's Niobe, (1611,) p. 145.

To GRIPE.† v. n.

1. To feel the colick, to have the belly-ache.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.
Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us. Locke.

2. To pinch; to catch at money meanly.

It is mean revenue, by being scattered, in the worst of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by gripping, made them less, and grew stark beggars. Fell.

3. [In naval language.] When a ship runs her head too much into the wind, she is said to gripe.

GRIPE.† n. s. [gripe, Sax. grip, old Goth. and French. See To GRIPE.]

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws, Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy. Spenser, F. Q.

VOL. II.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Should I

Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakespeare.

He gave me his hand,

And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd. Dryden, Æn.

2. Squeeze; pressure.

Find with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;
To true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe. Dryden, Fob.

3. Oppression; crushing power.

I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king thy master.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.

Free from the gripes of sorrow every one.
Browne, Brit. Past. i. 3.

Adam, at the news

Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound! Milton, P. L.

Can'st thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for the tender office of love,
Endure the gripes of smarting poverty? Otway.

5. [In the plural.] Belly-ache; colick.

In the jaundice the choler is wanting; and the icterical have a great sourness and gripes, with windiness. Floyer.

6. [In naval language.] The compass or sharpness of the prow or stem of a ship under water.
Dr. Scott and Dr. Ash have said the stern instead of the stem.

7. [In naval language.] Gripes is the name of a machine formed by an assemblage of ropes, hooks, and dead-eyes; and used to secure the boats upon the deck of a ship at sea. Chambers.

GRIPER. n. s. [from gripe.] Oppressor; usurer; extortioner.

Others pretend zeal, and yet are profess'd usurers, gripers, monsters of men, and harpies. Burton on Melancholy.

GRIPING.* n. s. [from gripe.]

1. Pain arising from colick.

After certain gripings, the wind and vapours, issuing forth, — distorted the mouth, bloated the cheeks, and gave the eyes a terrible kind of relieve. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 8.

2. Distress; affliction.

Whether all the fictitious pleasures of sin can compensate for the acute tortures and gripings of mind.

Killingbeck's Sermon. (1730,) p. 361.

GRI'PINGLY, adv. [from gripping.] With pain in the guts.

Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work grippingly. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

GRI'PLE.* adj. [from gripe, in the sense of pinching, meanly grasping or hoarding money. Dr. Johnson barely mentions griple as a substantive, and defines it "a greedy snatcher; a gripping miser;" to which he adds, without an example however, the name of Spenser. Spenser uses the word as an adjective, but not as a substantive. And there are few words better authorized than this adjective; but as a substantive I have no where found it.]

1. Greedy; covetous; unfeeling; oppressive.

He gnash'd his teeth, to see
Those heapes of gold with griple covetysc.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 31.

G R I

It is easy to observe, that none are so griple and hard-fisted as the childless.

Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

The insatiate slave —

That thrusts his griple hand into her golden maw.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 3.

The griple wretch, who will bestow nothing on his poor brother for God's sake, is evidently an infidel, having none at all or very heathenish notions of God. Barrow, Works, i. 438.

To bestow aught in good earnest on the magistrate, we know your classic priestship is too griple; for ye are always begging.

Milton, Art. of Peace betw. E. of Orn. and Irish.

2. Grasping fast; tenacious.

On his shield he griple hold did lay;

And held the same so hard, that by no wise

He could him force to loose.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 6.

GRIPPLENESS.* n. s. [from griple.] Covetousness.

Age is not a more common plea than unjust: The young man pretends it for his wanton and inordinate lust; the old, for his *griple*ness, techiness, loquacity: all wrongfully, and not without foul abuse.

Bp. Hall, Temptations Repelled, iii. § 10.

GRIS.* n. s. [Fr. gris; low Lat. griseum, "pellis animalis cuiusdam, quod vulgò vair Galli appellat." Du Cange.] A kind of fur; one of the better sorts of fur. See MINEVER.

I saw his sleeves purpled at the hond

With gris, and that the finest of the lond. Chaucer, C. T. Proi.

GRIS-AMBER. n. s. Used by Milton for ambergrise.

Beasts of chase, or fowl of game,

In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd,

Gris-amber steam'd.

Milton, P. R.

GRISE.† n. s.

1. A swine. See GRICE.

2. A step, or scale of steps. See GREE and GREES.

Barret writes it "grises or steps."

Let me speak like yourself; and lay a sentence,

Which as a grise or step, may help these lovers

Into your favour. Shakespeare, Othello.

GRISETTE.* n. s. [French.] The wife or daughter of a tradesman.

She was the handsomest grisette I ever saw.

Sterne, Sentim. Journey.

GRISKIN.† n. s. [grisgin, roast meat, Irish.

Dr. Johnson. — This etymology may apply to a beef-steak when dressed, or to any other, as well as a griskin; and therefore, notwithstanding Lyc endeavours to support it by adding that grisgin may be from gris, fire, the etymon must be sought elsewhere; and there can be no question that it is from gris, grise, or grice, a swine.] The vertebrae of a hog broiled, Dr. Johnson says; in any way, it may be added, raw, fried, or roasted. It is not the cookery that confers the name.

GRISLED.* See GRIZZLED.

GRISLY.† adj. [grislíc, Sax. agnisan, to affright;

griselig, Goth. horrible; grislega, Iceland. horribly. Bullokar defines gristly also adverbially, viz.

abominably, fearfully. Expos. ed. 1656. But I find no usage of it.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous;

frightful; terrible.

His gristly locks, long grown and unbound,

Disordered hung about his shoulders round.

Spenser, F. Q.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,

The gristly toadstool grown there might I see.

Spenser.

My gristly countenance made others fly;

None durst come near, for fear of sudden death.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The gristly face of a convicting conscience.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 41.

G R I

Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd

So sudden to behold the gristly king;

Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon. Milton, P. L.

For that daunt'd magician, let him be girt

With all the gristly legions that troop

Under the sooty flag of Acheron.

Milton, Comus.

The beauteous form of fight

Is chang'd, and war appears a gristly sight.

Dryden, Fab.

In vision thou shalt see his gristly face,

The king of terrors, raging in thy race.

Dryden, State of Innocence.

Thus the gristly spectre spoke again.

Dryden, Fab.

Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,

Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a gristly wound.

Dryden.

So rushes on his foe the gristly bear.

Addison.

GRISONS.* n. s. Inhabitants of the mountainous parts of the Alps in Italy.

There is the noblest summer-prospect in the world from this walk, for you have a full view of a huge range of mountains that lie in the country of the Grisons, and are buried in snow.

Addison on Italy.

GRIST.† n. s. [grȳt, Saxon; the past participle of grēpan, to crush. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. Corn to be ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,

Least miller lack water.

Tusser, Husbandry.

A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;

Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,

And all the corn they us'd at scholar's hall.

Müller of Trompington.

2. Supply; provision.

Matter, as wise logicians say,

Cannot without a form subsist;

And form, say I, as well as they,

Must fail, if matter brings no grist.

Swift.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.

The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRISTLE. n. s. [grȳtle, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Lest the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annular gristles of the windpipe are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet.

Ray on the Creation.

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes.

Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures.

More against Atheism.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like women's fans.

Ray on the Creation.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe.

Grew.

Each pipe, distinguish'd by its gristly rings,

To cherish life aerial pasture brings.

Blackmore.

GRIT.† n. s.

1. The coarse part of meal. [grut, grutta, Sax. gritze, Teut. grut, German; from grȳt.]

2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles. [grit, Welsh; grēot, Sax. grīot, grȳt, Goth.]

Silesian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap.

Grew.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and restive marle. Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with saltwater, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disunited by water. This is the pulvis puleolans of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plaisters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocolla of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax. The ferrugineous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.

Hill on Fossils.

GRITH.* n. s. [Sax. grith, peace; Goth. grith; hence a grithstole was a sanctuary.] Agreement; union. Obsolete.

He bade his priestis pece and grith. The Plowman's Tale.

GRITTYNESS. n. s. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fuller's earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton, Opticks.

GRIZELIN. adj. [more properly gridelin. See GRIDELIN.]

The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is sorest to ripen in our climate. Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. s. [from gris, gray; grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case. Shakespeare.

GRIZZLED.† adj. [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gray.

In the fourth chariot, grizzled and bay horses. Zech. vi. 3.

To the boy Caesar, send this grizzled head. Shakespeare.

His beard was grizzled?—No,

It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

His hair just grizzled,

As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide

In plenteous growth, their asses' ears to hide. Dryden, Juv.

GRIZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, French.] Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon.

To GROAN.† v. n. granian, Saxon; gronen, Dutch.

Dr. Johnson.—Our word was at first used in the sense of grunt. To groin was the same. So the Iceland. grenian has the same meaning. "He groneth as our boar." Chaucer, Sompn. Tale. This will refer us to the Lat. grunio. The northern pronunciation of groan is according to the Sax. grane. See To GRANE, and To GROIN.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir

Of these fair edifices, for my wars,

Have I heard groan and drop. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded

crieth out. Job, xxiv. 12.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisd. v. 3.

So shall the world go on,

To good malignant, to bad men benign,

Under her own weight groaning. Milton, P. L.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,

Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope, Odyssey.

GROAN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty, from pain, faintness, or weariness.

Alas poor country,

Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,

Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;

And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.

Hence aching bosoms wear a visage gay,

And stifled groans frequent the ball and play. Young.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

GROANFUL. adj. [from groan and full.] Sad; agonizing. Not used.

Adown he keist it with so puissant wrest,

That back again it did aloft rebound,

And gave against his mother earth a groanful sound.

Spenser, F. Q.

GROANING.* n. s. [Sax. granan.]

1. Lamentation; complaint on account of agony or pain.

To hear the groaning of the prisoner.

Psalms cii. 20.

He shall groan before him with the groanings of a deadly wounded man. Ezek. xxx. 24.

2. [In hunting.] The cry or noise of a buck.

Chambers.

GROAT.† n. s. [from groot, Dutch; grosso, Italian.]

1. A piece valued at four pence. It was first coined by Edward III. A silver penny was the largest coin of silver before. Chaucer writes it grot.

To give five pence, grotes, or shillings, to five poor men.

Fulke against Allen, (1580,) p. 409.

Our piece of four-pence being formerly great, (even as great as a shilling now is, because then twenty pence, or five grotes weighed an ounce,) is called a grot.

Bulter, Eng. Gramm. (1633.)

It often costs them two pence or a groat, before they can convey them [letters] to my hands. Bulter, No. 164.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont

To call them woollen vassals, things created

To buy and sell with groats.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

I dare lay a groat,

A tertian ague is at least your lot.

Dryden, Fab.

Imagine a person of quality to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. [Sax. grutta, grut. See the second sense of GRIT.] Oatmeal, Yorkshire; oats hulled, but unground, Lancashire; more generally speaking, culled oats, half-ground. Oats that have the hulls taken off.

GROATSWORTH.* n. s. [from groat and worth.] The value of a groat. Sherwood.

G R O

GROCER.† n. s. [This should be written grosser, from gross, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus a fig, which their present state seems to favour. Dr. Johnson. — Though grossus means a green and not a dried fig; grossers or grocers were certainly dealers in foreign fruits and other foreign commodities. See the Paston Letters, ii. 210. The merchants, called grossers, were accused of engrossing merchandise of all kinds, Stat. 37. Edw. III. ch. 5. See Nares, Elem. of Orthoepey, p. 291. Our lexicography of more than two centuries since describes the grocers as those “who sell by the great.” Hulot.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar, and plumbs and spices for gain. Watts, Logick.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove. Garth.

GROCERY. n. s. [from grocer.] Grocers' ware, such as tea; sugar; raisins; spice.

His troops, being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart-loads of wife, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon.

GROG.* n. s. [in the language of our seamen.]

Gin and water, or any spirit and water; usually without sugar.

We stopped serving grog, except on Saturday nights.
Cook and King's Voyage.

GROGGY.* adj. [from grog.] In the merry language “of the seamen, to whom we are indebted for the word punch as well as grog, rather overflown with grog.”

GRO'GERAM.† } n. s. [gros, grain, French; grosso-
GRO'GRAM. } granus, low Latin. Ainsworth.]
GRO'GRAN. } Stuff woven with large wool and a rough pile.

I'll give you a new gown,
A new silk grogoran gown, B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.
Natalia affords great store of chamelots and grogerams. Sandys.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, program, or the like. Brown.

Whether alum doth intenerate the hairs of wool, and hair-stuff, as grograms. Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 289.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in program than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade. Addison, Spect.

Plain goodly would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her program gown. Swift.

GROIN.† n. s. [probably from the Goth. and Icel. grœin, distinctio.] The part next above the thigh.

Antipeus, a sonne of priam, threw
His lance at Ajax through the preasse, which went by him, and flew

On Leucus, wise Ulysses' friend: his groine it smote. Chapman.

The fatal dart arrives,
And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pass'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound
Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryden.

GROIN.* n. s. [Fr. groin de porcelet the snout of a hog. Cotgrave.] The nose or snout of a swine. This is still a northern word.

G R O

Salomon likeneth a faire woman, that is a fool of hire body, to a ring of gold that is worne in the groine of a sowe.

Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

To GROIN.* v. n. [Sax. gnanian; Icel. grenian; old Fr. groigner; Lat. grinnio. See To GROAN.]

Bears that groynd continually. Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 27.

GRO'WELL. n. s. [lithospermum, Latin.] Gromill or graymill. A plant. Miller.

GROOM.† n. s. [The original word, in all its senses, it gome or gom, a man; guma, Sax. guma, Goth. See GOM, BRIDEGROOM, and MAN. Dr. Jamieson considers the r as existing only in the Scottish and English groom or grome; but Kilian gives us the Teut. grom, a youth.]

1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.

Then called she a groom, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge. Spenser, F. Q.

From Egypt's king ambassadours they come;
Then many a squire attends, and many a groom. Fairfax.

Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom
Which brings a taper to the outward room. Donne.

In the time of Edward VI. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse. Peacock.

Would'st thou be touch'd
By the presuming hands of saucy grooms? Dryden, Don. Sebast.

Amid the fold he rages, nor the sheep
Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryden.

2. A young man.

I presume for to intreat this groom,
And silly maid, from danger to redeem.
Thou that art Fairfax.

The prime of our young grooms, even the top
Of all our lusty shepherds. Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

3. A man newly married.

By this the brides are wick'd, their grooms are dress'd;
All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast. Dryden.

To GROOVE.† v. a. [Sax. grafa, Icel. gnapan, Sax. to dig.] To cut hollow.

Of the box every joint was well groov'd. Swift.

GROOVE.† n. s. [groof, Icel. from grafa, to dig; gnapan, Sax.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.

He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.

The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other; and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Moxon, Mech. Exer.

GROO'VE.* n. s. [from groove.] A miner. Derbyshire. Grose.

To GROPE.† v. n. [Sax. gnapan, gnopian; and grape is our northern dialect for grope; the word has the same origin as gripe, to lay hold of. See To GRIPE.] To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark Grop'd I, to find out them. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

We grobe for the wall like the blind, and we grobe as if we had no eyes. Is. lix. 10.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;
And grobe at noon, as if involv'd with night. Sandys.

A boy was groping for cels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark grobe after knowledge; as St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course;
And with his out-stretch'd arms around him grop'd. Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,
I grobe and guess no more, but see my way. Arbutnot.

G R O

To GROPE.† v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see. This appears to be the most ancient usage of the word.

Thyn enterdite, and thy sentence

Again thyn own conscience,

Hereafter thou shalt fele and grope. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

These curates ben so negligent and slow

To gropen tenderly a conscience.

Ghaucer, Sompn. Tale.

How vigilant to grope men's thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain. Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grope them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light. Brown, Vulg. Err.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant

The bottom of the pan to grope.

Swift.

GRO'PER.† n. s. [from grope.] One that searches in the dark. Sherwood.

GRO'SER.* n. s. Our northern word for a gooseberry. See GOOSEBERRY.

GROSS.† adj. [gros, Fr. grosso, Ital. crassus, Lat.]

1. Thick; bulky.

The crows and choughs, that wing the midway air

Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

There are two gross volumes concerning the power of popes.

Baker on Learning.

2. Shameful; unseemly; enormous.

He ripely considered how gross a thing it were for men of his quality, wise and grave men, to live with such a multitude, and to be tenants at will under them. Hooker.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hooker.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of sundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be sin. Hooker.

There is a vain and imprudent use of their estates, which, though it does not destroy like gross sins, yet disorders the heart, and supports it in sensuality and dulness. Law.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross

You love my son: invention is ashamed,

Against the proclamation of thy passion,

To say thou dost not.

Shakespeare, All's well.

Examples gross as earth exhort me.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd

Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love

Vice for itself.

Milton, P. J.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the grossest sensuality, we cannot but admire it. Spral.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our want only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge.

But she dares never boast the present hour,

So gross the cheat, it is beyond her power.

Young.

4. Inlegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The sun's oppressive ray the roseat bloom
Of beauty blasting, gives the gloomy hue,
And feature gross. Thomson, Summer.

5. Dense; not refined; not attenuated; not pure.

It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the grosser, things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Of elements,

The grosser feeds the purer; earth the sea,

Earth and the sea feed air.

Milton, P. L.

Light fumes are merry, grosser fumes are sad;

Both are the reasonable soul run mad.

Dryden, Fab.

(Or suck the mists in grosser air below,

Or dip their pinions in the painted bow.

Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.

If she doth then the subtle sense excel,

How gross are they that drown her in the blood?

Davies.

And, in clear dream and solemn vision,

Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear. Milton, Comus.

Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare stating of the question with perspicuity and justness, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarse; rough; not delicate.

Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance. Wolton, Architecture.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.

His stature was of just height and all proportionate dimensions, avoiding the extremes of gross and meager. Fell.

9. Whole; having no deduction or abatement: as, the gross sum; the gross price.

10. Large; aggregate.

Another part in squadrons, and gross bands,

bend

Four ways their flying march.

Milton, P. L.

11. Heavy; oppressive.

Curs'd be the wit which cruelty refines,

Or to his father's rod the scorpion joins;

Your finger is more gross than the great monarch's loins.

Dryden, Hind. and Panth. P. iii.

GROSS. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste

The deep cut kee's upon the sands might run;

Or, if with caution leisurely were past,

Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison, Frecholder.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of publick blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.

Certain general inducements are used to make saleable your cause in gross. Hooker.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal.

Abbot, Descript. of the World.

There is confession, that is, the acknowledging our sins to God; and this may be either general or particular: The general is, when we only confess in gross that we are sinful; the particular, when we mention the several sorts and acts of our sins. Duty of Man.

Remember, son,

You are a general: other wars require you;

For see the Saxon gross begins to move. Dryden, K. Arthur.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet, in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past. Child on Trade.

3. Not individual, but a body together.

He hath ribbons of all the colours in th' rainbow; they come to him by the gross. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross

Of full three thousand ducats. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

You see the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated themselves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross. Dryden.

4. The chief part; the main mass.

Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things. Bacon, Essays.

The articulate sounds are more confused, though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [grosse, French.]

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GROSS-HEADED.* adj. [gross and head.] Stupid; dull; thick-sculled.

This was it, to pluck out of the heads of his admirers the conceit that all, who are not prelatiical, are gross-headed, thick-witted, illiterate, shallow. Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

GROSSLY.† adv. [from gross.]

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverised.

The cane did again appear with a linen hanging thereat, so grossly impregnated, as it promised to be delivered of a most happy burthen: Both cane and linen bent themselves on me, and in them I found another paper and a hundred ducats in gold. Shelton, Don Quix. iv. 13.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

And thine eyes
See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shakespeare.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?
— Speak not so grossly. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If I speak of light and rays as endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people would be apt to frame. Newton, Opticks.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GROSSNESS. n. s. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; spissitude; density; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shakespeare.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakespeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Then, all this earthy grossness quit,
Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton, Ode on Time.

This being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton, Opticks.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wise men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the quiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shakespeare.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Richardson, Clarissa.

GROT.† n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Sax. grop, a ditch; grop, Su. from groepu, to excavate; whence grot, q. d. groep, hollowed. Serenius. — In like manner, Mr. H. Tooke considers grot as formed from grop, to dig. Menage derives it from the Gr. κρυπτή, a place of concealment, as grot, in our language, seems originally to have meant, from κρυπναι, to hide; whence also crypt. The low. Lat. grotta was used in this sense. In French the word was also formerly crot or crotte, and crotesque. See Cotgrave.] A cave; a place of concealment; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

There is another grotto, or cavern, lying low underneath; it is contrived to the fashion of a cross, and here some of the Holy Innocents lie buried. Gregory, Posthum (1650.) p. 108.

God hath appointed a day wherein He will judge the secrets of men, that sin may not be the more secure for being close, but that it may be feared and shunned in grotts as well as in most publick places. Glanville, Serm. p. 313.

My lord had many grotto about his house, cut in the sandy sides of hills, wherein he delighted to sit and discourse. Aubrey's Anecd. ii. 475.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.
Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE.† adj. [grotesque, French; grotesco, Italian. From the strange and extravagant figures which were painted in the grottos or crypts of the ancient Romans.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

By rare artificers carved into story and grotesco work.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 138.

The champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thickest overgrown, grotesque and wild,
Access deny'd. Milton, P. L.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors. Pope.

GROTESQUE.* n. s. A wild design of a painter or engraver.

Painters — sometimes do serve themselves of instances that have no existence in nature. — What indeed was more common and familiar among the Romans themselves than the picture and statue of Terminus, even one of their deities; which yet, if we well consider, is but a piece of grotesca? Wotton, Elem. of Architecture.

Farce is that in poetry, which grotesque is in a picture. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

All the designs I have chanced to meet of the temptations of St. Antony, were rather a sort of wild grotesques, than any thing capable of producing a serious passion. Burke on the Sublime and Beautiful.

GROTESQUELY.* adv. [from grotesque.] In a wild, fantastical manner.

Death has despoiled the jester of his habiliments, and grotesquely decorated himself therewith. Espl. of Holbein's Dance of Death, p. 49.

GROTTA.* n. s. [Italian.] A cavern for coolness or pleasure.

Let it be turned to a grotta, or place of shade.

Bacon, Ess. (1632.) p. 263.

She turned into another walk, which led to a grotta.

Moral State of Eng. (1670.) p. 153.

GROTTU. n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grotto's run,
The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.
This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward on Fossils.

GROVE.† n. s. [Sax. groue; Germ. grove; Goth. grob.] A small wood, or place set with trees.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move:

Within this three mile may you see it coming;
 I say, a moving grove. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
 Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
 Thrice happy isles! Milton, P. L.
 She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove. Blackmore.
 Banish'd from courts and love,
 Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.
 Can fierce passions vex his breast,
 While every gale is peace, and every grove
 Is melody? Thomson, Spring.

To GROVEL.† v. n. [grufle, Icelandick, flat on the face. It may, perhaps, come by gradual corruption from ground fell. Dr. Johnson.—Rather from the Icel. verb grýva, to lie prostrate on the ground. Lye.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,
 And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground
 He grovelling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Spenser, F. Q.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,
 Inchas'd with all the honours of the world!
 If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
 Until thy head be circled with the same. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
 Oke-mast and beech, and cornell fruit they eate,
Grovelling like swine on earth, in lowliest sort. Chapman.

Now they lie
Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milton, P. L.
 Upon thy belly grovelling thou shalt go. Milton, P. L.
 Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim whate'er he can express;
 His grovelling sense will show my passion less. Dryden.
 Several thoughts may be natural which are low and grovelling. Addison, Spect.

GROVELLER.* n. s. [from grovel.] A person of a low, mean, grovelling disposition.

The man of a towering ambition, or a well regulated taste, has fewer objects to envy or to covet than the grovellers.
Shenstone.

GROUND.† n. s. [grunb, Saxon; grondt, Danish;
grundus, M. Goth. "consentibus omnibus dialect.
 Scytho-Scandicis." Serenius.]

1. The earth, considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action. The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water; again, we never say under earth, but under ground.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea. Ex. xiv. 16.

Man to till the ground
 None was, and from the earth a dewy mist
 Went up, and water'd all the ground. Milton, P. L.

From the other hill
 To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
 The cherubim descended, on the ground
 Gliding meteorous. Milton, P. L.

A black bituminous gurge
 Boils up from under ground. Milton, P. L.
 And yet so nimbly he would bound,
 As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.

I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jeremiah.
 There was dew upon all the ground. Judg. vi. 40.
 They summ'd their wings, and, soaring th' air sublime,
 With clang despis'd the ground. Milton, P. L.
 Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
 Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden, Æn.

3. Land; country.

The water breaks its bounds,
 And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.

4. Region; territory.

On heav'nly ground they stood, and from the shore
 They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss. Milton, P. L.
 With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood
 Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
 Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
 Of Baalim and Ashtaroth. Milton, P. L.

5. Estate; possession.

Uncasy still within these narrow bounds,
 Thy next design is on thy neighbour's grounds:
 His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
 Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dryden, Juv

6. Land occupied.

The rains o'erflow'd my ground,
 And my best Flanders mare was drown'd. Prior.

7. The floor or level of the place.

Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? 2 Sam. ii. 22.
 Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground. 1 Sam. v. 4.
 A multitude sit on the ground. St. Mat. xv. 35.
 Some part of the month of June, the water of this lake descends under ground, through many great holes at the bottom. Brown, Travels.

8. Depth; bottom. [af-grundith, the deep, Goth.
St. Luke, viii. 31.]

In the grounds of the sea. Lib. Fest. fol. 9. b.

9. Dregs; lees; fæces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors. In the plural only.

Set by them cyder, verjuice, sour drink, or grounds. Mortimer.

Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal. Sharp, Surgery.

10. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.

We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darksome colours. Hakewill.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

11. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

O'er his head

A well wrought heav'n of silk and gold was spread,
 Azure the ground, the sun in gold shore bright. Cowley.

Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.

Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine,
 The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.

12. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,
 And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
 For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

13. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest.

Though jealousy of state th' invention found,
 Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;
 That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,
 Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

14. The first principles of knowledge.

The concords will easily be known, if the fore grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Preface to Apocence.

Here statesmen, or of them they which can read,
 May of their occupation find the grounds. Downs.

The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably resolved; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectually, he doth it not irresistibly. Hammond.

After evening repasts, till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton on Education.

15. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.

He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.

Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney.

The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.

In the solution of the Sabbatizer's objection, my method shall be, to examine in the first place, the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth. White.

Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton, P. L.

Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon.

Sound judgement is the ground of writing well. Roscommon.

Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.

It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not a real ground for it. Wilkins.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.

Thus it appears, that suits at law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Kettwell.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.

The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.

16. The field or place of action.

Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;
And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring,
Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel.

17. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.

At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.

Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground,
While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryden.

He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Senefle. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

18. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.

Ev'ning mist,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels,
Homeward retreating. Milton, P. L.

Superior think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison, Spect.

Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addison.

19. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the others. Atterbury.

20. State of progress or recession.

I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wearies herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

21. The foil to set a thing off.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakspeare.

22. Formerly the pit of a play-house; and hence groundling, in a contemptuous sense. See GROUND-LING.

Stage-keeper. The understanding gentlemen o' the ground here asked my judgement. B. Jonson, Bartholom. Fair.

To GROUND.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place or set in the ground.
And friendship which a faint affection breeds
Without regard of good, dies like ill grounded seeds. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 1.

2. To fix on the ground. A kind of military phrase; as, to ground arms.

When the fans are thus discharged, the word of command in course is to ground their fans. Addison, Spect. No. 102.

3. To found, as upon cause, reason, or principle.
Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker.

The church of England, walking in the good and old way of the orthodoxal primitive fathers, groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's-day, and of other Christian holydays, upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment. White.

It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.

If your own actions on your will you ground,
Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influenced on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

4. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.

Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph. iii. 17.

GROUND. The preterite and part. pass. of grind.

How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground
And polish'd, looks a diamond? Hutubras.

GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.

GROUND-ASH. n. s. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.

A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw,
Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dryden, Æn.

Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call ground-ash. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GROUND-BAIT. n. s. [ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and to fish. Walton, Angler.

GROUND-FLOOR. n. s. [ground and floor.] The lower part of a house.

GROUND-IVY. n. s. [hedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.

Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GROUND-OAK. n. s. [ground and oak.]

If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the coopers trade for the making of hoops either of hasel or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a growdoak, would outlast six of the best ash.

Mortimer.

GROUND-PINE. n. s. [chamaepitys, Latin.] A plant.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road-sides.

Hill, Mat. Med.

GROUND-PLATE. n. s. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney way, and the binding joist.

Harris.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the groundplates, breast-summer, and beams.

Mortimer.

GROUND-PLOT. † n. s.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where can'st thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon?

Sidney.

A ground-plot square five lives of bees contains;

Emblems of industry and virtuous gains.

Harte.

2. The ichnography of a building.

Men skilled in architecture might do what we did not attempt; they might probably form an exact ground-plot of this venerable edifice.

Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

GROUND-RENT. n. s. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground.

A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds.

Johnson on Coins.

The site was neither granted him, nor given;

'Twas nature's, and the ground-rent due to Heav'n.

Harte.

GROUND-ROOM. n. s. A room on the level with the ground.

I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him.

Tatler.

GROUND-TACKLE.* n. s. In naval language, the anchor, cables, and whatsoever else is necessary, to make the ship ride safe at anchor in a proper ground.

GROUNDAGE.* n. s. [from ground.] A custom, or tribute, paid for the standing of a ship in port.

Blount.

It is ordinary to take custom for anchorage, groundage, &c.

Spelman.

GRO'UNDENLY.† adv. [from grounded.] Upon firm principles; upon good grounds.

Whether he performed his former promise — that can I not groundedly tell.

Bale, in Leland's N. Year's Gift, sign. li. 2.

He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject.

Glanville.

GRO'UNDLESS.† adj. [Sax. grundleap.] Void of reason; wanting ground.

But when vain doubt and groundless fear
Do that dear foolish bosom tear.

Prior.

We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them.

Atterbury.

The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may shew how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship.

VOL. II.

Frecheholder.

GRO'UNDLESSLY.† adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason.

This principle of feignedly or groundlessly conceiting.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of variol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors.

Boyle on Colours.

To doubt and deny thus groundlessly, and licentiously, or peevishly, is not so much properly to doubt, as plainly to shew an unwillingness we have that the thing we dispute about should be true; which is cowardly and disingenuous.

Goodman, Wint. Ex. Conf. P. iii.

GRO'UNDLESSNESS.† n. s. [from groundless.] Want of just reason.

I shall close up this chapter with remarking the groundlessness of that tradition, which makes Mahomed to be put into an iron chest that, by the force of loadstones, hangs in the air.

L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 81.

He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falchood and groundlessness of his calumny.

Tillotson.

GRO'UNDLING.† n. s. [from ground: German, grundel;

Teut. grundling.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the vulgar.

See the last sense of the substantive GROUND.

It offends me to the soul, to hear a robnston's perrwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

We filers may deserve to be senators;

And there we must step before you thick-skin'd tanners,

For we are horn three stories high; no base ones,

None of your groundlings, master.

Beaumont and Fl. The Prophetess.

GRO'UNDLY.† adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially. Not in use.

A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other men's works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room.

Ascham.

GRO'UNSEL. n. s. [from grund and pile, the basis, Sax. perhaps from sella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground.

The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbet on the groundsel is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freelier fall off.

Moxon, Mech. Exer.

GRO'UNSEL.† n. s. [senecio, Latin; grundepfelze, grundepfulle, Saxon; and our old lexicography writes this word ground-swell, as well as ground-sell. See Sherwood's Dict.] A plant.

Groundsell leaves, laid to with fine powder of frankincense, heale wounded sinewes.

Ruysch, Aln. (1580.)

GRO'UNDWORK. n. s. [from ground and work.]

1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional.

A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain,

Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below,

And mortals by the name of milky know;

The groundwork is of stars.

Dryden, Fab.

2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals.

The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience.

Milton on Education.

3. First principle; original reason.

The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity.

Spenser on Ireland.

The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.

GROUP.† n. s. [groupe, French; grosso, Italian, a knot, or cluster.] An assemblage of two or more figures of men, beasts, fruit, or the like, which have some apparent relation to each other in painting or sculpture; hence generally, a cluster; a collection; a number thronged together.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zetus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Addison.

You should try your graving tools
On this odious group of fools.

Swift.

This groupe of isles is, to use Mr. Waller's expression, walled round with rocks, which render them inaccessible to pirates or enemies. Bp. Berkeley, Prop. for Coll. in Bermuda, (1725.)

But here, thou say'st, the miseries of life
Are huddled in a group.

Young, Night Th. 8.

To GROUP.† v. a. [grouper, Fr.] To put into a distinct or separate collection.

The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or, as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colouring. Prior.

GROUSE.† n. s. [perhaps from gorse. See GORCOCK.] A kind of fowl; a heathcock.

The 'squires in scorn will fly the house
For better game, and look for grouse.

Swift.

GROUT.† n. s. [grut, Sax. See GRIT, and GROAT.]

1. Coarse meal; pollard.

King Hardiennute, midst Danes and Saxons stout,
Carous'd in nut-brown ale, and din'd on grout:
Which dish its pristine honour still retains,
And when each prince is crown'd in splendour reigns. King.

2. That which purges off; wort; sweet liquor.

Sweet grout, or whig, his bottle had, as much as it might hold. Warner, Albion's England.

Sweet honey some condense, some purge the grout. Dryden.

3. A kind of wild apple. [agriumclum, Lat.]

4. In building, a very thin coarse mortar; when mixed with hair, called hair-grout.

GRO'UTNOL.* See GROWTHEAD.

GRO'VY.* adj. [from grove.] Belonging to groves, thickets, woods; also, frequenting groves. Cotgrave in V. BOCAGER. Sherwood also gives this word; and it is an useful one.

To GROW.† v. n. preter. grew, part. pass. grown. [gropan, Saxon; groeyen, Dutch; gro, Su. Goth. Some refer both grow and green to the Greek χρῶς, colour.]

A bag, that growth in the fields, at the first is hard like a tennis-ball, and white; and after growth of a mushroom-colour, and full of light dust. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

But say, where grows the tree? from hence how far?

Milton, P. L.

In colder regions men compose

Poison with art; but here it grows.

Waller.

Those towers of oak o'er fertile plains might go,

And visit mountains where they once did grow.

Waller.

3. To shoot in any particular form.

Children, like tender osiers, take the bow;

And as they first are fashion'd, always grow.

Dryden, Juv.

4. To increase in stature.

I long with all my heart to see the prince;

I hope he is much grown since I last saw him.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The poor man had nothing, save one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought and reared up; and it grew up together with him and with his children. 2 Sam. xii. 3.

5. To come to manhood from infancy: commonly followed by up.

Now the prince groweth up fast to be a man, and is of a sweet and excellent disposition. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

The main thing to be considered, in every action of a child, is how it will become him when he is bigger, and whither it will lead him when he is grown up. Locke.

We are brought into the world children, ignorant and impotent; and we grow up in vanity and folly. Wake.

6. To issue, as plants from a soil, or as branches from the main trunk.

They will seem not stuck into him, but growing out of him.

Dryden, Æn. Ded. c.

7. To increase in bulk; to become greater, or more numerous.

Bones, after full growth, continue at a stay: as for nails, they grow continually. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Then their numbers swell,

And grow upon us.

Denham.

Divisions grow upon us, by neglect of practick duties: as every age degenerated from primitive piety, they advanced in nice enquiries. Decay of Piety.

8. To improve; to make progress.

Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. 2 Pet. iii. 18.

He then dispensed his best of legacies, his blessings; most passionately exhorting the young growing hopes of the family. Fell, Life of Hammond.

As he grew forward in years, he was trained up to learning, under one Pronapides, who taught the Pelasgick letter invented by Linus. Pope, Essay on Homer.

9. To advance to any state.

Nature, as it grows again towards earth,

Is fashion'd for the journey dull and heavy.

Shakespeare.

They doubted whereunto this would grow.

Acts, v. 24.

The king, by this time, was grown to such an height of reputation for cunning and policy, that every accident and event that went well was laid and imputed to his foresight. Bacon.

But when to ripen'd manhood he shall grow,

The greedy sailor shall the seas forego.

Dryden, Virg.

10. To come by degrees; to reach any state gradually.

After they grew to rest upon number, rather competent than vast, they grew to advantages of place, cunning diversions, and the like; and they grew more skilful in the ordering of their battles. Bacon, Essays.

Voice, or the other harmony of prose, I have so long studied and practised, that they are grown into a habit, and become familiar to me. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

The trespasses of people are grown up to heaven, and their sins are got beyond all restraints of law and authority.

Rogers, Serm.

11. To come forward; to gather ground.

Some seeing the end of their government nigh, and troublesome practice growing up, which may work trouble to the next governor, will not attempt redress. Spenser on Ireland.

It was now the beginning of October, and Winter began to grow fast on: great rain, with terrible thunder and lightning, and mighty tempests, then fell abundantly. Kneller.

12. To be changed from one state to another; to become either better or worse; to turn.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels. Shakespeare.

Hence, hence, and to some barbarous climate fly,
Which only brutes in human form does yield,
And man grows wild in nature's common field.

Dryden.

The nymph grew pale, and in a mortal fright,
Spent with the labour of so long a flight.

Dryden.

Patient of command

In time he grew; and growing us'd to hand,
He waited at his master's board for food.

Dryden, Æn.

We may trade and be busy, and grow poor by it, unless we regulate our expenses.

Locke.

You will grow a thing contemptible, unless you can supply the loss of beauty with more durable qualities.

Swift.

Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, grew to be a free port, where nations warring traded, as in a neutral country.

Arbutnot on Coins.

By degrees the vain, deluded elf,
Grew out of humour with his former self.

Harte.

13. To proceed as from a cause or reason.

What will grow out of such errors, as masked under the cloak of divine authority, impossible it is that ever the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them.

Hooker.

Shall we set light by that custom of reading, from whence so precious a benefit hath grown?

Hooker.

Take heed now that ye fail not to do this: why should damage grow to the hurt of the king.

Ec. iv. 22.

Hence grows that necessary distinction of the saints on earth and the saints in heaven; the first belonging to the militant, the second to the triumphant church.

Pearson.

The want of trade in Ireland proceeds from the want of people; and this is not grown from any ill qualities of the climate or air, but chiefly from so many wars.

Temple.

He looked at the fish, then at the fiddle, still grubbling in his pockets. Spectator, No. 444.

GRUBSTREET. n. s. Originally the name of a street near Moor-fields in London, much inhabited by writers of small histories, dictionaries, and temporary poems: whence any mean production is called grubstreet.

Χαῖρ ἰδοὺν μὲν ἀεὶ δαλα, μὲν ἄλγεα πικρὰ
Ἀσπασίους λέον ἔδας ἱκάνομαι.

The first part, though calculated only for the meridian of grubstreet, was yet taken notice of by the better sort. Arbutnot.
I'd sooner ballads write, and grubstreet lays. Gay.

To GRUDGE.† v. a. [from grugen, according to Skinner, which in French is to grind or eat. In this sense we say of one who resents any thing secretly, he chews it. Gwgnach, in Welsh, is to murmur; to grumble. Grunigh, in Scotland, denotes a grumbling morose countenance. Dr. Johnson.—Our word is from the old Fr. growchier, to murmur, to grumble, to complain. See also To GRUTCH.]

G R U

1. To envy; to see any advantage of another with discontent.

What means this banishing me from your counsels? Do you love your sorrow so well, as to grudge me part of it? Sidney.
'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He struggles into birth, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:
He creeps, he walks; and, issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began. Dryden.

These clamours with disdain he heard,
Much grudg'd the praise, but more the rob'd reward. Dryden.
Do not, as some men, run upon the tilt, and taste of the sediments of a grudging uncommunicative disposition.

Let us consider the inexhausted treasures of the ocean; and though some have grudg'd the great share that it takes of the surface of the earth, yet we shall propose this too, as a conspicuous mark and character of the wisdom of God. Bentley.
I have often heard the Presbyterians say they did not grudge us our employments. Swift.

2. To give or take unwillingly.

Let me at least a funeral marriage crave,
Nor grudge my cold embraces in the grave. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Ev'n in the most sincere advice he gave,
He had a grudging still to be a knave.

Dryden, Medal.

4. A forerunner or symptom of disease.

The smart or feeling of the sting of conscience is as sensible and lively a prognostick of the worm which never dieth, as heaviness of spirit or grudgings, are of fevers or other diseases.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 528.

My Dolabella,

*Hast thou not still some grudgings of thy fever? Dryden.

GRU'DGINGLY.* adv. [from grudge.] Unwillingly; malignantly; reluctantly.

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver.

2 Cor. ix. 7.

Like harpies they could scent a plenteous board;

Then to be sure they never fail'd their lord:

The rest was form, and bare attendance paid;

Then drank and eat, and grudgingly obey'd.

Dryden.

GRU'EL.* n. s. [gruan, gruile, French, from grus, corn-broth; gnut, Saxon; gruan, Norw. pottage of oats and barley.] Food made by boiling oatmeal in water; any kind of mixture made by boiling ingredients in water.

posset-drinks, and in general whatever relaxeth.

Arbuthnot.

GRUFF.* adj. [groff, Dutch; grof, Su. Goth.] Sour of aspect; harsh of manners.

Around the fiend, in hideous order, sat

Foul bawling infamy and bold debate,

Gruff discontent, through ignorance misled.

Garth.

They had no titles of honour among them but such as denoted some bodily strength or perfection; as, such an one the tall, such an one the stocky, such an one the gruff.

Addison, Spect. No. 432.

G R U

Zeno himself, the father of Stoicism, as gruff as he looked, might have enlarged our writer's catalogue for some very free thoughts.

Bentley, Phil. Lique. § 49.

GRU'FLY.* adv. [from gruff.] Harshly; ruggedly; roughly.

The form of Mars high on a chariot stood,

All sheath'd in arms, and gruffly look'd the god.

Dryden, Fab.

GRU'FFNESS.* n. s. [from gruff.] Ruggedness of mien; harshness of look or voice.

No gruffness, I beseech you; use them civilly, and stick to your point.

Lett. to Atterbury (supposed from Smalbridge,) Ep. Cor. i. 17.

GRUM.* adj. [contracted from grumble, and a low word, Dr. Johnson says, citing the example from Arbuthnot. It is no other, however, than grim; Sax. gham. See GRIM.] Sour; surly; severe.

I found Sir Thomas Lee, who was very grim; and we had very little discourse.

Ld. Clarendon's Diary, p. 282.

Nick looked sour and grim, and would not open his mouth.

Arbuthnot.

To GRUMBLE. v. n. [grommelen, grommen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the old French, gromelen. Both may be referred to the Cimbr. grem, murmur.]

1. To murmur with discontent.

A bridegroom,

A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find. Shakespeare.

Thou grumblest and rail'st every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

Th' accurst Philistian stands on th' other side,

Grumbling aloud, and smiles 'twixt rage and pride.

Chaucer.

Suitors, all but one, will depart grumbling, because they miss of what they think their due.

South.

Providence has allotted man a competency: all beyond it is superfluous; and there will be grumbling without end, if we reckon that we want this, because we have it not.

L' Etrange.

L'Avare, not using half his store,

Still grumbles that he has no more.

Prior.

2. To growl; to gnarl.

The lion, though he sees the toils are set,

Yet, pinch'd with raging hunger, scours away;

Hunts in the face of danger all the day;

At night, with sullen pleasure, grumbles o'er his prey.

Dryden.

3. To make a hoarse rattle.

Didst thou never see a drum? Canst thou make this grumble?

Beaum. and Fl. The Pilgrim.

Thou grumbling thunder join thy voice.

Motieus.

Like a storm

That gathers black upon the frowning sky,

And grumbles in the wind.

Rowe, Royal Convert.

Vapours foul

Dash on the mountains brow, and shake the woods

That grumbling wave below.

Thomson, Winter.

GRU'MBLER.* n. s. [from grumble.] One that grumbles; a murmurer; a discontented man.

The half-pence are good half-pence, and I will stand by it: if I made them of silver, it would be the same thing to the grumbler.

Swift.

GRU'MBLING.* n. s. [from grumble.] A murmuring through discontent; a grudge.

I have serv'd

Without or grudge or grumbings.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

GRU'MBLINGLY.* adv. [from grumbling.]

1. Discontentedly; sourly.

2. In a hoarse manner.

They speak good German at the court, and in the city; but the common and country people seem'd to speak grumblingly.

Brown, Trav. p. 156.

GRU

GRUME. n. s. [grumeau, French; grumus, Latin.] A thick viscid consistence of a fluid: as the white of an egg, or clotted like cold blood. Quincy.

GRUMLY. adv. [from grum.] Sullenly, morosely.

GRUMOUS. adj. [from grume.] Thick; clotted. The blood, when let, was black, grumous, the red part without a due consistence, the serum saline, and of a yellowish green. Arbuthnot on Diet.

GRUMOUSNESS. n. s. [from grumous.] Thickness of a coagulated liquor.

The cause may be referred either to the coagulation of the serum, or grumousness of the blood. Wiseman, Surgery.

GRUNDEL.* n. s. Another name for the fish called a groulling.

GRUNSEL. n. s. [More usually grounsil, unless Milton intended to preserve the Saxon ground.] The groundsil; the lower part of the building.

Next came one

Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lopp'd off
In his own temple, on the grunsil edge,
Where he fell flat, and sham'd his worshippers. Milton, P. L.

TO GRUNT.* } v. n. [grunio, Latin; grunan,
TO GRUNTLE. } Saxon; grenia, Icel. gronder, grongner, Fr. See TO GROAN. Grunt in Chaucer is the pret. of groan, which Mr. Malone, in a note on the use of grunt by Shakspeare in Hamlet, has mistaken for the word before us. The sense of grunt for groan, however, which Dr. Johnson has here overpassed, is very ancient in our language.]

1. To murmur like a hog.

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. Shakspeare.

Pensive in mud they wallow all alone,
And snore, and grundle, to each other's moan. D. of Buckingham, Rehearsal, i. 1.

Thy blind'd boars may slumber undisarm'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chesnut shade. Tickell.

The scolding quean to louder notes doth rise,
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;
The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round. Swift.

2. To groan.

Those persones, I warant, as well pleased shall be all,
As wood Rome shall grunte at the rubbynge on the gull. Defence of Peace, (1533.) To the Boke.

Who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

GRUNT.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of a hog.

Swine's snows, swine's bodies, took they, bristles, grunts. Chapman.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs;
With many a doleful grout and doleful squeak,
Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.

From hence were heard
The grunts of bristled boar, and groans of bears,
And herds of howling wolves. Dryden, Æn.

2. A groan.

Round about I heard
Of dying men the grunts. Turberville, Ov. Hyperm. to Lynceus.

GRUNTER. n. s. [from grunt.]

1. He that grunts.

2. A kind of fish. [χρῆνις,] Ainsworth.

GRUNTING.* n. s. [from grunt.] The noise of swine. Barret.

Lament ye swine! in gruntings spend your grief;
For you, like me, have lost your sole relief. Gay, Pastorals.

GRUNTINGLY.* adv. [from grunting.] Murmur-ingly; mutteringly. Sherwood.

GUA

GRUNTLING. n. s. [from grunt.] A young hog.

TO GRUTCH.* v. n. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from grudge, Dr. Johnson says; which is a great mistake. For grutch is the oldest form of our word grudge, and is used by Wicliffe in his translation of the New Testament, as also by Gower and Chaucer; and is regularly adopted from the old French grouchier. Grutch is yet used in colloquial language.] To envy; to repine; to be discontented.

Jesus witing at himself, that his disciples grutchiden of this thing, seide to them, this thing sclaudrith you. Wicliffe, St. John, vi. 61.

What alleth you to grutchen thus and grone? Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Prologue.

He knewe the names well of tho,
The whiche agene him grutched so. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

The poor at the enclosure doth grutch,
Because of abuses that fall,

Iest some men should have but too much,
And some again nothing at all. Tusser, Husbandry.

But what we're born for we must bear,
Our frail condition it is such,

That what to all may happen here,
If't chance to me, I must not grutch. B. Jonson.

GRUTCH. n. s. [from the verb.] Malice; ill-will.

In it he melted leaden bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;

To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter t' any such. Hudibras.

GRY.* n. s. [γῆ, Gr.] Any small thing; a thing of little or no value; a small measure.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch. Locke.

GRYPHON.* See GRIFFIN. Milton writes it gryphon, P. L. ii. 943.

GRYTH.* See GRITH.

GUA'YACUM.* n. s. A medicinal wood.

Guaiacum is attenuant and aperient. It is excellent in many chronick cases, and was once famous for curing the venereal disease, which it still does singly in warmer climates, but with us we find it insufficient. We have a resin of it, improperly called gum guaiacum. Hill.

The acid spirit in star-water possesseth the virtues, in an eminent degree, of that of guaiacum, and other medicinal woods. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 47.

GUARANTEE.* n. s. [guarant, French. The substantive and the verb are indifferently written guarantee, and guaranty.]

1. A power who undertakes to see stipulations performed.

God, the great guarantee for the peace of mankind, where laws cannot secure it, may think it the concern of his providence. South.

A prince distinguished by being a patron of Protestants, and guarantee of the Westphalian treaty. Addison on the War.

An oath is a promise made to God, and God is our superior, superior to kings; and he is also the guarantee and avenger of all breach of faith and injustice. Leesley.

2. Engagement to secure the performance of articles.

It was made in contradiction to the engagements that the crown of England had taken, when King William gave his guaranty to the treaty of Travendhal. Ld. Bolingbroke.

TO GUA'RANTY.* v. a. [garantir, French.] To undertake to secure the performance of any articles.

France hath always profited skilfully of its having guaranteed the treaty of Munster. Ld. Chesterfield.

Publick treaties made under the sanction, and some of them guaranteed by the sovereign powers of other nations. Burke on French Affairs.

To GUARD.† v. a. [garder, French; from our word ward, the w being changed by the French into g; as Galles for Wales. Dr. Johnson.—The French probably adopted it from the low. Lat. warda, or garda. Goth. warda, and wardian. See To WARD.]

1. To watch by way of defence and security.

Who by stealth
Had from his wakeful custody purloin'd
The guarded gold. Milton, P. L.

2. To protect; to defend.

Naked the graces guarded you from all
Dangers abroad, and now your thunder shall. Waller.
Your pow'r you never use, but for defence,
To guard your own or others innocence. Dryden.
Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard their shore from an expected foe. Dryden.
The port of Genoa is very ill guarded against the storms. Addison on Italy.

3. To preserve by caution.

One would take care to guard one's self against this particular imperfection, because it is that which our nature very strongly inclines us to. Addison, Spect.

4. To provide against objections.

Homer has guarded every circumstance with as much caution as if he had been aware of the objection. Boome on the Odyssey.

5. To adorn with lists, laces, or ornamental borders.

Give him a livery
More guarded than his fellows. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
See a fellow

In a long motley, guarded with yellow. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

6. Minshew says, that "the gard of a garment" is so called, "because it gards and keeps the garment from tearing." It is not, however, improbable that gard (for so our old authors write it) is, in this sense, another form of gird, to fasten by binding. See To GIRD. Yet Dr. Johnson makes no distinction.

How brave is he? in a guarded coat? B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

Some of you have not your rich suits guarded. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. A.

*Within this year or two, I hope we shall be called to be examiners, wear politick gowns guarded with copper lace, making great faces full of fear and office. Beaumont and Fl. Woman-Hater.

To GUARD. v. n. To be in a state of caution or defence.

There are cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier.

To guard against such mistakes, it is necessary to acquaint ourselves a little with words. Watts, Logic.

GUARD.† n. s. [garde, French; ward, Teutonic.]

1. A man, or body of men, whose business is to watch by way of defence or prevention.

The guard bare them, and brought them back into the guard-chamber. 1 Kings, xiv. 28.

Up into heaven, from paradise, in haste
The angelic guards ascended, mute, and sad,
For man. Milton, P. L.

They miss'd courts, guards, a gay and num'rous train,
Our judges like our laws were rude and plain. Cowley.

With lifted hands, and gazing eyes,
His guards behold him soaring through the skies. Dryden.

He must be trusted to his own conduct, since there cannot always be a guard upon him, except what you put into his own mind by good principles. Locke.

They, usurping arbitrary power, had their guards and spies after the practice of tyrants. Swift.

GUBERNATION. n. s. [gubernatio, Lat.] Government; superintendency; superiour direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is transacted by the man Jesus, inhabited by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

GUBERNATIVE.* adj. [from gubernate.] Governing. In Urry's glossary to Chaucer gubernatife occurs; and in modern times the word has been revived. See Qu. Rev. vol. vii. p. 248.

GU'DGEON.† n. s. [goujon, French. Our own word was formerly gogcon, or googcon. Huloet's Dict.]

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbot's dignity my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

2. A man easily cheated. This he did to draw you in, like so many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.

3. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allurements: gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike, Dr. Johnson says, citing the example from Shakspeare. The old phrase, it may be added, was "to swallow a gudgeon," i. e. to be deceived, cstire befflé. Sherwood's Dict.

But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Such as Gregory or Bede were, who being honest, and withal credulous, and trusting others, swallowed many a gudgeon. Favour, Antiq. over Noveltie, (1619.) p. 96.

Buchanan would not swallow that gudgeon of a British consul. Bp. Lloyd, Hist. of Ch. Gov. in Gr. Brit. (1684) Pref.

GUERDON.† n. s. [guerdon, French; from the Teut. word, or werth, price, value.] A reward; a recompence, in a good and bad sense. A word now rarely if at all used.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see,
By him who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misfeigning her true knight to be. Spenser, F. Q.
He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive the just guerdon of all his former villanies. Kneller.
Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the abhorred sheers,
And slits the thin-spun life. Milton, Lycidas.
TO GUERDON.* v. a. [old Fr. guerdonner; and one of our own oldest verbs. Chaucer uses it.] To reward. Obsolete.

We vow to guerdon it with such due grace,
As shall become our bounty, and thy place.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.
See you well guerdon'd for these good deserts.
Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

GUERDONABLE.* adj. [from guerdon]. Worthy of reward. Obsolete.

Finding it as well guerdonable, as grateful, to publish their lives. Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 75.

GUERDONLESS.* adj. [guerdon and less]. Unrewarded. Obsolete. Bullockar.

Chaucer, Compl. of the Bl. Knight, ver. 400.

TO GUESS.† v. n. [ghessen, Dutch; gissen, Germ].
Junius refers to the Danish giette, to make conjecture; Serenius, to the Sax. gætan, to divine, from the Goth. gæta, whence the Icel. giska, q. d.
gaelski. Lye, however, prefers the Irish geasam, to conjecture, to divine.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgement.

Incapable and shallow innocents!
You cannot guess who can'st your father's death. Shakespeare.
Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.
— Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come, where God pleaseth not to give impediment? Raleigh, Hist.

Their issue swarming bands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and dress,
To be Tuxcallan enemies I guess. Dryden, Ind. Emp.
The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,
How that ungrateful charming maid
My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.
One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God.
Stillingfleet.

TO GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgement.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart. Locke.

GUESS. n. s. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgement without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces.
Shakespeare.

His guess was usually as near to prophecy as any man's.
Fell, Life of Hammond.

A poet must confess
His art's like his physick, but a happy guess. Dryden.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.

No man is blest by accident, or guess,
True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUESSER. n. s. [from guess]. Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crotchet,
To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
To give thee lawn sleeves, a mitre and rochet,
Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUESSINGLY. adv. [from guessing]. Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.

I have a letter guessingly set down. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

GUEST.† n. s. [gæst, gejt, gyt, Saxon; gast, Goth.
giestr, Icel. gwest, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. St. Luke xix. 7.

Methinks a father
Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Tell my royal guest
I add to his commands my own request. Dryden, Æn.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.
O desarts, desarts! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting? Sidney.

Those happiest smiles
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence
As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakespeare.

GUESTCHAMBER. n. s. [from guest and chamber.] Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? St. Mark, xiv. 14.

GUESTRITE. n. s. [from guest and rite.] Offices due to a guest.

Ulysses so dear
A gift esteem'd it, that he would not wear
In his black fleet that guest-rite to the war. Chapman.

GUEST-WISE.* adv. [from guest and wise.] In the manner of a guest.

My heart with her, but as guest-wise, sojourn'd.
Shakespeare, Mid. Night Dream.

TO GU'GGLE. v. n. [gorgogliare, Italian.] To sound as water running with intermissions out of a narrow mouthed vessel.

GUIDABLE.* adj. [from guide.] That may be governed by counsel.

A submissive and guidable spirit, a disposition easy to all.
Sprat, Sermon before the King, (1676.) p. 11.

GUIDAGE. n. s. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Ainsworth.

GUIDANCE. n. s. [from guide.] Direction; government.

They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men.
Spenser.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them.
Atterbury.

Particular application must be left to Christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

GUI

This to the young — but thy experienc'd age
Wants not the guidance of a former sage.

Sewell.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party.

Swift.

TO GUIDE.† v. a. [guider, French; guier, guyer, old French; whence our ancient word gie for guide. See TO GIE. Serenius traces guide to the Icel. gueta, the diminutive of gae, to take heed.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth.

St. John, xvi. 13.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours' coffers.

Decay of Piety.

Whosoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

South.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims, when nothing but the interest of this world guides men, they many times conclude that the slightest wrongs are not to be put up.

Kettlewell.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me.

Ps. xxxi. 3.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house.

Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. s. [guide, French, from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey.

Wisd. xviii. 3.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance

So far to make us wish for ignorance?

And rather in the dark to grope our way,

Thap led by a false guide to err by day?

Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,

And left him to an happy guide.

Waller.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God, by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation.

Pearson.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work.

Hooker.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,

But we have sure experience for our guide.

Dryden, Fob.

GUIDELESS.† adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governor or superintendant.

Thus leave this guideless realm an open prey

To endless storms, and waste of civil war.

Sackville, Gorboduc, v. 2. (1561.)

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,

Though in his life by blood and ruin breath'd,

To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd.

Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky vallies blow,

Whose every puff bears empty shades away,

Which guideless in those dark dominions stray.

Dryden.

GUIDEPOST.* n. s. [guide and post.] A post, where two or more roads meet, directing the traveller which to follow.

Great men are the guideposts and marks in the state.

Burke, Sp. on Americ. Taxation.

GUIDER. n. s. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide. Obsolete.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us.

Shakspeare.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an imposthume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his surgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand.

South.

GUI

GUIDRESS.* n. s. [from guider.] She who guides or directs. Obsolete.

In earthe alone to be theyr gydress.

Carson, Pilgrimage of the Soul, (1482.)

Ab! fickle and blind guidress of the world,

What pleasure hast thou in my misery?

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

GUIDON.† n. s. [French; from guider, to direct, to shew.] A standardbearer; a standard. Obsolete.

On the east wall hangs his target, coat of arms and crest, and near unto them a guidon of the Order of the Bath.

Ashmole, Berk. ii. 377.

GUILD.† n. s. [Sax. gild, tribute, from giban, to pay; fraternities originally contributing sums towards a common stock; gylbreipe, a fellowship, a corporation. The word is found in various tongues; old French gilde, société, Lacombe; Teut. gilde, societas contributionum, Kilian; Icel. gilde, convivium, symposium, Serenius. The last was perhaps a disorderly meeting, deviating from the original plan of sober combination into the extravagancies of unrestrained festivity.]

1. A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word guild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution.

Covecl.

In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait

At some sick miser's triple-bolted gate,

For their defrauded absej' foals they make

A moan so loud, that all the guilt awake.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. A townhall.

The room was longe and wyde,

As if some gyeld or solemn temple were.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 43.

GUILDABLE.* adj. [from guild.] Liable to tax.

By the discretion of the sheriffs, and bailiff, and other ministers, in places guildable.

Spelman, Adm. Jur.

GUILDHALL.* n. s. [from guild.] The hall in which a corporation usually assembles; a townhall.

The mayor towards guildhall hies him in all post.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Towards three or four o'clock,

Look for the news that the guildhall affords.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

GUILE.† n. s. [guille, gille, old French, the same with wile. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke deduces it from the Sax. pyrlan, ge-pyrlan, to conjure, to divine; consequently, he says, to practise cheat and imposture. Div. of Purley, ii. 324. — The Dutch gylen, the low Germ. begigeln, to beguile, and the Su. Goth. gilia, to deceive, to entrap in snares, must be also remembered; Icel. viel, deception. Barbazan says, that the old French word is derived from the Arabick, and that it was anciently written ghile. Diss. sur la Langue Fran. Our word is rarely used in the plural, but it occurs in Shelton's Transl. of Don Quixote, P. iv. ch. vi. "If his guiles be not at the beginning detected." Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,

And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,

GUI

Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and sighs she did abhor. Spenser, F. Q.
Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile.
St. John, i. 47.

When, I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

We may, with more successful hope, resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton, P. L.

Not thou his malice and false guile condemn:
Subtile he needs must be who could seduce
Angels. Milton, P. L.

To GUILE. * v. a. [Fr. guiller, guiler; which Barbazan deduces from the Lat. velare.] To disguise cunningly;
to conceal.

For who wotes not that woman's subtiltyes
Can guyle Argus? Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 7.

Is it repentance,
Or only a fair shew to guile his mischiefs?
Beaumont and Fl. The Pilgrim.

GUILEFUL. * adj. [from guile.] Treacherous; deceiving.
Not proper.

Thus ornament is but the guiled shore
To a most dangerous sea. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

GUILEFUL. adj. [from guile and full.]

1. Willy; insidious; mischievously artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skillful against guile. Hooker,

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unwitting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton, P. L.

The guileful phantom now forsook the shroud,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud. Dryden, Æn.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.

I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay. Tit. Andronicus.

GUILEFULLY. † adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously;
treacherously.

He cannot be excused, in that he caused not his friends to restore the money which they had guilefully borrowed.

To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd. Milton, P. L.

GUILEFULNESS. † n. s. [from guileful.] Secret treachery; tricking cunning. Sherwood.

GUILELESS. † adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit;
void of insidiousness; simply honest.

And the plain ox,
That harmless, honest, guileless animal,
In what has he offended? Thomson, Spring.

I chas'd the guileless daughters of the plain,
Nor dropp'd the chase, till Josse was my prey,
Shenstone, Eleg. 26.

GUILELESSNESS. * n. s. [from guileless.] Freedom from deceit; pure honesty and innocence.

GUILER. † n. s. [from guile. Norm. Fr. gylour.] A deceiver; one that betrays into danger by insidious practices.

In the laste times there schulen come gilours, wandering after their own desires. Wicliffe, St. Jude, ver. 18.

Where those two guilers with Malbecco were. Spenser, F. Q.

But he was wary wise in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey. Spenser, F. Q.

GUILLotine. * n. s. [French. Said to be the invention of one Dr. Guillotine, at the early part of the French democratical revolution, viz. in 1792, who himself suffered under the machine. It was, however, nothing more than a slight improvement on an ancient instrument, formerly used both in Scotland and England, for beheading criminals.]

GUI

A machine for separating, at one stroke, the head of a person from the body.

A bloody ruffian, who, whilst he is receiving their homage, is measuring them with his eye, and fitting to their size the slider of his guillotine. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

Yes; to my country's justice I appeal,
Nor dread the press, the guillotine, nor wheel.

GUILLotine. * v. a. [from the noun.] To decapitate by the guillotine.

Had you been guillotined by Robespierre.
• Bp. Watson, Apol. for the Bible, in Letters to T. Paine, L. 7.

GUILT. † n. s. [xylt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself. Dr. Johnson. — Guilt is ge-pigle, guiled, guil'd, guilt; the past participle of ge-pigian.
And to find guilt in any one, is to find that he has been guiled, or, as we now say, begailed; as wicked means witched, or bewitched. To pronounce guilty is indeed to pronounce wicked. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 324.]

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime;
the contrary to innocence.

It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution.
Bacon, Hist. VII.

When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.

Close pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

GUILT-SICK. * adj. [guilt and sick.] Diseased by guilt.

Then we live indeed,
When we can go to rest without alarm
Given every minute to a guilt-sick conscience
To keep us waking, and rise in the morning
Secure in being innocent. Beaumont and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

GUILTILY. † adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence;
without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die.

The satire should be like the porcupine,
That shoots sharp quills out in each angry line,
And wounds the blushing cheek, and fiery eye,
Of him that hears, and readeth guiltily. Hp. Hall, Sat. v. 3.

This leprous soul, that attends guiltily, but yet comfortably, your determination upon it. Donne, Devot. p. 215.

GUILTINESS. n. s. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness. Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shakespeare.

GUILTLESS. † adj. [from guilt.]

1. Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

- Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakespeare, Othello.
Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Numb. v. 31.
Thou, who dost all thou wishest at thy will,
And never willest aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.
Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he, that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.
The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow. Dryden.
Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.
2. Unpolluted.
Such gardening tools as Art yet rude,
Guiltless of fire, had form'd. Milton, P. L.
This bush of yellow beard, this length of hair,
Which from my birth inviolate I bear,
Guiltless of steel, and from the razor free,
Shall fill a plenteous crop, reserv'd for thee. Dryden, Fab.
3. Having no experience.
Heifers guiltless of the yoke. Pope, Iliad.
GUI'LTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt;
innocently.
GUI'LTLESSNESS. n. s. [from guiltless.] Innocence;
freedom from crime.
A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney.
I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guilt- lessness I was better assured than any man living could be.
King Charles.
- GUI'LT. † adj. [ȝylt, Saxon, condemned to pay a fine for an offence. But see the etymology of GUILT.]
1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.
We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Gen. xlii. 21.
Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death?
Shakespeare.
With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryden.
Farewell the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans. Dryden.
There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson.
2. Wicked; corrupt.
All the tumult of a guilty world,
Tost by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thomson.
3. Conscious.
I'll give out all he does is dictated from other men, and swear it too, if thou'lt ha'me; and that I know the time and place where he stole it, though my soul be guilty of no such thing. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.
When we are not guilty to ourselves. Tillotson.
- GUI'LTY-LIKE.  adv.* [guiltily and like.] Guiltily.
Cassio, my lord! No sure I cannot think it,
That he would steal away so guilty-like Seeing you coming. Shakespeare, Othello.
- GUI'MPLE.  See WIMPLE.*
- GUI'NEA. † n. s. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold. "They [the ships belonging to the African company] brought home such store of gold that administered the first occasion for the coinage of those pieces, which from thence had the denomination of guineas; and what was afterwards made of the same species, was coined of the gold that was brought from that coast by the royal company." Lord Clarendon's Life, vol. ii. p. 376.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.

By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind:
Gits, who prefer a guinea to mankind. Young.

GUI'NEADROPPER. n. s. [guinea and drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.

Who now the guineadropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards. Gay.

GUI'NEAHEN. n. s. A fowl, supposed to be of Guinea.

GUI'NEAPEPPER. n. s. [capsicum, Latin.] A plant.
Miller.

GUI'NEAPIG. n. s. A small animal with a pig's snout, brought, I believe, from Africa.

GUI'NIAD.  n. s.* [Welsh, gwyn, white.] A name for the fish called whiting.

GUISE. n. s. [The same with wise; guise, French;
piya, Saxon, the p or w being changed, as is common,
into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.

His own sire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Spenser.

Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant, and beguile the wise. Fairfax.

Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose. Milton, P. L.

By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right. Milton, P. L.

Back, shepherds, back;
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise. Milton, Comus.

Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. More.

2. Practice; custom; property.

I have drunk wine past my usual guise;
Stong wine commands the fool, and moves the wise. Chapman.

This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. B. Jonson.

The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To slight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.

When I was very young, nothing was so much talk'd of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.

The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.

GUI'SER.  n. s.* [from guise, dress; or from the Teut. guyse, a scoff.] Mummers, who go about at Christmas; persons in disguise. Used in Derbyshire, according to Pegge. See MUMMER.

GUI'TAR. † n. s. [ghitarra, Italian; guitare, French;
guitarra, Spanish; kitar, Arab. cithara, Lat.
κίθαρά, Gr. whence gittern, and cithern, old English.
"The shesta has six strings, and is of the same species with the kitar; whence our guitar, from the Spanish guitarra, seems to have been borrowed; as it was a favourite instrument with the Arabian conquerors of Spain." Richardson on the Languages, &c. of Eastern Nations, ch. 3. sect. 6. The ancient κισάρα is said to have had four strings; and the Persian ciar, four, and tar, a string, has been mentioned as the etymon of this instrument in that language. See Bp. Chandler's Vindication of the Defence of Christianity, vol. i. p. 51.] A stringed instrument of musick.

Sallads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian spark's guitar.

Prior.

To GULCH.* v. n. [Icel. gule, gula, bucca; gupa, buccis vorare; diductis; Su. Vulg. goelka, avidè deglutiendo devorare. Serenius. Teut. gulsigh, voracious.] To swallow voraciously.

Conveyes his burden and the waves to gulching seas doth cast. Turbervill, Manly, Ecl. 2.

GULCH.† } n. s. [from the verb.]

GU'LC'HIN. }

1. A glutton. A word of contempt.

Then you'll know us, you'll see us then, you will, gulch, you will. H. Jonson, Poetaster.

Appet. You muddy gulche, dar'st look me in the face?—
Crap. Good Appetitus—

Appet. Peace, you fat bawson. Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

2. The act of devouring.

Then he has me most cruelly upon the hip, and brings me over with a most deadly gulch.

Echard, Gr. Cont. of the Clergy, Obs. p. 41.

GULES.† adj. [Fr. gueule; generally supposed to be from the Lat. gula, the throat, the colour of which is usually red. The word has been little noticed beyond the jargon of heraldry; though one of our old dramatists introduced guled for made red. Milton also uses "guly dragons," for red dragons, in his first book of Reformation in England. But this again is heraldick language.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;

Then what should war be? Shakespeare, Timon.

He whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the night resemble,
When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now this dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now is he total gules. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Come, sons of honour,
True virtue's hoirs; thus hatch'd with Britain blood,
Let's march to rest, and set in gules like suns.

Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

GULF.† n. s. [golfe, Fr. gulf, bas Bret. golfo, Ital. κόλπος, Greek.]

1. A bay; an opening into land.

The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatick. Knoller.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.

Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace

To yawning gulf of deep Avernus' hole. Spenser, F. Q.

I know thou'd'st rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,

Than flatter him in a bower. Shakespeare, Coriol.

This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description. Addison on Italy.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.

3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

4. Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or stomach.

Scul of dragon, tooth of wolf,

Witches mummy; maw and gulf

Of the ravening salt sea shark;

Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

GU'LFY.† adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; vorticatus.

Whoso had seen them on the gulfy flood,

He would have thought some Delos now againe,

Some towne, some citie, or some desert wood,

Or some new unknowne world from shores of Spaine,

Laincht off to seas. Mir. for Mag. p. 816.

Rivers arise; whether thou be the son

Of utmost Tweed, or Oose, or gulfy Dun. Milton, Vac. Ex.

At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,

All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,

And 'scap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope, Odyssey.

High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle

Fronts the deep roar of disemboing Nile. Pope, Odyssey.

To GULL. v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.]

To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Yet love these sorceries did remove, and move

Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,

But Mart was too too politick. Hudibras.

They are not to be gulled twice with the same trick.

L'Estrange.

The Roman people were grossly gulled twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their designing leaders taught,

The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.

For this advantage age from youth has won,

As not to be out-riden, though out-run;

By fortune he was now to Venus trun'd,

And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:

Of him disposing in his own abode,

He sooth'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, 'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.

Being fed by us you us'd us so,

As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo bird,

Useth the sparrow. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,

Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,

And made the most notorious geck and gull

That e'er invention plaid on. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

His very touching aught that is learned, soils it, and lays him still more and more open, a conspicuous gull. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

That paltry story is untrue,

And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras.

3. A sea-bird. [mergus. Probably from gulo, as the bird is a voracious feeder.]

I do fear,

When every feather sticks in his own wing,

Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,

Which flashes now a phoenix. Shakespeare, Tim. of Athens.

GU'LLCATCHER. n. s. [gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

G U L

GULLER.† n. s. [from gull.] A cheat; an impostor. Sherwood.

GULLERY.† n. s. [from gull.] Cheat; imposture.

Leo Decimus, that scoffing pope, took an extraordinary delight in humouring of silly fellows, and to put gulleries upon them. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 149.

There hath been not long since, within the compass of these twenty years, a merry gullery put upon the world, concerning a guild of men, who style themselves The Brethren of the Rosie Cross. Hales, Rem. p. 282.

There never was so gross a gullery in the world as this.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 402.

Ha, ha! good gullery; he does it well i' faith.

Beaum. and Fl. Wit at several Weapons.

Gulleries, wherewith poor mortals are befooled and cheated.

Bp. Rust, Discourse of Truth, § 9.

GULLET.† n. s. [goulet, Fr. gula, Lat.]

1. The throat; the passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe; the oesophagus.

It might be his doom,

One day to sing

With gullet in string.

Denham.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipe; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are not without wizzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,

By which the artful gullet is embrac'd.

Blackmore.

The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet.

Arbuthnot.

2. A small stream or lake. Not now in use.

The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean. Heylyn.

A deep, unpassable gullet of water, without bridge, ford, or ferry. Fuller, Holy War, p. 253.

GULLIBLITY.* n. s. [from gull.] Credulity; a low expression, sometimes used for cullibility.

G U M

To GULP. v. a. [gulpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morsel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estrange.

I see the double flaggon charge their hand;

See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,

While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gay.

GULP. n. s. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep aspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow. More.

As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,

And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden, Fab.

GULPH.* See GULF.

GUM.† n. s. [Sax. zoma; Fr. gomme; Ital. gomma; Lat. gummi.]

1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstrooms; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous dissolvent. Quincy.

One whose eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood,

Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees

Their medicinal gum.

Shakespeare, Othello.

He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,

Which from remotest regions hither come.

Wallcr.

Her maiden train,

Who bore the vests that holy rights require,

Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire.

Dryden, Fab.

2. The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth. [Sax. zoma, palatum, gom-teo; Germ. gaum; Dutch, gom. They appear to be an abbreviation of the Gr. γομφίος, the cheektooth.]

The babe that milks me

I'd pluck my nipple from his boneless gums.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Sh' untwists a wire, and from her gums

A set of teeth completely comes.

Swift.

To GUM.† v. a. [from the noun. Fr. gommer.]

GUMMOUS. adj. [from gum.] Of the nature of gum.

Observations concerning English amber, and relations about the amber of Prussia, prove that amber is not a gummos or resinous substance drawn out of trees by the sun's heat, but a natural fossil. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

GUMMY. adj. [from gum.]

1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum.

From the utmost end of the head branches there is gummy juice, which hangeth downward like a cord. Ralegh.

Nor all the gummy stores Arabia yields.

Dryden, Virg.

How each arising alder now appears,

And o'er the Po distils her gummy tears.

Dryden, Silenus.

2. Productive of gum.

G U N

The clouds

Tine the slant lightning; whose thwart flame, driv'n down, Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton, P. L.

3. Overgrown with gum.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate. Dryden.

GU'MPTION.* n. s. [Sax. guman, to take care; Icel. gann; Su. Goth. gom, attention. See To GAVM. Hence gauntion, or gumption.] Understanding; skill. Grose confines this word to the northern dialect; Pegge, to that of Kent. It is common, in most counties, among the vulgar.

He has no gumption; i. e. he sets about the work awkwardly. Pegge.

GUN,† n. s. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Mr. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canna, gunne, gunne? Canna is the original of cannon. Dr. Johnson.—Gun, formerly written gon, is the past participle of the Sax. gymian, to gape. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 307.—Somner derives it from mangon, Fr. a warlike instrument, used before the invention of guns; an engine, out of which stones, iron, and arrows were violently darted; omitting the first syllable. But why not from gyn, an engine, which Robert of Gloucester uses. This indeed is the most probable etymon. "Sometimes," says Selden, "we put a new signification to an old word; as when we call a piece, a gun; [for] the word gun was in use in England for an engine to cast a thing from a man, long before there was any gunpowder found out." Table-Talk, Lang. § 4. Walsingham repeatedly uses gunna for canon. See also GUNSTONE.] The general name for fire-arms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

These dread curses, like the stun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn upon thyself. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun. Kneller, Hist.

The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil. Cleveland.

In vain the dart or glittering sword we shun,
Condemn'd to perish by the slaughter'g gun. Granville.

TO GUN.* v. n. [from the noun.] To perform the act of shooting with a gun.

There is less danger in't than gunning, Sanchio.
Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife, &c.

GU'NARCHY.* See GYNARCHY.

GU'NNEL.† n. s. [corrupted from gunwale.] See GUNWALE.

One would think that the ballast of the ship was shifted with us, and that our constitution had the gunnel under water.

Burke, Sp. on the Reform of Representation.

GU'NNER.† n. s. [from gun.]

1. Cannoneer; he whose employment is to manage the artillery in a ship.

The nimble gunner,
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,
And down goes all before him. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

They slew the principal gunners, and carried away their artillery. Hayward.

2. One who shoots; one who uses a gun to kill game.

G U R

GU'NSMITH. n. s. [gun and smith.] A man whose trade is to make guns.

It is of particular esteem with the gunsmiths for stocks.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

GU'NSTICK. n. s. [gun and stick.] The rammer; or stick with which the charge is driven into a gun.

Even a gunstick flying into fame. Steuart.

GU'NSTOCK. n. s. [gun and stock.] The wood to which the barrel of the gun is fixed.

The timber is used for bows, pulleys, screws, mills, and gunstocks. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GU'NSTONE.† n. s. [gun and stone.] The shot of cannon. They used formerly to shoot stones from artillery.

Tell the pleasant prince, this mock of his Hath turn'd his ball to gunstones; and his soul
Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

That I could shoot mine eyes at him, like gunstones!
B. Jonson, For.

GU'NWALE, or GU'NNELE of a Ship. n. s. That piece of timber which reaches on either side of the ship from the half-deck to the fore-castle, being the uppermost bend which finisheth the upper works of the hull in that part, and wherein they put the stanchions which support the waste-trees; and this is called the gunwale, whether there be guns in the ship or no; and the lower part of any port, where any ordnance arc, is also termed the gunwale. Harris.

GURGE. n. s. [gurses, Lat.] Whirlpool; gulf.

Marching from Eden he shall find

The plain, wherein a black bituminous gurge
Boils out from under ground. Milton, P. L.

TO GURGE.* v. a. [gurses, Lat.] To swallow up. Not in use.

In gurgling gulfs of these such surging seas.

Mir. for Mag. p. 227.

GU'RIGION.† n. s. The coarser part of the meal, sifted from the bran. Dr. Johnson must have intended grudgeon or grugeon. See GRUDGEONS.

TO GU'RGLE. v. n. [gorgogliare, Italian.] To fall or gush with noise, as water from a bottle.

Then when a fountain's gurgling waters play,
They rush to land, and end in feasts the day. Pope.

Pure gurgling rills the lonely desert trace,
And waste their musick on the savage race. Young.

G U S

GU'RKIN.* n. s. [This seems to be the right word; Lat. cucurbita; Dan. agurke. Dr. Johnson gives it gherkin.] A small cucumber for pickling. See GHERKIN.

GU'RNARD. } n. s. [gournauld, Fr.] A kind of sea-
GU'RNET. } fish.

I have misus'd the king's press damnably. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

To GUSH.† v. n. [German, giessen; Icel. geisa.]

1. To flow or rush out with violence; not to spring in a small stream, but in a large body.

A sea of blood gush'd from the gaping wound,
That her gay garments stain'd with filthy gore. Spenser, F. Q.

The covering of this abyss was broken asunder, and the water gush'd out that made the deluge. Burnet.

Incessant streams of thin magnetick rays
Gush from their fountains with impetuous force,
In either pole, then take an adverse course. Blackmore.

On either hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall. Thomson.

2. To emit in a copious effluxion.

The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood. Dryden.

Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow,
Led through a sad variety of woe. Pope.

GUSH. n. s. [from the verb.] An emission of liquor in a large quantity at once; the liquor so emitted.

If a lung-vein be bursted, generally at the first cough a great gush of blood is coughed up. Harvey.

GU'SSET.† n. s. [gousset, Fr.] Any piece sewed on cloth in order to strengthen it. Dr. Johnson. — Cotgrave, two centuries since, defined the word more nearly to its present meaning, "the piece of a shirt, whereby the armhole is covered." It is an angular piece of cloth sewn at the upper end of the sleeve of a shirt or shift.

GUST:† n. s. [goust, French; gustus, Latin.]

1. Sense of tasting.

Would he eat to satisfy and not to invite his hunger, and drink to refresh and not to force and oppress himself; his relish would be quick and vigorous, his gust sincere, and his digestion easy. Scott, Christian Life, iii. 3.

Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust. Pope.

2. Height of perception; height of sensual enjoyment.

They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton, P. L.

Where love is duty on the female side,
On theirs meer sensual gust, and sought with surly pride. Dryden, Fab.

My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd. Dryden, Fab.

*3. Love; liking.

Old age shall on the work of taking away both the gust and comfort of them. L'Estrange.

We have lost, in a great measure, the gust and relish of true happiness. Tillotson.

The purer the soil is, the purer will all its faculties and operations be, the less it will retain of corporeal gusts and relishes, the more recollected and undivided will be its powers. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 170.

4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients. Dryden.

5. [From gustr, Goth. and Icelandick.] A sudden violent blast of wind.

She led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosie to stem the waves. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

G U S

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.

Presently come forth swarms and volleys of libels, which are the gusts of liberty of speech restrained. Bacon, Hen. VII.

As when fierce northern blasts from th' Alps descend,
From his firm roots with struggling gusts to rend
An aged sturdy oak. Denham.

Part stay for passage, till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a shining sheet. Dryden.

Pardon a weak distemper'd soul, that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calms,
The sport of passions. Addison, Cato.

6. It is written in Spenser vitiously for justs, sports, Dr. Johnson says; which is an unjust accusation; for, in the passage which Dr. Johnson has cited, the reading is giusts. See JUST.

To GUST.* v. a. [Lat. gusto.] To taste; to have a relish of. Cockram.

'Tis far gone,
When I shall gust it last. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The palate of this age gusts nothing high.
L'Estrange on Beaumont and Fletcher's Plays.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shorts.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.
They are as a gusty wind and sail to a ship; if she steer right, they prosper and further her course; but if wrong, they serve only to strike her against the rocks with more speed and force. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 123.

It is still a gusty kind of weather; there is a kind of sickness in the air. Dryden, Ded. Hist. of the League.

Or whipt'd tempestuous by the gusty wind.

Thomson, Summer.

GUT.† n. s. [kuteln, German.]

1. The long pipe reaching with many convolutions from the stomach to the vent.

This lord wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

A viot should have a lay of wire-strings below, close to the belly, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge; that by this means the upper strings stricken should make the lower resound.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by any acrid or poisonous substance taken inwardly.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The stomach; the receptacle of food: proverbially.

And cram'n'd them till their guts did ache,

With scawdle, custurd, and plum-cake.

Hudibras.

With false weights their servants guts they cheat,

And pinch their own to cover the deceit.

Dryden, Jew.

3. Gluttony; love of gormandizing.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy guts bestow

Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,

Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,

Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,

In pot'on'd potion drank'st.

Hakewill on Providence.

4. A passage.

Here we entered into a narrow gut between two steep rocky mountains.

Maunderell, Trav. p. 134.

To GUT. v. a. [from the noun.]

The fishermen save the most part of their fish: some are gutted, splitt'd, powdered, and dried.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. To plunder of contents.

In Nero's arbitrary time,

When virtue was a guilt, and wealth a crime,

A troop of cut-throat guards were sent to seize

The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces.

Dryden.

Tom Brown of facetious memory, having gutted a proper name of its vowels, used it as freely as he pleased.

Addison.

GUTTA SERENA.* n. s. [Latin.] A disease of the eye. See DROP SERENE.

• He hath his eyes open, but sees no otherwise than if a gutta serena, or heated steel, had deprived the optick.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 337.

We know a total obstruction of the optick nerve, which is called gutta serena, makes as perfect a blindness, as an obstruction of the humour aqueus, which is called a cataract.

Smith on Old Age, p. 98.

GUTTATED. adj. [from gutta, Lat. a drop.] Besprinkled with drops; bedropped.

Dict.

GUTTER.† n. s. [from guttur, a throat, Latin.]

Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the French gouttiere; Norm. Fr. guter; but the word may be traced to the Su. Goth. giuta, to pour forth, to flow. Junius refers gutter to the Cimbr. gautin, a flow of water.]

1. A passage for water; a passage made by water.

These gutter tiles are in length ten inches and a half.

Moxon.

Rocks rise one above another, and have deep gutters worn in the sides of them by torrents of rain.

Addison on Italy.

2. A small longitudinal hollow.

To GUTTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut, in small hollows.

• Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,

The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,

Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel,

As having sense of beauty, do omit

Their mortal natures, letting safe go by

The divine Desdemona.

Shakespeare, Othello.

My cheeks are gutter'd with my fretting tears.

Shandys.

First in a place, by nature close, they build

A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd, and til'd.

Dryden.

VOL. II.

GYMNICK.* n. s. Athletick exercise.

Theatres and spacious fields allotted for all gymnicks, sports, and honest recreations. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

GYMNÔ'SOPHIST.* n. s. [Fr. gymnosophe; Lat. gymnosophistæ; Gr. γυμνοσοφισταί, from γυμνός, naked, and σοφός, wise; so called, because these philosophers went nearly naked.] One of a set of Indian philosophers; a name, said to be given by the Greeks to the bramins. But there were African as well as Asiatick gymnosophists. The word is also used for any philosopher.

How know you what may be shewed for the gymnosophistes' prayers in India? Beware of M. Jewel, (1566,) fol. 38. b.

Those seven wise men of Greece, those Britain druids, Indian brachmanni, Æthiopian gymnosophists, magi of the Persians. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

Thus have most civilities and sciences come, as some think, from the Indian gymnosophists, into Egypt; from thence into Greece; so into Italy; and then, over the Alps, into these faint north-west parts of the world.

Ribout, Voyage into the Levant, (1650,) p. 154.

Let us straight advance in quest

Of this profound gymnosophist. Hudibras, ii. iii.

GYMNOSP'RMIOUS. adj. [γυμνός and σπέρμα.] Having the seeds naked.

Ferrand, Love Melanch. (1640,) p. 331.

GYNÆOCRACY.* n. s. [old Fr. gynocratie; Gr. γυνή, a woman, and κράτος, power.] Government over which a woman may preside. Properly written by our old authors gynæocracy; less so by modern, gunocracy.

Becanus undertakes a conjecture of the first cause which excluded gynæocracy among them, [the French.]

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. 8. 18.

The French exclude gunocracy, or the government in chief by women. Biographiana, p. 76.

GYNECO'CRACY. n. s. [γυναικocratia; gynecocratic, French.] Petticoat government; female power.

GYPSE.* n. s. [Fr. gypse. See GYP SUM.] A kind of stone.

The soil of Cyprus is for the most part rocky: the are in it many entire hills of tale or gypse.

Porocke, Descript. of the East, ii. 229.

GY'PSEOUS.* adj. Relating to gypsum; belonging to lime or plaster. Gloss. Ang. 1707.

We meet with a rhomboidal gypseous stone, called also selemites. Chambers, in V. Gypsum.

Gypsum stone [is] a name given by some writers to the gypsum, or fossil substance, of which the powder, called plaster of Paris, is made by calcination. Chambers.

GYP SUM.* n. s. [Latin; Gr. γύψος, from γῆ, earth, and ψω, to concoct.] The name of a class of fossils; the plaster stone; white lime; a kind of plaster.

Gypsum is found in very large quantities in many parts of the globe, forming extensive chains of mountains and hills, as in the neighbourhood of Paris. Chambers.

Gypsum is a compound of calcareous earth and vitriolic acid: it forms a distinct species of the calcareous genus of fossils; of which species there are six families.

Kirwan on Manures, p. 16.

Gypsum — this manure was discovered by Mr. Mayer, a German clergyman of uncommon merit, in the year 1768: it has since been applied with signal success in Germany, Switzerland, France, and America. Ibid. p. 93.

GY'PSY.* See GIPSY.

GYRA'TION. n. s. [gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluvia attenuateth and impelleth the neighbour air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electrick. Brown.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place.

Newton.

GYRE. n. s. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing moving in an orbit.

Ne thenceforth his approved skill to ward, Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre, Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard, But rudely rag'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky, And to the South by thy direction fly?

Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace?

Sandys.

He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll

In restless gyres about the Artick pole.

Sandys.

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres,

Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires.

Dryden.

To GYRE.* v. a. [Lat. gyro.] To turn round.

With the spiteful Philistim, he [the devil] puts out both the eyes of our apprehension and judgement, that he may gyre us about in the mill of unprofitable wickedness.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 25.

GYV

GYRED.† adj. Falling in rings, Dr. Johnson says; citing a passage from Shakspeare's Hamlet, in which the word is gyved. See DOWNGYVED.

GYRFA'LCON.* See GERFALCON.

GYROMANCY.* n. s. [old Fr. gyromantie; from the Gr. γῦρος, a circle, and μαντεία, divination.] An ancient sort of divination, performed by walking in or round a circle.

GYVE.† n. s. [gebyn. Welsh. Dr. Johnson confines this word to the plural number; yet it certainly exists, in our language, in the singular.] A fetter; a chain for the legs. It is commonly used in the plural.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on.

And knowing this, should I yet stay,
Like such as blow away their lives,

Shakspeare.

GYV

And never will redeem a day,
Enamour'd of their golden gyves?
A golden gyve, a pleasing wrong.

B. Jonson.

Reaumur and Fl. Wife for a Month.

The poor prisoners, holdly starting up, break off their chains and gyves.
Knolles.

Dost thou already single me? I thought

Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee.

Milton, S. A.

But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet

A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;

So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,

His brother from the wooden gyves unbound.

Dryden.

To GYVE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

All in irons was my songe,

Even now I satte gyved in a payre of stockes.

Old Morality of Hycke Scorners.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship.

Shakspeare, Othello.

H

H A

H† Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, sounded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought. Dr. Johnson. — The strong emission of the breath, however, is usually withheld from heir, herb, hostler, honest, honour, humour; and perhaps from hospital and hour; and by some from humble.

HA. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:

What says the golden chest? ha! let me see. Shakespeare.

Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!

It is my Hastings! Rowe, Jane Shore.

2. An expression of laughter. Used with reduplication.

He saith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Job, xxxix. 25.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;

Our plots and delusions

Have wrought such confusions,

That the monarch's a slave to the crowd. Jhydén.

HA.* n. s. [from the interjection.] An expression of wonder, surprise, doubt, or hesitation. See the fourth sense of HUM.

Praise her but for this her without-door form,

(Which, on ey faith, deserves high speech,) and straight

The shrug, the hum, or ha; these petty brands,

That calumny doth use: — O, I am out,

That mercy does; for calumny will fear

Virtue itself: — these shrugs, these hums, and ha's,

When you have said she's goodly, come between,

Ere you can say she's honest. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

You may be any thing, and leave off to make

Long-winded exercises; or suck up

Your ha, and hum, in a tune. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

My solemn hums and ha's the servants quake at.

Beaum. and Fl. Lov. Progress.

To HA. v. n. To express surprise; to hesitate. See To HAW.

H A B

HAAK.† n. s. A fish. Another name for the hake. Written haak by Barret and others. See HAKE.

HABEAS CORPUS.† [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there. Cowel. There is no habeas corpus from death.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634,) p. 250.

The very intention of our habeas corpus act, namely, the preservation of the liberties of the subject, absolutely requires that act now to be suspended. Addison, Freehold. No. 16.

HABERDASHER.† n. s. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minsheu from habt ihr dass, German, have you this, the expression of a shop-keeper offering his wares to sale. Dr. Johnson. — Skinner, who is followed by Junius, offers the Dutch koopén, to buy, and daes, foolish, q. d. kooperdæser, a seller of trifles. Pegge suggests fevre d'acier, a needle-maker. But the word belongs to none of these. Berdash is said to have been a name formerly used in England for a certain kind of neck-dress; whence the maker or seller of such clothes was called a berdasher; and thence came haberdashers. See Chambers in V. BERDASH.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop. Bacon.

A haberdasher, who was the oracle of the coffee-house, declared his opinion. Addison.

HABERDASHERY.* n. s. [from haberdasher.] Articles made or sold by haberdashers.

You will hardly expect me to go through the tape and thread, and all the other small wares of haberdashery and millinery to be gleaned up among our imports.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

HABERDINE.† n. s. [French, habordean.] A dried salt cod. Ainsworth.

HABERGEON.† n. s. [Fr. haubergeon, from hauberg; low Lat. haubergettum, halbergium, halsberga. Du Cange and Skinner derive the word from the Teut. haltz, or hals, the neck, and bergen, to cover; others, from al, all, and bergen, to cover. Spelman considers it as the old Fr. hault, high, and berg, covering. Some French etymologists pretend that it comes from haut-ber, a high or distinguished person, one who serves his prince in complete armour. V. Roquefort in V. HAUBER. But it is, no doubt, from hals and bergen, as already stated. Goth. halsbirge, a steel collar; Iccl. halsbiorg, the same.] Armour to cover the neck and breast; breast-plate; neck-piece; gorget; originally, a coat of mail without sleeves.

H A B

It shall have a binding of woven work round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of an habergeon, that it be not rent. Exod. xxviii. 32.

And halbert some, and some a habergion;
So every one in arms was quickly dight. Fairfax.

The shot let fly, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing,
Lodg'd in Magnano's brass habergeon. Hudibras.

HABI'LIMENT. n. s. [habilement, French.] Dress; clothes; garment.

He the fairest Una found,
Strange lady, in so strange habilement,
Teaching the Satyrs. Spenser, F. Q.

My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfigure me,
You take the sum and substance that I have. Shakespeare.
The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habiliments of Irish drapery. Swift.

To HABI'LITATE. v. a. [habilitier, French.] To qualify; to entitle. Not in use.

HABI'LITATE.* adj. [habilitier, Fr.] Qualified; entitled.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attainted, and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament; being disabled in the highest degree. Bacon.

HABILITATION. n. s. [from habilitate.] Qualification. The things are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation without intention and act? Bacon, Ess. 29.

HABI'LITY.† n. s. [habilité, French.] Faculty; power; means: now ability.

Aladine, though meaner horn,
And of less livelihood and hability. Spenser, F. Q.
Of promptness, and of industry,
Hability, reality. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

HA'BIT.† n. s. [habit, old French; habitus, Latin.]

1. State of any thing: as, habit of body.

2. Dress; accoutrement; garment.

I shifted
Into a madman's rags, t' assume a semblance
The very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
Met I my father. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

If you have any justice, any pity;
If ye be any thing, but churchmen's habits. Shakespeare.

Both the poets being dressed in the same English habit, story compared with story, judgement may be made betwixt them.
Dryden.

The scenes are old, the habits are the same
We wore last year. Dryden.

Changes there are in veins of wit, like those of habits or other modes. Temple.

There are among the statues several of Venus, in different habits. Addison on Italy.

The clergy are the only set of men who wear a distinct habit from others. Swift.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequently doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine. Shakespeare.

4. Custom; inveterate use.

The last fatal step is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death;
death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infliction.
South.

No civil broils have since his death arose,
But faction now by habit does obey.

H A B

And wars have that respect for his repose,
As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea. Dryden.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits, as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

To HA'BIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair princess

Before Leontes:

She shall be habited as it becomes

The partner of your bed.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Charendon.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustick dances. Dryden.

To HA'BIT.* v. a. [habito, Latin.] To inhabit; to dwell in. Not now in use.

Nightingales —

That in their sweet song deliten,

In thilke places as they habiten.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 660.

HA'BITABLE. adj. [habitable, Fr. habitabilis, Lat.]
Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time;

This is her habitable tropique cline.

Donne.

The torrid zone is now found habitable.

Cowley.

Look round the habitable world, how few

Know their own good, or, knowing it, pursue.

Dryden.

HA'BITABLENESS. n. s. [from habitable.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the Equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the torrid zone. More.

Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

HA'BITACLE.* n. s. [old Fr. habitacle; Lat. habitaculum.] One of our oldest words, being used by Wicliffe and Chaucer; and repeatedly in our old lexicography. The Scotch also use habitable.] A dwelling.

He shall finally suppe with me and with him in the eternal habitacle of God. Bile on the Revel. (1550.) P. I.

HA'BITANCE. n. s. [habitatio, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,

That here in desert hast thine *habitan*ce?

And these rich heaps of wealth do'st hide apart

From the world's eye, and from her right usance.

Spenser, F. Q.

HA'BITANT. n. s. [habitant, Fr. habitans, Latin.]

Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are those bright luminaries

Officious; but to thee, earth's habitant.

Milton, P. L.

Powers celestial to each other's view

Stand still contest, though distant far they lie,

Or habitants of earth, or sea, or sky.

Pope.

HABITATION. n. s. [habitation, French; habitation, Latin.]

1. The state of a place receiving dwellers.

Amplitude almost immense, with stars

Numerous, and ev'ry star perhaps a world

Of destin'd habitation.

Milton, P. L.

2. Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling.

Palaces,

For want of habitation and repair,

Dissolve to heaps of ruins.

Deuham.

Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continual deterration brought to a lower pitch.

Woodward.

H A B

3. Place of abode; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hooker.

God oft descends to visit men
Unseen, and through their habitations walks
To mark their doings.

Milton, P. L.

HABITATOR. n. s. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.

The sun's presence is more continued unto the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Cancer, is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitators. Brown.

HA'BITED.* adj. [from habit.] Accustomed; usual.

This ancient and habited vice is amongst the Dutch, of late years, much decreased. Fuller, Holy State, p. 437.

HABITUAL. adj. [habituél, from habit, Fr.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition. It is used for both good and ill.

Sin, there in power before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant.

Milton, P. L.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims.

South.

By length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains.
'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you.

Dryden.

Dryden.

HABITUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy. Atterbury.

To HABITUATE. v. a. [habituér, Fr.] To accustom: to use one's self by frequent repetition; with to.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituate themselves to their vicious practices.

Tillotson.

Such as live in a rarer air are habituated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Arbuthnot.

HABITUATE.* adj. [from the 'verb.] Inveterate; obstinate.

All earthly vanities, which any habituate sinner deifies.

Hammond, Works, iv. 679.

HA'BITUDE. n. s. [habitud, Lat. habitude, Fr.]

1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun. Brown.

The will of God is like a straight unalterable rule; but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasions several habitudes of this rule unto it. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another.

South, Serm.

As by the abstractive part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred; so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object. Norris.

In all the habitudes of life

The friend, the mistress, and the wife;
Variety we still pursue.

Swift.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,
Was such dead authors could not give;
But habitudes with those who live.

Dryden.

To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use. This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude. Dryden.

H A C

Thy ear, insur'd to charitable sounds,
And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
Of jest obscene, and vulgar ribaldry,
The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,
Brought by long habitude from bad to worse:
Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitude, without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryden.

HA'BLE.* adj. [hable, old Fr. habil, bas Bret. as our own word was formerly written; habilis, Lat.] Fit; proper. See ABLE.

As hagar'd hauke, presuming to contend
With hardy fowle above his hable might.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 19.

HA'BNAB.† adv. [hap ne hap, or nap; as would would, or ne would; will will, or ne will, that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

Philautus determin'd, habnab, to send his letters.

Lilly, Ruphues, &c. p. 109.

As they came in by habnab, so will I bring them in a reckoning at six and at sevens.

Heywood, Fair Maid of the West, (1631.)

He circles draws and squares,
With cyphers, astral characters;
Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,
Although set down habnab at random.

Hudibras.

To HACK. v. a. [haccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; hacher, Fr. from acaye, an axe, Saxon.]

1. To cut into small pieces; to chop; to cut slightly with frequent blows; to mangle with unskilful blows. It bears commonly some notion of contempt or malignity.

He put on that armour, whereof there was no one piece wanting, though hacked in some places, bewraying some fight not long since passed. Sidney.

What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and say it was in fight. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Richard the second here was hack'd to death. Shakspeare.
I'll fight till from my bones my flesh be hack'd. Shakspeare.

One flourishing branch of his most royal root
Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe.

Shakspeare.

Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces.

Dryden.

Not the hack'd helmet, nor the dusty field,

But purple vests and flow'ry garlands please.

Addison.

But fate with butchers plac'd their priestly stall,

Meek modern faith to murder, hack, and mawl.

Pope.

2. To speak unreadily, or with hesitation.

Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English. Shakspeare.

HACK.* n. s. [from the verb.] A notch; a hollow cut.

Look you, what hacks are on his helmet.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

HACK.* n. s. [old French, haque, a gelding; haquet, a little horse; perhaps from the Lat. equus.] A horse let out for hire. The usage of the present word is apparently modern in our language.

I am almost suffocated with dust every summer, occasioned by those crowds of prentice-boys, who are whipping their hired hacks to death.

Moore.

HACK.* adj. Hired. A low expression.

Hack preachers employed in the service of defaulters and absenteers. Wakefield, Mem.

To HACK.† v. n. [from the noun.] To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute. Hanmer.

H A C

70 HA'CKLE.† v. a. [Teut. hekelen, from haeck, a hook; hake, Su. Goth. the same.]

1. To dress flax.

2. To separate; to tear asunder.

Other divisions of the kingdom being hackled and torn to pieces, and separated from all their habitual means.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

HA'CKLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A comb for dressing flax.

Some layd to pledge

Theyr hatchet and their wedge,

Their hackell, and their rele,

Their rock, their spinning whele. Skelton, Poems, p. 132.

HA'CKLE.† n. s. Raw silk; any filmy substance unspun, Dr. Johnson says. It is, in fact, merely a fly for angling, dressed sometimes with the feathers of a cock, and sometimes with silk. So called, Dr. Jamieson, thinks, from its resemblance to a comb for dressing flax.

Hackles are a very important article in fly-making; they are the long slender feathers that hang from the head of a cock down his neck. Walton, Angler, ch. 1.

We have also a hackle with a purple body, whipt about with a red capon's feather; as also a gold-twist hackle.

Cotton, Angler, ch. 8.

HA'CKNEY.† n. s. [hacnai, Welsh; hackeneye, Teuton. haquenee, French; perhaps from haque, old Fr. a gelding; Lat. equus. See HACK. Serenius, however, notices the Cim. hacknay, equus rotularius. In several instances Dr. Johnson has given examples of this word, where it is not a substantive but an adjective; though, as an adjective, he has not noticed it.]

1. A pacing horse; a pad; a nag.

His hackney — was al pomelee gris.

Chaucer, Chan. Ycom. Prol.

He asked, whither with that hoise I wolde gon;

And then I told hym, it was myncown;

He sayd, I had stolen hym; and I sayd, naye:

This is, sayd he, my brother's hacknaye.

Old Morality of Hycke Scornor.

The fatness of the earth doth put in good liking the serviceable steede and the miller's hackney.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580,) fol. 12.

Image now to yourself this illustrious cavalier mounted on his hackney.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 47.

2. A hired horse; hired horses being usually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.

Light and lewd persons were as easily suborned to make an affidavit for money, as post-horses and hackneys are taken to hire. Bacon.

Who, mounted on a broom, the nag

And hackney of a Lapland hag,

In quest of you came hither post.

Hudibras.

3. A hireling; a prostitute.

I labour,

I moil and toil for ye; I am your hackney.

Beaum. and Fl. Wom. Pleased.

She was so notoriously lewd, that she was called an hackney.

Burnet, Hist. Ref. vol. i. Append.

Shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,

Or each new pension'd sycophant, pretend

To break my windows?

Pope.

4. Any thing let out for hire. See the third sense of the adjective.

HA'CKNEY.* adj.

1. Worn out, like a hired horse.

Law, like a horse-courser;

Her rules and precepts hung with gawds and ribbands,

And pamper'd up to cozen him that bought her,

When she herself was hackney, lame, and founder'd.

Beaum. and Fl. Wom. Pleased.

H A C

2. Prostitute; vicious for hire.

Three kingdoms rung

With his accumulative and hackney tongue. Roscommon.

That is no more than every lover

Does from his hackney lady suffer. Hudibras.

3. Much used; common; let out for hire.

The sweat of learned Jonson's bruin,

Or gentle Shakspeare's easier strain,

A hackney coach conveys you to,

In spite of all that ruin can do;

And for your eighteen pence you sit

The lord and judge of all fresh wit. Sir J. Suckling.

Slightly trained up in a kind of hypocritical and hackney course of literature. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

These notions young students in physick derive from their hackney authors. Harvey.

A Wit can study in the streets —

Not quite so well, however, as one ought;

A hackney coach may chance to spoil a thought,

Pope, Imit. of Hor.

HA'CKNEY-COACHMAN.* n. s. The driver of a hired or hackney coach.

The hackney-coachmen, chairmen, and porters, are the lovers of the hawker women, fruitresses, and milkmaids.

Guardian, No. 87.

HA'CKNEY-MAN.* n. s. One who lets horses to hire. Barret, and Sherwood.

By this reckoning, a hackney-man

Should have ten shillings for horsing a gentlewoman,

Where he hath but ten pence of a beggar.

Trag. of Solomon and Perseda, (1599.)

70 HA'CKNEY.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To practise in one thing; to accustom, as to the road.

He is long hackney'd in the ways of men. Shakspeare.

2. To carry in a hackney coach.

To her, who, frugal only that her thrift

May feel excesses she can ill afford,

Is hackney'd home unlacquey'd. Cowper, Task, B. 2.

HA'QUETON.† n. s. [haquet, old French, a little horse. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson is mistaken both in his etymology, and in his definition, of this word; which he calls "some piece of armour." It has nothing to do with the horse, and it is not a piece of armour. It is the French haqueton, or hoqueton; Germ. hacke; from the Teut. huyk, a kind of cloak.] A stuffed jacket, formerly worn under armour; sometimes made of leather. The Black Prince's haqueton, composed of quilted cotton, is suspended over his tomb in Canterbury cathedral.

You may see the very fashion of the Irish horseman in his long hose, riding shoes of costly cordwain, his haqueton, and his habergeon. Spenser, on Ireland.

But th' other did upon his trunchcon smyte;

Which hewing quite asunder, further way

It made, and on his haqueton did lyte,

The which dividing with importune sway

It seiz'd in his right side, and there the dint did stay.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 38.

HA'CKSTER.* n. s. [from hack.] A bully; a ruffian; an assassin.

If some such desperate hackster shall devise

To rouse thine hare's heart from her cowardice.

Ep. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

Ælfrith, second wife to king Edgar, having contrived the death of Edward her son-in-law, murdered him by a company of hacksters and villains, at her appointment at Corfe Castle.

Fuller, Ch. Hist. p. 265.

Happy times, when braves and hacksters, the only contented members of his government, were thought the fittest and the faithfullest to defend his person! Milton, Eiconocl. iii.

H A G

HAD. The preterite and part. pass. of have. I had better, you had better, &c. means the same as, it would be better for me or you; or, it would be more eligible: it is always used potentially, not indicatively; nor is have ever used to that import. We say likewise, it had been better or worse.

I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition. Shakespeare.

Had we not better leave this Utica,
To arm Numidia in our cause? Addison, Cato.

HAD-I-WIST.* A proverbial expression, implying vain afterthoughts: Oh! that I had known.

And is aware of had I wist. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

This blindness is not of the eyes alone,
But of the mind a dimness and a mist:
For when they shift to sit in haughty throne
With hope to rule the scepter as they list,
There's no regard nor fear of had-I-wist. Mir. for Mag. p. 160.

Beware of had I wist. Camden, Rem.

HÄDDER.* n. s. [German, "heide." See HEATH.] Heath; ling.

They lay upon the ground covered with skins, as the red-shanks do on hadder. Burton, Anal. of Mel. p. 550.

HÄDDOK.* n. s. [hadot, Fr.] A sea-fish of the cod kind, but small.

The coast is plentifully stored with pilchards, herrings, and haddocks. Carew.

HÄDE.* n. s. Among miners, the steep descent of a shaft. In our old language, the descent of a hill.

On the lower leas, as on the higher hades,
The daintie clover grows. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

HÄFT.* n. s. [hæft, Saxon; heft, Dutch; haft, Gothick; from To have or hold.] A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.

But yet no food I nought the haft,
Which might unto the blade accorde. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

This brandish'd dagger
I'll bury to the haft in her fair breast.

Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

These extremities of the joints are the hafts and handles of the members. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its haft or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Watts, Logic.

To HÄFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a haft.

Ainsworth.

HÄFTER.* n. s. A wrangler; a caviller. Barret's Alv. 1580. Serenius renders this old word. in his Swedish dictionary; a crafty or cunning fellow, 1757. It is not now in use.

HÄG.* n. s. [hæge], Sax. a goblin; heckle, Dutch, a witch; hæ, German; formerly hægse, meaning a wise woman, from the Runic hægja, wisdom, knowledge. V. Keysler, Antiq. Sept. p. 149. Our word at first was hæg. V. Huloet and Barret.]

1. A witch; an enchantress.

The very dregs of miracles, in milkpans and greasy dishes, by Robingoodfellow, and hags, and fayries, all wrought somewhat for their idle superstitions.

Dering on the Ep. to the Hebrews, (1576) ch. 2.

Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you baggage, you polecat, you rannion. Shakespeare.

2. A fury; a she monster.

Thus spoke th' impotent prince, and made a pause;
His foul hags rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;
And all the powers of hell, in full applause,
Flourish'd their snakes, and tost their flaming brands. Crashaw.

3. An old ugly woman.

H A G

There follow'd fast at hand two wicked hags,
With hoary locks all loose, and visage grim. Spenser, F. Q.

Such affectations may become the young;
But thou, old hag, of threescore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee! Dryden.

4. Appearances of light and fire upon the manes of horses, or men's hair, were formerly called hags.

They are now known to be electrical phenomena.

Hags are said to be made of sweat or some other vapour issuing out of the head; a not unusual sight among us when we ride by night in summer time. Blount, Glossog.

HAG-BORN.* adj. [hag and born.] Born of a witch or hag.

The son which she did litter here,

A freckled whelp, hag-born. Shakespeare, Tempest.

To HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.

That makes them in the dark see visions,

And hag themselves with apparitions. Hydibras.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions! L'Estrange.

HÄGABAG.* See HUCKABACK.

HÄGGARD.* adj. [hagard, Fr. wild; and accordingly some derive it from the Lat. agrestis: others, from the Germ. hag, an inclosure, a fortified place; whence, according to M. Huet, a hag-gard was applied to a person proud and confident, on account of the strength of the place in which he was.]

1. Wild; untamed; difficult to be reclaimed.

As hagard hawk, presuming to contend

With hardy fowl above his hable might,

His weary pounces all in vain doth spend,

To truss the prey too heavy for his flight. Spenser, F. Q.

She's too disdainful;

I know her spirits are as coy and wild,

As haggard as the rock. Shakespeare.

Virtue sitteth over the names of her servants, hovereth over them with her wings, and guards them from the kites and buzzards of this haggard age. Stafford's Niobe, P. ii. p. 78.

In time, all haggard hawks will stop to lure. Kyd, Span. Tragedy.

2. [hager, Germ.] Lean; rugged; perhaps, ugly.

To this sense I have put the following passage; for the author ought to have written haggard.

A hagg'd carion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog, with good flesh upon's back, fell into company together. L'Estrange.

3. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.

Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,

His hands and haggard eyes to heav'n he cast. Dryden.

Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,

Now flushing red, the down-cast haggard eyes,

Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd! Smith.

HÄGGARD. n. s.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.

I will be married to a wealthy widow,

Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me

As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard. Shakespeare.

2. A species of hawk.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,

And to the South by thy direction fly? Sondys.

I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the series, the brancher, the ramish hawk, and the haggard. Walton.

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew,

In a dark grot, the baleful haggard lay,

Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth.

HÄGGARD.* n. s. [Sax. haga and geap; Su. Goth. hage, a small piece of ground adjoining to a house. See the third sense of HAW. Dr. Jamieson notices haggard, which he understood to be used in some parts of Scotland, but of which he gives no example; and he considers it as imported from Ireland, where it is in common use. It was in the English language, I may add, nearly two centuries since.] A stack-yard.

When the barn was full, any one might thrash in the haggard.
Howell, Lett. ii. 24. (dat. 1632.)

The remainder of the powder was committed to a vault in the haggard under the corn-stand.

Bp. of Killala's Narrative, p. 49.

HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] Deformedly; uglily.

For him the rich Arabia sweats her gum;
And precious oils from distant Indies come;
How haggardly soe'er she looks at home. } Dryden, Juv.

HA'GGESE. † n. s. [from hog or hack. Dr. Johnson.] — No doubt from hack, that is, to chop; which in Scotland is hag; Su. Goth. hugga.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and enclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.

HA'GGISH. adj. [from hag.] Of the nature of a hag; deformed; horrid.

But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act. } Shakespeare.

To HA'GGLE. v. a. [corrupted from hackle or hack.] To cut; to chop; to mangle: always in a bad sense.

Suffolk first died, and York all haggled o'er Comes to him where in gore he lay insteep'd. } Shakespeare.

To HA'GGLE. † v. n. [harceler, Fr. barguigner. Cotgrave.] "To haggle, hucke, dodge, or palter long in the buying of a commodity." To be tedious in a bargain; to be long in coming to the price.

Phoo! how she stands, biting her nails,
As if she play'd for half her vails;
Sorting her cards, haggling, and picking! } Shenstone.
I never could drive a hard bargain in my life, concerning any manner whatever; and least of all do I know how to haggle and huckster with merit. } Burke.

HA'GGLER. † n. s. [from haggle.]

1. One that cuts.
2. One that is tardy in bargaining; "a paltering haggler." [gagueralle.] } Colgrace.

HAGIO'GRAPHIA. * n. s. pl. [Latin; from ἅγιος, holy, and γράφω, to write, Gr.] Holy writings; a name given to part of the books of Scripture. See HAGIOGRAPHICAL.

Eight, [of the translators of the Bible,] assembled at Cambridge, were to finish the rest of the historical books, and the hagiographa. Abp. Newcome, On the Transl. of the Bib. p. 94.

HAGIO'GRAPHICAL. * adj. [from hagiographa.] Denoting the writings called hagiographa.

Strabus—writing upon St. Jerome's prologues, there placed before the Old Testament, wherein, according to the copies then in use, the book of Tobit is said to be separated from the Divine Scriptures and numbered among the hagiographa; he findeth fault with the transcribers, and saith, that Tobit is to be set among the apocryphal books, and not among the hagiographa, properly so called; whereof there be but nine, the whole number of the canonical books being no more than XXII in all. } Bp. Cosin, Canon of Scripture, p. 152.

HAGIO'GRAPHER. † n. s. [ἅγιος and γράφω.] A holy writer. The Jews divide the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament into the law, the prophets, and the hagiographers.

They were hagiographers, who are supposed to be left to the use of their own words. } Whitby, Gen. Pref. N. Test.

HA'GSHIP. * n. s. [from hag.] The title of a witch or hag; the state of a hag.

What's this? oh, 'tis the charm her hagship gave me. } Middleton's Witch.

HAGE, or HA'GUERUT. * n. s. [old Fr. hacquinete.] A kind of fire-arms formerly used; a hand-gun of about three quarters of a yard in length, according to Bullokar; a culverin, or hand-canon, fixed on a little carriage, since called the arquebase with a hook, according to Grose.

Her coats tuck'd up, and all her motions just,
She stamps, and then cries—hah! at ev'ry thrust. } Dryden.

HAIL. † n. s. [Sax. hægl, hazol.] This word is rarely found in the plural.] Drops of rain frozen in their falling. } Locke.

With strange rains, hails, and showers, were they persecuted. } Wisd. xvi. 16.

Thunder mix'd with hail,

Hail mix'd with fire, must rend the Epyptian sky. } Milton, P. L.

To HAIL. † v. n. [hæzelan, Sax.] To pour down hail. My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation when it shall hail, coming down on the forest. } Is. xxxii. 19.

To HAIL. * v. a. [Su. Goth. haella; Iceland. hellr.] To pour.

For, ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eye,
He hail'd down oaths, that he was only mine. } Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

HAIL. interj. [hæl, health, Saxon: hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or ὕγιασις of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.

Hail, hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil. } Shakespeare.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds:
It does not look as it would have a hail
Or health wish'd in it, as on other morns. } B. Jonson.

The angel hail
Bestow'd, the holy salutation us'd
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve. } Milton, P. L.

Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! hail, howovers! hail,
Infernal world! and thou, profoundest hell,
Receive thy new possessor! } Milton, P. L.

All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love,
Once first of men below, now first of birds above. } Dryden.

Hail to the sun! from whose returning light
The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take. } Rome.

HAIL. * adj. Healthy; sound. See HALE.

HAIL-FELLOW. * n. s. [hail and fellow.] A companion.

No man, that erst hail-fellow was with beast,
Wore on to weene himselfe a god at least. } Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 1.

All these agree with him in blindness and darkness; yea, they are all hail-fellow-well met! } Junius, Sin Stigmat. p. 411.
I thought all people here had been hail-fellow-well met.

J. Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo, p. 46.
The master and servant are at hail-fellow, the gentleman and the clown are upon the square with one another.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

To HAIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.

A galley drawing near unto the shore, was hailed by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen. } Knolles.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. } Dryden.

HA'ILSHOT. n. s. [hail and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail.

The master of the artillery did visit them sharply with murdering hailshot, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the hill. } Hayward.

H A I

HA'ILSTONE.† n. s. [hail and stone; hazol-stan, Sax.]

A particle or single ball of hail.

They were more which died with hailstones, than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword. Joshua, x. 11.

You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun.

Shakspeare.

Hard hailstones lye not thicker on the plain,
Nor shaken oaks such show'rs of acorns rain.

Dryden.

HA'ILY.† adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail; full of hail.

Sherwood.

From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold North congeals to hail showers.

Pope.

HA'INOUS.* See HEINOUS.

HAIR. n. s. [hæp, Sax.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow.

Quincy.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls.

Shakspeare.

Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a dril?

Locke.

2. A single hair.

Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Much is breeding;
Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Any thing proverbially small.

If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what's not to be written.

Dryden.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

HA'IRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written harcbrained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a hare.]

Wild; irregular; unsteady.

Let's leave this down; for they are hairbrain'd slaves,
And hunger will enforce them be more eager.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

HA'IRBREADTH. n. s. [hair and breadth.] A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.

Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss.

Judg. xx. 16.

I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field;

Of hairbreadth 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach.

Shakspeare.

HA'IRBEL. n. s. The name of a flower; the hyacinth. See HAREBELL.

HA'IRCLOTH. n. s. [hair and cloth.] Stuff made of hair, very rough and prickly, worn sometimes in mortification.

It is composed of reeds and parts of plants woven together, like a piece of haircloth.

Grew, Museum.

H A L

HAIRHUNG.* adj. [hair and hung.] Hanging by a hair.

Man, whose fate,
Fate irreversible, entire, extreme,
Endless, hair-hung, breeze-shaken, o'er the gulf
A moment frombles.

Young, Night Th. 2.

HA'IRINESS.† n. s. [from hairy.] The state of being covered with hair, or abounding with hair.

Sherwood.

To discover the inequalities, rubs, and hairiness of the skin.

Brown, Chrs. Mor. ii. 9.

HA'IRLACE. n. s. [hair and lace.] The fillet with which women tie up their hair.

Some women are commonly resembled to a woman's hair-lace or fillet, thence called tenia.

Harvey.

If Molly happens to be careless,
And but neglects to warm her hairlace,
She gets a cold as sure as death.

Swift.

HA'IRLESS.† adj. [from hair.] Wanting hair.

White beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps

Against thy majesty.

Shakspeare.

To see an old shorne lozel perched high,

Crossing beneath a golden canopy;

The whiles a thousand hairless crowns crouch low

To kiss the precious case of his proud toe. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 7.

HA'IRNEEDLE, or HA'IRPIN.* n. s. Formerly an instrument for torturing the hair; the latter, within our own memory; the former, very ancient. Sax. harp-nædle, calamistrum, i. e. an iron to curl the hair. See TO CALAMISTRATE. The modern hairpin kept the hair in certain fanciful shapes, by being stuck through the plaster of powder and pomatum most plentifully bestowed upon it.

HA'IRY. adj. [from hair.]

1. Overgrown with hair; covered with hair.

She his hairy temples then had rounded

With coronet of flowers.

Shakspeare.

Gibson's Camden.

HA'LBARD. n. s. [halebarde, French; hallebarde, Dutch, from barde, an axe, and halle, a court, halberds being the common weapons of guards.]

A battle-axe fixed to a long pole.

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast.

Shakspeare.

Our halberds did shut up his passage.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Four knives in garbs succinct, a trusty band,

Caps on their heads, and halberds in their hand,

Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain.

Pope.

HALBERDIER.† n. s. [halebardier, Fr. from halberd.]

One who is armed with a halberd.

The duchess appointed him a guard of thirty halberdeers, in a livery of murrey and blue, to attend his person.

Bacon.

Captain, for so I gless thee by thy arms

And the loose flanks of halberdiers about thee.

Beaum. and Fl. Nob. Gentleman.

The king had only his halberdeers, and fewer of them than used to go with him.

Clarendon.

HA'ECYON.† n. s. [halcyo, Lat. from the Gr. άλκυών, from άλς, the sea, and κύω, to bring forth.]

A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.

Such smiling rogues, as these — sooth ev'ry passion; —
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters.

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be, Shakespeare, K. Lear.

As halcyons brooding on a winter sea. Dryden.

HALCYON. adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still; peaceful.

When great Augustus made war's tempests cease,
His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace. Denham.

No man can expect eternal serenity and halcyon days from so incompetent and partial a cause, as the constant course of the sun in the equinoctial circle. Bentley.

HALCYONIAN.  adj.* [from halcyon. Fr. alcyonien.] Peaceful; quiet; still.

These our halcyonian times of peace and prosperity.

Sheldon, Mirac. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 179.

Those peaceful and halcyonian days, which the Church enjoyed for many years. Mede on Churches, p. 52.

Day of clouds and thick darkness, very distant from those white, halcyonian, serene, and peaceable days.

Worthington on the Millennium, p. 57.

HALE.  n. s.* [Sax. hæl, healh, safety.] Welfare.

Chaucer writes it hæle.

Eksoones, all heedless of his dearest hale,
Full greedily into the herd he thrust. Spenser, Astrophel.

HALE. † adj. [This should rather be written hail, from hæl, health. Dr. Johnson. — Hammond wrote it hail or haile, in the sense of whole, which Dr. Johnson has overpassed. The Gothick adjective for sound, is hails; Sax. hæl.]

1. Healthy; sound; hearty; well complexioned.

My seely sheep like well below,
They need not melampode,
For they been hale enough I trow,
And liken their abode.

Spenser.

Some of these wise partizans concluded the government had hired two or three hundred hale men, to be pinioned, if not executed, as the pretended captives. Addison.

His stomach too begins to fail;
Last year we thought him strong and hale,
But now he's quite another thing?
I wish he may hold out till spring.

Swift.

2. Whole; uninjured. [Dutch, heel; Su. Goth. hel;
Sax. hæl.]

When, on the other side, sin, after the combat of God's rod, comes off unwounded and haile, &c.

Hammond, Works, iv. 536.

TO-HALE. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.]

To drag by force; to pull violently and rudely.

Fly to your house;

The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And hale him up and down. Shakespeare, Coriol.

My third comfort,

Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast
Hail'd out to murder. Shakespeare.

Give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he hale thee to the judge. Luke.

He by the neck hath hal'd, in pieces cut,
And set me as a mark on every butt. Sandys.

Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought. Milton.

This sinistrous gravity is drawn that way by the great artery, which then subsideth, and haleth the heart unto it. Brown.

Who would not be disgusted with any recreation, in itself indifferent, if he should with blows be haled to it when he had no mind? Locke.

In all the tumults at Rome, though the people proceeded sometimes to pull and hale one another about, yet no blood was drawn 'till the time of the Gracchi. Swift.

HA'LER. n. s. [from hale.] He who pulls and hales.

H A L

HALF. † n. s. plural halves. [healf, half, Sax. and all the Teutonick dialects; from hal. The l is often not sounded.]

1. A moiety; one part of two; an equal part.

An half acre of land.

1 Sam. xiv. 14.

Many might go to heaven with half the labour they go to hell, if they would venture their industry the right way.

B. Jonson.

Well chosen friendship, the most noble

Of virtues, all our joys makes double,

And into halves divides our trouble.

Denham.

Or what but riches is there known

Which man can solely call his own;

In which no creature goes his half,

Unless it be to squint and laugh?

Hudibras.

No mortal tongue can half the beauty tell;

For none but hands divine could work so well.

Dryden.

Of our manufacture foreign markets took off one half, and the other half were consumed amongst ourselves.

Locke.

The council is made up half out of the noble families, and half out of the plebeian. Addison on Italy.

Half the misery of life might be extinguished, would men alleviate the general curse by mutual compassion. Addison.

Her beauty, in thy softer half

Bury'd and lost, she ought to grieve.

Prior.

Natural was it for a prince, who had proposed to himself the empire of the world, not to neglect the sea, the half of his dominions. Arbuthnot.

2. It sometimes has a plural signification when a number is divided.

Had the land selected of the best,

Half had come hence, and let the world provide the rest. Dryden.

3. In the plural, a popular exclamation, a kind of interjection, on seeing another pick up any thing which he has found, and which entitles the person who makes it to half of the value of it. See HALVES.

Brand.

And he, who sees you stoop to th' ground,

Cries, halves! to every thing you've found.

Dr. Savage, Horace to Scæva, (1730), p. 32.

HALF. † adv.

1. In part; equally.

I go with love and fortune, two blind guides,

To lead my way; half loth, and half consenting. Dryden.

2. It is much used in composition to signify a thing imperfect, as most of the following examples will show; and sometimes, nearly; within a little.

HALF-BLOOD. n. s. One not born of the same father and mother.

Which shall be heir of the two male twins, who, by the dissection of the mother, were laid open to the world?

Whether a sister by the half-blood shall inherit before a brother's daughter by the whole-blood? Locke.

HALF-BLOODED. adj. [half and blood.] Mean; degenerate.

The let alone lies not in your good will

— Nor in thine, lord.

— Half-blooded fellow, yes. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HALF-CAP. n. s. Cap imperfectly put off, or faintly moved.

With certain half-caps and cold moving nods,

They froze me into silence. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.

HALF-DEAD.  adj.* [Sax. healf-dead.] Almost dead.

To live a life half-dead; a living death. Milton, S. A.

HALF-FACED. adj. [half and faced.] Showing only part of the face; small faced: in contempt.

Proud inroaching tyranny

Burns with revenging fire, whose hopeful colours

Advance, a half-fac'd sun striving to shine. Shakespeare.

This same half-fac'd fellow, Shadow; give me this man:
he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. Shakespeare.

HALF-HATCHED. adj. [half and hatch.] Imperfectly hatched.

HAL

Here, thick as hailstones pour,
Turnips, and half-hatch'd eggs, a mingled show'r,
Among the rabble rain.

Gay.

HALF-HEARD. adj. Imperfectly heard; not heard to an end.

Not added years on years my task could close;
Back to thy native islands might'st thou sail,
And leave half-heard the melancholy tale.

Pope.

HALF-LEARNED.* adj. [half and learned.] Imperfectly learned.

To remove the difficulties that discourage the honest endeavours of the unlearned, and provoke the malicious cavils of the half-learned.

Laureth, Visit. Sermon, 1758.

HALF-LOST.* adj. [half and lost.] Nearly lost.

Alone, and without guide, half-lost, I seek
What readiest path leads where your gloomy bounds
Confine with heaven.

Milton, P. L.

HALF-MOON. n. s.

1. The moon in its appearance when at half increase or decrease.

2. Any thing in the figure of a half moon.

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half-moons and wings.

Milton, P. R.

HALF-PART.* n. s. [half and part.] Equal share; an old exclamation, similar to that of halves. See HALF, n. s.

2. Pirate. A prize! a prize!

3. Pirate. Half-part, mates, half-part! Shakspeare, Pericles.

HALF-PENNY.* n. s. plural half-pence. [half and penny.] Sax. halpenige. Our word is usually written halfpenny, though Dr. Johnson here writes it peny; yet, at the word penny, the present spelling. Our vulgar pronunciation resembles the Saxon word, viz. halpeny or hapeny.]

1. A copper coin, of which two make a penny.

Burdolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-pence.

Shakspeare.

I thank you; and sure, dear friend, my thanks are too dear of a half-penny.

Shakspeare.

He cheats for half-pence, and he doffs his coat

To save a farthing in a ferryboat.

Dryden.

Never admit this pernicious coin, no not so much as one single half-penny.

Swift.

You will wonder how Wood could get his majesty's broad sent for so great a sum of bad money, and that the nobility here could not obtain the same favour, and make our own half-pence as we used to do.

Swift.

2. It has the force of an adjective conjoined with any thing of which it denotes the price.

There shall be in England seven half-penny loaves sold for a penny.

Shakspeare.

HALF-PENNYWORTH.* n. s. [from half-penny.] The worth of a half-penny.

O monstrous! but one half-pennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of work!

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

HALF-PIKE. n. s. [half and pike.] The small pike carried by officers.

The various ways of paying the salute with the half-pike.

Tatler.

HALF-PINT. n. s. [half and pint.] The fourth part of a quart.

One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine;

And is at once their vinegar and wine.

Pope.

HALF-READ.* adj. [half and read.] Superficially skilled by reading.

The clown unread, and half-read gentleman,

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

HALF-SCHOLAR. n. s. One imperfectly learned.

We have many half-scholars now-a-days, and there is much confusion and inconsistency in the notions and opinions of some persons.

Watts.

HAL

HALF-SEAS over. A proverbial expression for any one far advanced. It is commonly used of one half drunk.

I am half-seas o'er to death;

And since I must die once, I would be loth

To make a double work of what's half-finish'd.

Dryden.

HALF-SIGHTED. adj. [half and sight.] Seeing imperfectly; having weak discernment.

The officers of the king's household had need be provident, both for his honour and thrift: they must look both ways, else they are but half-sighted.

Bacon.

HALF-SPHERE. n. s. [half and sphere.] Hemisphere.

Let night grow blacker with thy plots; and day,

At shewing but thy head forth, start away

From this half-sphere.

B. Jonson.

HALF-STARVED.* adj. [half and starved.] Almost starved.

Unnam'd, undreaded, and thyself half-starv'd.

Milton, P. L.

HALF-STRAINED. adj. [half and strain.] Half-bred; imperfect.

I find I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,

But mingril-mischievous; for my blood boil'd

To view this brutal act.

Dryden.

HALF-SWORD. n. s. Close fight; within half the length of a sword.

I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together.

Shakspeare.

HALF-WAY. adv. [half and way.] In the middle.

Fearless he sees, who is with virtue crown'd,

The tempest rage, and hears the thunder sound;

Ever the same, let fortune smile or frown:

Serenely as he liv'd resigns his breath;

Meets destiny half-way, nor shrinks at death.

Granville.

HALF-WIT. n. s. [half and wit.] A blockhead; a foolish fellow.

Half-wits are fleas, so little and so light,

We scarce could know they live, but that they bite.

Dryden.

HALF-WITTED. adj. [from half-wit.] Imperfectly furnished with understanding.

I would rather have trusted the refinement of our language, as to sound, to the judgement of the women than of half-witted poets.

Swift.

Jack had passed for a poor, well-meaning, half-witted, crack-brained fellow: people were strangely surprised to find him in such a roguery.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

When half is added to any word noting personal qualities, it commonly notes contempt.

To HALF.* v. a. To divide into two parts. See To HALVE.

Our Nicholas, for I account him at least halved between us, tells me that you have good means to know when — will be in town.

Wotton, Lett. (1638.) Rem. p. 374.

HALFEN.* adj. [from half.] Wanting half its due qualities.

So perfect in that art was Paridel,

That he Malbeco's halfen eye did wile,

His halfen eye he wiled wondrous well.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 5.

HALFENDEAL.* adv. [not a substantive, as Dr. Johnson asserts: Chaucer, halfende; Teut. half-decl.] Nearly half.

Now the humid night was farforth spent,

And heavenly lamps were halfendeale ybrent.

Spenser, F. Q.

HALFER.* n. s. [from half.]

1. One who possesses only half of any thing.

It would be more pleasing unto God, and commendable with men, if yourselves and such halfers in opinion, "omnium horarum homines" for your private ends, would openly avow what covertly you conceal

Montague, App. to Cas. p. 142.

2. This word does not occur in the dictionaries; but it means a male fallow-deer gelded, which is so called upon the same footing as a stone-horse in French is called cheval-entier. — Many, through ignorance of the etymon, [half], will call it havior, which is very absurd, and puts me in mind of a worthy gentleman, who told me he once wanted to send half of one of these cut bucks as a present, but when he came to write about it, could not spell the proper term, and could get no information about it; and as he did not care to give it wrong, he at last omitted sending it. Pegge, Anonym. iv. 42.

HA'LIARDS.* See HALLIARDS.

HA'LIBUT.† n. s. A sort of fish. Ainsworth.
In the afternoon, having three hours calm, our people caught upwards of a hundred halibuts, some of which weighed a hundred pounds; and none less than twenty pounds.

Cook and King's Voyage.

HA'LIDOM.† n. s. [haliz dom, holy judgement, or haliz, and lame, for lady. Dr. Johnson — Dr. Johnson accordingly gives the example from Spenser, with the definition of the word as meaning "our blessed lady," and with a remark that it should be halidam. But halidom appears to have been an ancient oath or solemn affirmation, "par le sacrement," as Sherwood observes; "forme de jurement ancienne." The Sax. halizdome denoted holiness, devoutness, integrity, as well as a sacrament or any thing holy. Holidame, or halidam, as Dr. Johnson would have it for the holy virgin, is a corruption of the original word: but Spenser is not guilty of it.] An adjuration by what is holy.

By my halidome, quoth he,
Ye a great master are in your degree. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
By my halidom, I was fast asleep.

Shakespeare, Two. Gent. Ver.

HA'LIMASS.† n. s. [haliz and mass.] The feast of All-souls. See HALLOWMAS.

HA'LING.* n. s. [from To hale.] An act of dragging by force; compulsion.

The beggarly help of halings and amercements.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

HA'LITUOUS. adj. [halitus, Lat.] Vaporous; fumes.

We speak of the atmosphere as of a peculiar thin and halituous liquor, much lighter than spirit of wine. Boyle.

HALL.† n. s. [Goth. hall; Sax. hal; Dutch, halle; old Fr. halle; low. Lat. hala; Lat. aula; Gr. αὐλή. From the Sax. verb helan, to cover; hall a covered building, according to Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. A court of justice; as, Westminster Hall.

● O lost too soon in yonder house or hall. Pope.

2. A manor-house so called, because in it were held courts for the tenants.

Captain Sentry, my master's nephew, has taken possession of the hall house, and the whole estate. Addison.

3. The publick room of a corporation.

With expedition on the headle call,
To summon all the company to the hall. Garth.

4. The first large room of a house.

That light we see is burning in my hall. Shakespeare.
Courtesy is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tapestry halls
And courts of princes. Milton, Comus.

5. A collegiate body in the universities of Oxford and Cambridge; in the former, not having the same constitution and endowment as a college; in the latter, exactly the same.

No master or head of any college or hall, in either of the said universities, shall, on any occasion whatsoever, be absent from his college, or hall, above two months together.

Dean Prideaux, Life, &c. p. 223.

HALLELUJAH.† n. s. [הלל ויהי Praise ye the Lord.]

"To demonstrate that God is the proper object of praise, these words Praise ye the Lord, are so compounded together as they make but one word in Hebrew, hallehujah." See Leigh's Critica Sacra, p. 57. In our church, as Wheatly observes, we repeat the sense of it every day in English; and in the first liturgy of king Edward VI. the word itself was retained.] A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy saints —

Unfeigned hallehujahs to Thee sing,
Hymns of high praise. Milton, P. L.

Singing those devout hymns and heavenly anthems, in which the church militant seems ambitious to emulate the triumphant, and echo back the solemn praises and hallehujahs of the celestial choirs. Boyle.

HALLELUJA'TICK.* adj. [from hallehujah.] Denoting a song of thanksgiving.

They mean one of those psalms which were called hallehujah psalms, because they had the word hallehujah prefixed to them. Christian Antiq. ii. 119.

HALLIARDS, or HA'LIARDS.* n. s. pl. In naval language, ropes or tackle employed to hoist or lower a sail.

The haliards of the fore-sail. Sherwood.

HALLOO.† interj. [The original of this word is controverted: some imagine it corrupted from a lui, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from haller, to draw. Dr. Johnson. — It is much more probably from the Sax. ahlopau, to bellow, to make a great noise; whence loud, and to low; Germ. hullen. Yet I remember somewhere to have seen à loup, to the wolf! proposed as the origin; and Cotgrave gives us harlon, which he explains by "hare-loup, a word wherewith dogs, that hunt or assail a wolf, are cheered and encouraged." See, however, ALEW. The interjection has the accent always on the last syllable; the verb indifferently on either.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,

More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo,
And, in a trice, the bellowing herd come out. Dryden.

To HALLOO. v. n. [haler, Fr.]

1. To cry as after the dogs.

A cry more tunable

Was never halloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn. Shakespeare.

2. To treat as in contempt.

Country folks halloosed and hunted after me, as the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy. Sidney.

To HALLOO. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,
Though gout and age his speed detain,
Old John halloos his hounds again. Prior.

2. To chase with shouts.

If I fly, Marcus,

Holloo me like a hare. Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. To call or shout to.

When we have found the king, he that first lights on him, Halloo the other. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HA'LLOOING.* n. s. [from halloo.] A loud and vehement cry.

There are noises, huntings, shoutings, halloowings,
Amidst the brakes and furzes. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

To HALLOW. v. a. [halzian, haliz, Sax. holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick resort; that we invest

God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses.

It cannot be endured to hear a man profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet so halloweth the same with prayer, that he hopeth it shall not burn.

Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor? Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed, And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet pray'rs and wishes
Are all I can return

God from work
Now resting, bless'd and hallow'd the seventh day,
As resting on that day from all his works,
But not in silence holy kept.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,
And vestal fires in hallow'd temples burn.

No satyr lurks within this hallow'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound.

2. To reverence as holy; hallowed be thy name.
HALLOWMAS.† n. s. [Sax. haliz and mass.] The feast of All-Souls: one of the cross quarters of the year, computing from the first of November to Candlemas.

She came adorned hither like sweet May,
Sent back like Hallowmas, or short'st of day.

To speak puling like a beggar at hallowmas.

To HALLUCINATE.* v. n. [Lat. hallucinatus.] To stumble; to blunder.

HALLUCINATION. n. s. [hallucinatio, Lat.] Error; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but questionless a mere hallucination of the vulgar.

This must have been the hallucination of the transcriber, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T.

HALM. n. s. [healm, Saxon.] Straw: pronounced haum: which see.

HALLO.† n. s. [Fr. halo, from the Gr. ἅλω, a circle.] A red circle round the sun or moon.

If the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the hailstones are duly figured, may be coloured.

I saw by reflection, in a vessel of stagnating water, three halo's, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows, concentrick to his body.

HALSE.* n. s. [Sax. halp.] The neck; the throat; one of our oldest words, and yet retained in the north of England, where it is pronounced hause. Hulse is likewise in our old lexicography.

Thy litel children hanging by the hals,
For thy Jason, that was of love so fals.

To HALSE.* v. a. [German, halsen; Su. Goth. halsas; to embrace: from halp, the neck.]

1. To embrace about the neck, as children do their parents.

Each other kissed glad,
And lovely hault, from feare of treason free,
And plighted hands, for ever friends to be.

2. To adjure. [Sax. halpian. Mr. Tyrwhitt has mistaken the sense in the following passage, where he rejects the obvious Saxon meaning, and indeed condescends not to notice it, conceiving the word as denoting to salute with reverence. But that is another sense.]

This yonge child to conjure he began,
And said; O dere child, I halse thee
In vertue of the holy Trinitee,
Tell me what is thy cause for to sing,
Sith that thy throte is cut to my seming.

3. To greet; to salute with respect or reverence. [Germ. heilizen, from heil; Sax. hal; Goth. hails. See the interjection HAIL.]

The eleven sterres halsed him all.

I halse hym hendlick, as I hys frende were.

HA'LSENING.† adj. [Sax. halp, the throat.] Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue. Not in use.

This ill halsening horny name hath, as Cornuto in Italy, opened a gap to the scoffs of many.

HAL'SER. n. s. [from halp, neck, and reel, a rope. It is now in marine pronunciation corrupted to hawser.] A rope less than a cable.

A beechen mast then in the hollow base
They hoisted, and with well-wreath'd halsers hoise
Their white sails.

No halsers need to bind these vessels here,
Nor bearded anchors; for no storms they fear.

To HALT.† v. n. [healt, Sax. lame; healtan, to limp; halts, Goth. haltr, Icel. lame, from hallda, to keep back, to detain. Serenius. In like manner, Mr. H. Tooke says that halt is the imperative of the Sax. verb healtan, to hold. Div. Purl. ii. 477. The Germ. halten, and Dan. halter, are also to stop.]

1. To limp; to be lame.

And will she yet debase her eyes
On me, that halt and am mis-shapen thus?

Thus inborn broils the factions would engage,
Or wars of exil'd heirs, of foreign rage,
Till halting vengeance overtook our age.

Spenser himself affects the obsolete,
And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet.

2. To stop in a march.

I was forced to halt in this perpendicular march.

3. To hesitate; to stand dubious.

How long halt ye between two opinions? Kings, xviii. 21.

4. To fail; to falter.

Here's a paper written in his hand;
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice.

All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him.

HALT.† adj. [Goth. halts; Sax. healt. See the verb.] Lame; crippled.

Bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind.

HALT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of limping; the manner of limping.

2. A stop in a march.

The heavenly bands
Down from a sky of jasper lighted now
In Paradise, and on a hill made halt.

Scouts each coast light armed scour,
Each quarter, to descry the distant foe,
Where lodg'd, or whither fled, or if for fight
In motion, or in halt.

Without any halt they marched between the two armies.

He might have made a halt till his foot and artillery came up to him.

HALTER.† n. s. [from halt.] He who limps.

Sherwood.

H A M

HALTER.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson has given healþre as the origin of halter, which, in order to make it pass, he has derived from halþ, the neck. The true Sax. word is hæltreþ, or halþreþ; Germ. halfier: 'Serenius and Ihre derive it from the Su. Goth. haclda, or haella, to hold.]

1. A rope to hang malefactors.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shakespeare.

They were to die by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded; wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs. Hayward.

Were I a drowsy judge, whose dismal note

Disgorgeth halters, as a juggler's throat

Doth ribbonds,

Cleaveland.

HA'MACK.* See HAMMOCK.

HA'MADRYAD.* n. s. [Greck, ἁμα, together, and δρῦς, an oak; Fr. hamadryade.] One of those wood-nymphs of antiquity, who were feigned to live and die with the trees to which they were attached.

The common opinion concerning the nymphs, whom the ancients called hamadryads, is more to the honour of trees than any thing yet mentioned: It was thought that the fate of these nymphs had so near a dependance on some trees, more especially oaks, that they lived and died together.

Spectator, No. 589.

The hamadryad or nymph, who must necessarily have perished with the tree, appeared to him the next day. Ibid.

HA'MATE.* adj. [hamatus, Lat.] Entangled; twisted together.

To explain cohesion by hamate atoms is accounted "igno-tum per ignotius." Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 227.

HA'MATED. adj. [hamatus, Lat.] Hooked; set with hooks.

HAMMOCK.† n. s. [hamaca, Sax. Dr. Johnson. — The word is Indian. amucha; and our old writers follow it. Temple, from whom alone Dr. Johnson cites an example, gives it hammock.] A swinging bed.

Cotton for the making of hamacas, which are Indian beds.

Raleigh, Discov. of Guiana, (1596), p. 32.

The Brasilians call their beds hamacas; they are as a sheet laced at both ends; and so they sit rocking themselves in them.

Sir R. Hawkins, Observ. Voy. to the S. Sea, § 27.

The storm being over, they [sailors] commonly get into their beds or hamacks.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 6.

Prince Maurice of Nassau, who had been accustomed to hammocks, used them all his life.

Temple.

HAMPER.† n. s. [Supposed by Minshew to be contracted from hand panier, but hanaperium appears to have been a word long in use, whence hanaper, hamper. Dr. Johnson. — The word may be traced to the Sax. hnap, a cup; old Fr. hanap; Armor. anap; whence hanaperium, either a large cup, or a place in which to deposit cups, a cupboard. V. Du Cange in HANAPERIUM. Hence its application to a trunk, or box, in which any thing might be kept; and so hanaper, perhaps, for a treasury. Or it may be referred to the old word ambry, a cupboard; from almonry, or the place where alms were kept in order to be distributed. See AMBRY. Certain it is, that our word was formerly upper; though Dr. Johnson cites only the modern usage of it by Swift.] Formerly, a cupboard; a chest; a box. now, a large basket for carriage.

Either as a spiritual food and victual in their tabernacles, ampers, hutchies; or as a mystic in their locked closets.

Sheldon, Mirac. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 255.

The Greek word, used by the translator, doth properly signify a hutch, or ampire to put victuals in, or a chest to lock treasure in.

Sheldon, ut supra, p. 265.

What powder'd wigs! what flames and darts!

What hampers full of bleeding hearts!

Swift.

To HAMPER.† v. a. [The original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain: Junius observes, that hamplins in Teutonic is a quarrel: others imagine that hamper or hanaper, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to hamper, which is commonly applied to the law, means originally

Should hang their wither'd head; for sure my breath
Is now more poisonous. Dryden.
The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
White lilies hang their heads, and soon decay;
And whiter snow in minutes melts away.
The cheerful birds no longer sing;
Each drops his head, and hangs his wing. Prior.
 6. To fix in such a manner as in some directions to be movable.
The gates and the chambers they renewed, and hanged doors upon them. 1 Mac. iv. 57.
 7. To cover or charge by any thing suspended.
Hung be the heav'n with black, yield day to night. Shakspeare.
The pavement ever foul with human gore;
Heads and their mangled members hung the door. Dryden.
 8. To furnish with ornaments or draperies fastened to the wall.
Musick is better in chambers wainscotted than hanged. Bacon.
If e'er my pious father for my sake
Did grateful off'rings on thy altars make,
Or I increas'd them with my sylvan toils,
And hung thy holy roofs with savage spoils,
Give me to scatter these. Dryden.
Sir Roger has hung several parts of his house with the trophies of his labours. Addison.
 9. To HANG upon. To regard with passionate affection.
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hung upon with love, so fortunate. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.
- To HANG. † v. n.
1. To be suspended; to be supported above, not below.
Over it a fair portcullis hang,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compacture strong. Spenser, F. Q.
 2. To depend; to fall loosely on the lower part; to dangle.

- Upon her shoulders wings she wears,
Like hanging sleeves, lin'd through with ears. Hudibras.
If gaming does an aged sire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice,
And shakes in hanging sleeves the little box and dice. Dryden.
3. To bend forward.
By hanging is only meant a posture of bending forward to strike the enemy. Addison.
 4. To float; to play.
And fall these sayings from that gentle tongue,
Where civil speech and soft persuasion hung? Prior.
 5. To be supported by something raised above the ground.
Whatever is placed on the head may be said to hang; as we call hanging gardens such as are planted on the top of the house. Addison.
 6. To rest upon by embracing.
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied. Shakspeare.
To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Mowmouth's grave. Shakspeare.
Faustina is described in the form of a lady sitting upon a bed, and two little infants hanging about her neck. Peacham.
 7. To hover; to impend.
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy;
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace? Shakspeare.
Odious names of distinction, which had slept while the dread of popery hung over us, were revived. Atterbury.
 8. To be loosely joined.
Whither go you?
— To see your wife: is she at home?
— Ay, and as idle as she may hang together. Shakspeare.
 9. To drag; to be incommodiously joined.
In my Lucia's absence
Life hangs upon me, and becomes a burden. Addison.
 10. To be compact or united; with together.
In the common cause we are all of a piece; we hang together. Dryden.
Your device hangs very well together; but is it not liable to exceptions? Addison.
 11. To adhere; unwelcomely or incommodiously.
A cheerful temper shines out in all her conversation, and dissipates those apprehensions which hang on the timorous or the modest, when admitted to her presence. Addison.
Shining landscips, gilded triumphs, and beautiful faces, disperse that gloominess which is apt to hang upon the mind in those dark disconsolate seasons. Addison.
 12. To rest; to reside.
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid. Shakspeare.
 13. To be in suspense; to be in a state of uncertainty.
Thy life shall hang in doubt before thee, and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life. Deut.
 14. To be delayed; to linger.
A noble stroke he lifted high,
Which hung not, but so swift with tempest fell
On the proud crest of Satan. Milton, P. L.
She thrice essay'd to speak: her accents hung,
And fault'ring dy'd unfinish'd on her tongue. Dryden.
 15. To be dependant on.
Oh, how wretched
Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favours! Shakspeare.
Great queen! whose name strikes haughty monarchs pale,
On whose just sceptre hangs Europa's scale. Prior.
 16. To be fixed or suspended with attention.
Though wond'ring senates hung on all he spoke,
The club must hail him master of the joke. Pope.
 17. To have a steep declivity.
Sussex marl shews itself on the middle of the sides of hanging grounds. Mortimer.
 18. To be executed by the halter.

If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The court forsakes him, and sir Balaam hangs. Pope.

19. To decline; to tend down.

His neck obliquely o'er his shoulders hung,
Press'd with the weight of sleep that tames the strong. Pope.

20. To be displayed; to be shown.

Let not him, that plays the lion, pare his nails, for they shall hang out as the lion's claws. Shakspeare, Muls. N. Dr.

21. To continue; as, the wind has hung easterly a great while.

22. To HANG FIRE. A term applied to guns, when the flame communicates not immediately from the pan to the charge.

HANGBY. * n. s. [hang and by.] A dependant: an expression of contempt.

The wasps and drones are unprofitable and harmful hangbyes, which live upon the spoil of others' labours.

Bp. Hall, Oecus. Medit. § 62.

Sirrah, I pray thee be acquainted with my two hang-byes here; thou wilt take exceeding pleasure in 'em, if thou hear'st 'em once go: my wind-instruments!

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

Hang them, a pair of tailing hangbys!

Beaumont and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

HANGER. † n. s. [from hang.] That by which any thing hangs: as, the pot-hangers. Dr. Johnson.

Formerly that part of the girdle or belt, by which the sword was suspended, was called the hangers.

See Minshew's Dict. "The hangers of a sword."

Six French rapiers and poniards with their assigns, as girdle, hangers, and so. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

HANGER. † n. s. [from hang. Dr. Johnson.—

Rather perhaps from the Persian hangier, a dagger. See Sir Thomas Herbert's Travels, p. 317.]

A short curved sword; a short broad sword.

I clothed myself in my best apparel, girded on my hanger, stuck my pistols loaded in my belt. Smollet, Roderick Random.

HANGER. * n. s. [from hang.] One who causes others to be hanged.

He [Sir Miles Fleetwood] was a very severe hanger of highwaymen. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 351.

HANGER-ON. n. s. [from hang.] A dependant; one who eats and drinks without payment.

If the wife or children were absent, their rooms were supplied by the umbrie, or hangers-on. Brown, Vulg. Err.

They all excused themselves save two, which two he reckoned his friends, and all the rest hangers-on. L'Estrange.

He is a perpetual hanger-on, yet nobody knows how to be without him. Swift.

HANGING. † n. s. [from hang.]

1. Drapery hang or fastened against the walls of rooms by way of ornament.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakspeare.

Being informed that his breakfast was ready, he drew towards the door, where the hangings were held up. Clarendon.

Now purple hangings cloath the palace walls,
And sumptuous feast-are made in splendid halls. Dryden.

Lucas Van Leyden has infected all Europe with his designs for tapestry, which, by the ignorant, are called ancient hangings. Dryden.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Any thing that hangs to another. Not in use.

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather. Shakspeare.

3. Death by a halter.

Slander or poison dread from Delia's rage,
Hard words or hanging, if your judge be Page. Pope.

4. Display; exhibition.

This unlucky mole misled several coxcombs; and, like the hanging out of false colours, made some of them converse with Rosalinda in what they thought the spirit of her party. Addison.

HANGING. † participial adj. [from hang.]

1. Foreboding death by the halter.

Surely, sir, a good favour you have; but that you have a hanging look. Shakspeare.

What Æthiops lips he has!

How foul a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryden.

2. Requiring to be punished by the halter; a hanging matter.

HANGING-SLEEVES. * n. s. pl. Strips of the same stuff with the gown, hanging down the back from the shoulders, formerly worn by children of both sexes.

See the second sense of the new verb hang.

These mistakes are to be left off with your hanging-sleeves.

Ld. Halifax.

HANGMAN. * n. s. [hang and man.]

1. The publick executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money.

Sidney.

Who makes that noise there? who are you?

—Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death. Shakspeare.

Men do not stand

In so ill case, that God hath with his hand
Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;

Donne.

Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate.
I never knew a critick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison.

2. A term of reproach, either serious or ludicrous.

One cried, God bless us! and Amen! the other;

As they had seen me with these hangman's hands:

Listening their fear, I could not say Amen,

When they did say God bless us. Shakspeare.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at aim. Shakspeare.

HANK. † n. s. [hank, Icelandic, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skein of thread.

A hank of gold or silver thread. Sherwood.

2. A tie; a check; an influence. A low word, as

Dr. Johnson says; yet, it may be added, very common; as, to have a hank upon a person, i. e. to have a hold upon him. Mr. H. Tooke hence considers hank as the past participle of hang, i. e. to have something hung upon him. But the Icelandic hank, which denotes a chain, a collar, is here also a satisfactory etymon; and the Latin uncus may accompany it.

Do we think we have the hank that some gallants have on their trusting merchants, that, upon peril of losing all former scores, he must still go on to supply. Decay of Piety.

In Horace, Necessity is furnished, if I may so express myself, with her hank and her fastenings, which she carries in her brazen hand. Whiter, Etymol. Magn. p. 247.

3. In naval language, hanks are wooden rings fixed on the stays.

4. In the north of England, a withy or rope for fastening a gate. [Swed. hank, the same.]

To HANK. * v. n. [from the noun.] To form into hanks. Used in the north of England.

To HANKER. † v. n. [hunkeren, Dutch. Serenius would refer it to hank; or, secondly, to the Su-henga after, to desire greatly.] To long importunately; to have an incessant wish: it has commonly after before the thing desired. It is scarcely used but in familiar language, Dr. Johnson says; yet it has been employed on the most serious subjects. See HANKERING.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant bankers after something else. L'Estrange.

Do'st thou not hanker after a greater liberty in some things? If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution. Calamy.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always hankering after the diversions of the town. Addison.

HA'NKERING.* n. s. [from hanker.] Strong desire; longing.

And now the saints began their reign,
For which th' had yearn'd so long in vain,
And felt such bowels hankering,
To see an empire all of kings. Hudibras.

Among women and children, care is to be taken that they get not a hankering after these juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers. L'Estrange.

The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many hankering after its ancient liberty. Addison.

We shall be able to part both with it and them, [the body and its delights,] without any great regret or reluctancy; and to live from them for ever, without any disquieting longings or hankering after them. Scott, Chr. Life. P. i. ch. 3.

TO HA'NKLE.* v. n. [from hank.] To twist; to entangle. Still used in the north of England.

HANSE.* } n. s. [Teut. hanse; Germ. hans;

HANSE Towns. } old Fr. hanse; an associate, or a confederacy; probably from the Latin ansa.] A society or company of merchants; and thence applied to certain towns in Germany, which confederated for mutual defence, and for protection of their trade.

Free to erect what spiritual cantons
Should be reveal'd, or gospel Haus-towns. Hudibras, iii. ii.

HANSEATICK.* adj. [Fr. Hanseatique.] Relating to the Hanse towns; as, the Hanseatick body. See HANSE.

HA'NSEL.* See HANDSEL.

HAN'T, for has not, or have not.

That roguish leer of your's makes a pretty woman's heart ache: you han't that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addison.

HAP.† n. s. [anhap, in Welsh, is misfortune. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Tyrwhitt refers happe in Chaucer to the Saxon; but Mr. Chalmers observes, that there is no such word, of this meaning, in that language: Hap is, in the Welsh, chance, luck, good fortune; and anhap, mischance, as already observed. Serenius, however, notices under happy, the Goth. hap, insperata felicitas.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flowering forest rash she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spenser, F. Q.

Her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz. Ruth, ii. 3.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curs'd be good haps, and curs'd be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the surest shield. Sidney,

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see the example followed. Hooker.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap. Hooker.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Nor fear'd she among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had she seen

The tragick end of many a bloody fray;

Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax.

HAP-HA'RLOT.* n. s. A coarse coverlet. Wachter's strange commentary on this word is, "Hap-harlot, a close covering; Lat. cento, lecti stragulum crassius, q. d. a harlot by hap, &c. si desit meretrix, deaur aliquid forte fortuna ad fovendos artus, &c. Vox ludicra!" — The word is an old expression for a coverlet; and is in the former part of it derived from hap, to cover; not from hap, chance, as Wachter pretends. The latter part might be thought to be from lit, a bed, like coverlet, if the word were not written hap-harlot, and hap-harlot, by our old writers; though Ainsworth writes it happarlet. The allusion is to harlot (not in Wachter's coarse sense of it; but) in the sense of a servant; implying that it was a rug fit only for a low person or servant; as dagswain, a kindred term, seems to have been a similar article proper only for one of low rank, a swain. Barret, in his Alveary of 1580, thus explains it, "a coarse covering made of divers shreds;" and Huloet, before him, "a coverlet so called." The ridiculous remark of Wachter required animadversion; especially as it has been admitted into the Rev. Mr. Lemon's Etymological Dictionary without refutation. Hap, or happin, is still our northern word for a rug or coarse coverlet.

Our fathers, yea and we ourselves also, have lien full oft upon straw pallets, on rough mats covered only with a sheet under coverlets made of dag-wain, or hap-harlots: I use their own terms. Harrison, Descript. of Eng. ch. 12. Pref. to Holinshed.

HAP-HA'ZARD. n. s. Chance; accident; perhaps originally hap hazard.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge's sake. Hooker.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

TO HAP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To happen; to have the casual consequence.

It will be too late to gather ships or soldiers, which may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom. Spenser.

2. To come by chance; to befall casually.

Run you to the citadel,

And tell my lord and lady what hath happ'd. Shakespeare.

In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant people. Bacon.

TO HAP.* v. a.

1. To cover. [perhaps from the Sax. heapian, to heap upon.] In the north of England, to heap clothes on one. Ray. In some places, to cover from danger.

There, one garment will serve a man most commonly two years: for why should he desire more? seeing if he had them, he should not be the better hapt or covered from cold. Robinson, Transl. of More's Utopia, (1551), ii. 4.

2. To catch; to seize; to take. [old French, happer, either perhaps from the Lat. rapio, or capio.]

Sherwood.

H A P

HA'PLESS. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky.

Hapless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire mishap! Shakespeare.
Here hapless Icarus had found his part,
Had not the father's grief restrain'd his art. Dryden.
Did his hapless passion equal mine,
I would refuse the bliss. Smith.

HA'PLY. adv. [from hap.]

1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.
This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shakespeare.
To warn
Us, haply too secure, of our discharge
From penalty, because from death releas'd
Some days. Milton, P. L.
Then haply yet your breast remains untouch'd,
Though that seems strange. Rowe.
Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift.

2. By chance; by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream,
Him haply slumbering on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side. Milton, P. L.

TO HA'PPEN. v. n. [from hap.]

1. To fall out; to chance; to come to pass.
Bring forth your strong reasons, and shew us what shall happen. Isaiah, xli. 22.
Say not I have sinned, and what harm hath happened unto me. Eccles. v. 4.
If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprized, as if some unexpected thing had happened to thee. Tillotson.

2. To light; to fall by chance.

I have happened on some other accounts relating to mortalities. Graunt.

TO HA'PPER.* v. n. To hop; to skip about. See TO HOP. The Scotch thus use hap.

Those shameless companions, which attribute unto themselves the name of the company of Jesus; which are, within these forty years, crawled out of the bottomless pit, to happer and swarm throughout the world.

Harmer, Tr. of Beza's Sermon. (1587) p. 242.

HA'PPILY. adv. [from happy.]

1. Fortunately; luckily; successfully.
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua:
If wealthily, then happily in Padua. Shakespeare.
Prefer'd by conquest, happily o'erthrown,
Falling they rise to be with us made one. Waller.
Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end happily; for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.

2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.

Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. In a state of felicity; as, he lives happily.

4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for haply.

One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may peruse these two treatises. Digby.

HA'PPINESS. n. s. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.

Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooker.

Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.
Philosophers differ about the chief good or happiness of man. Temple.

H A R

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.

Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope.

Form'd by some rule that guides but not constrains,
And finish'd more through happiness than pains. Pope.

HA'PPY.† adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck. See
HAP.]

1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.

At other end Uran did Strephon leapt
Her happy making hand. Sidney.

Am I happy in thy new?
— If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
Beget you happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakespeare.

Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, to whose happy making sight alone,
— Our heavenly guided soul shall climb. Milton, Ode on Time.
(Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.

2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.

Chymists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

Yet in his agony his fancy wrought,
And fear supply'd him with this happy thought. Dryden.

3. Addressful; ready.

Desire his service,
Tell him wherein you are happy. Shakespeare, Cymb.
One gentleman is happy at a reply, and another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.

4. Propitious; favourable. A Latinism. Not in use.

Therefore, for goodness sake, and as you're known
The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad, as we would make you.

Prolog. Shakespeare's K. Hen. VIII.

5. Happy Man be his Dole. A proverbial expression, implying may his fortune, his dole or share in life,
be that of a happy man.

Happy man be his dole! He that runs fastest, gets the riag.
Shakespeare, Tam. Shrew.

Let every man beg his own way, and happy man be his dole.
Beaum. and Fl. Wit at Sea. Weapons.

HA'QUETON. n. s. A coat of mail. See HACQUETON.

HA'RAM, or HA'REM.* n. s. [Persian.] A seraglio;
the women's apartment in the east.

Recollecting the extreme vigilance, with which the harems of the east are guarded. Scripture Illustr. Expos. Ind.

HARA'NGUE.† n. s. [harangue, French. The original of the French word is much questioned:

Menage thinks it a corruption of hearing, English;
Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or orationare, orationer, oraner, aranger, haranguer. Dr. Johnson. — The word is merely the pure and regular past participle, hparang, of the Anglo-Saxon verb hpingan, to sound, or to make a great sound; (as hpingo is also used.)
And M. Casseneuve alone is right in his description of the word, when he says, "Harangue est un discours prononcé avec contention de voix." Mr
H. Tooke, Div. Purl. ii. 274. The French word is from the English.] A speech; a popular oration.

H A R

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors mix'd,
 Assemble, and harangues are heard; but soon
 In factious opposition.

Milton, P. L.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine.

Swift.

Many preachers neglect method in their harangues.

Watts.

To HARA'NGUE.† v. n. [haranguer, French.] To make a speech; to pronounce an oration.

The House impeach him; Coningsby harangues.

Popc.

To HARA'NGUE. v. a. To address by an oration;
 as, he harangued the troops.

HARA'NGUER.† n. s. [from harangue.] An orator;
 a publick speaker: generally with some mixture of contempt.

Turns the occasion takes, and cries aloud,

Talk on, you quaint haranguers of the croud.

Dryden, Æn.

We are not to think every clamorous haranguer, or every splenetic replier against a court, is therefore a patriot.

Bp. Berkeley, Maxims, § 23.

To HARASS.† v. a. [harasser, Fr. from harasse, a heavy buckler, according to Du Cange. Dr.
 Johnson. — Rather from the Sax. hepzan, to spoil, to lay waste; a military word, from which also to harrow is derived; Icel. herian; Su. Goth.
haeria, the same, from haer, an armed force; Sax.
hepe. Srenius partly inclines to this etymon.
 The primitive sense of the word, therefore, which has hitherto been overlooked, is that of spoliation by an enemy.

1. To desolate; to waste; to destroy.

A multitude of tyrants, which have for a long while harassed and wasted the soul.

Hammond, Works, iv. 562.

2. To weary; to fatigue; to tire with labour and uneasiness.

These troops came to the army but the day before, harassed with a long and wearisome march.

Bacon.

Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;

The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,

And harass'd out with duty.

Dryden.

Nature oppress'd, and harass'd out with care,

Sinks down to rest.

Addison.

Out increases the force of the verb.

HARASS. n. s. [from the verb.] Waste; disturbance.

The men of Judah, to prevent

The harass of their land, beset me round.

Milton, S. A.

HARASSER.* n. s. [from harass. Sax. hepze.] A spoiler.

Recite
The feats of Amazons, the fatal fight
Betwix the hardy queen and hero knight. Dryden.

Who is there hardy enough to contend with the reproach which is prepared for those, who dare venture to dissent from the received opinions of their country? Locke.

Could thirst of vengeance, and desire of fame,
Excite the female breast with martial flame?
And shall not love's diviner pow'r inspire
More hardy virtue, and more gen'rous fire? Prior.

2. Strong; hard; firm.

Is a man confident of his present strength? An unwholesome blast may shake in pieces his hardy fabrick. South.

3. Confident; impudent; viciously stubborn.

HARE and HERE, differing in pronunciation only, signify both an army and a lord. So Harold is a general of an army; Hareman, a chief man in the army; Herwin, a victorious army; which are much like Stratocles, Polemarchus, and Hegesistratus among the Greeks. Gibson's Camden.

HARE. n. s. [hapa, Sax. karh, Erse.]

H A R

1. A small quadruped, with long ears and short tail, that moves by leaps, remarkable for timidity, vigilance, and fecundity; the common game of hunters.

Diemay'd not this

Our captains Macbeth and Banquo?

As sparrows, eagles; or the hare, the lion. Shakspeare.

We view in the open champaign a brace of swift greyhounds coursing a good stout and well-breathed hare. More.

Your dressings must be with hare's fur. Wiseman.

Poor is the triumph o'er the timid hare. Thomson.

2. A constellation.

The hare appears, whose active rays supply

A nimble force, and hardly wings deny. Creech.

To HARE.† v. a. [old Fr. harer.] To fright; to hurry with terrour.

The poor creature [Richard Cromwell] was so hared by the council of officers, that he presently caused a proclamation to be issued out, by which he did declare the parliament to be dissolved. Clarendon, Hist. Reb. b. 16.

To hare and rate them, is not to teach but vex them. Locke.

HAREBELL. n. s. [hare and bell.] A blue flower campaniform.

Thou shalt not lack

The flow'r that's like thy face, pale primrose; nor
The azur'd harebell, like thy veins. Shakspeare, Cymb.

HAREBRAINED.† adj. [from hare the verb, and brain.]

Dr. Johnson. — Yet, at hair-brained, Dr. Johnson tells us, we should read hare-brained, i. e. wild and unsettled as a hare! — Whether from the animal, or the verb meaning to hurry, certain it is, that harebrained is the old spelling, as in Barret's Alv.
1580, and elsewhere. Burton has "a bold, hare- brain, mad fellow." Anat. of Mel. To the Read.
p. 40.] Volatile; unsettled; wild; fluttering;
hurried.

The overmuch folly of many clients hath, and doth maintaine the lawyers to be both warm within and abroad; while many harebrained clyents must tarry and attend without.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580), fol. 29. b.

That harebrained wild fellow begins to play the fool, when others are weary of it. Bacon.

HAREFOOT.† n. s. [Sax. hapefot.]

1. A bird. Ainsworth.

2. An herb. Ainsworth.

HAREHEARTED.* adj. [hare and heart.] Timorous; fearful. Ainsworth.

HAREHOUND.* n. s. [Sax. hapa-hune.] A hound for hunting hares.

HAREHUNTER.* n. s. [hare and hunter.] One who is fond of hunting hares.

I write an hour or two every morning, then side out a hunting upon the downs. — How can a poor translator and hare- hunter hope for a minute's memory? Pope to M. and T. Blount.

HAREHUNTING.* n. s. The diversion of hunting the hare.

Description of the harehunting in all its parts.

Argument to Somerville's Chace.

HARELIP. n. s. A fissure in the upper lip with want of substance, a natural defect. Quincy.

The blots of nature's hand

Shall not in their issue stand;

Never mole, harelip, nor scar,

Shall upon their children be. Shakspeare.

The third stitch is performed with pins or needles, as in harelips. Wiseman.

HARELIPPED.* adj. [from harelip.] Having a hare-
lip. Ainsworth.

HAREMINT.* n. s. [Sax. hapemint.] An herb.
[arum.]

HARE-PIPE.* n. s. [hare and pipe.] A snare to catch hares.

H A R

HA'RESLETTUCE.* n. s. [hare and lettuce.] In botany, the sow-thistle. Ainsworth.

HA'REWORT.* n. s. [Sax. hapan-pypt.] A plant [malva hortensis.]

HARICOT.* n. s. [French, a bean; Cotgrave describes the dish, adopted from this name, as far more savoury than the modern one, and in no less than three different ways. Let the gourmands immediately purchase Cotgrave!] A kind of ragout, generally made of meat steaks and cut roots.

I have ordered a haricot, to which you will be very welcome about four o'clock. Ld. Chesterfield.

HA'RIER.† n. s. [from hare. This is the true spelling of the word; but is now usually written, as well as pronounced, harrier.] A dog for hunting hares.

Keeping a kennel of little hounds called harriers, at the king's charge. Blount, Arc. Ten. p. 39.

HARIOLA'TION.* n. s. [Latin, haridatio.] Sooth-saying. Cockran.

HA'RLOT.* See HERLOT.

HA'RISH.* adj. [from hare.] Like a hare. Halset.

TO HARK.† v. n. [contracted from hearken, Dr. Johnson says. It is from the Fris. harken, to listen. Dr. Johnson has introduced, as one of his examples, a passage from Shakspeare's Tempest, in which the word is not hark, but hearken, and the signification not neuter, but active. See TO HEARKEN.] To listen.

Pricking up his ears, to hark.
If he could hear too in the dark. Hindibras.

HARK. interj. [It is originally the imperative of the verb hark.] List! hear! listen!

What harmony is this? My good friends, hark! Shakspeare.

The butcher saw him upon the gallop with a piece of flesh, and called out, Hark ye, friend, you may make the best of your purchase. L'Estrange.

Hark! methinks the roar that late pursu'd me,
Sinks like the murmurs of a falling wind. Rowe.

Hark how loud the woods
Invite you forth! Thomson.

HARL. n. s.

1. The filaments of flax.

2. Any filamentous substance.

The general sort are wicker hives, made of privet, willow, or hark, daubed with cow-dung. Moslimer.

HARLEQUIN.† n. s. [This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a busy buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le quint. Menage derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented M. Harlay's house, whom his friends called Harlequin, sittle Harlay. Trevoux. Dr. Johnson. — M. de Harlay, Mr. Malone observes, lived in the time of Henry the Third of France, viz. 1574—1589; and M. Guet says, that he had the same account, which Menage relates, from Harlequin himself. Notwithstanding this, the name of harlequin is found in a letter of M. Raulin in 1511. "Vis antiquam illam Harlequini familiam revocare, ut videatur mortuus inter mundane curie nebulas et caligines equitare?" p. 28. Further, it might almost as well be considered a diminutive of the old Fr. arlot, a cheat, as of M. Harlay's name.

H A R

Nash, in the Epistle Dedicatory to his Almond for a Parrot, (about 1589,) thus speaks of this personage. "Coming from Venice the last summer, and taking Bergamo in my way homeward to England, it was my happe, sojourning there some four or five days, to light in fellowship with that famous Franca Hip' Harleken, who, perceiving me to be an Englishman by my habit and speech, asked me many particulars of the order and maner of our playes, which he termed by the name of representations."]

A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace; a Jack-pudding; a zany.

The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress. Dryden.

The man in graver tragick known,
Though his best part long since was done,
Still on the stage desires to tarry;
And he who play'd the harlequin,
After the jest still loads the scene,
Unwilling to retire, though weary. Prior.

TO HARLEQUIN.* v. a. [from the noun.] To conjure away, like a harlequin.

Monkeys have been
Extreme good doctors for the spleen;
And kitten, if the humour hit,
Has harlequin'd away the fit. Green, Poem of the Spleen, ver. 96.

HA'RLOCK.* n. s. A plant: It may be a corruption of charlock. But see also HARDOCK.

The honey-suckle, the harlocke,
The lilly, &c. Drayton, Ecl. (1593.)

HARLOT.† n. s. [herlodes, Welsh, a girl. Others for horelet, a little whore. Others from the name of the mother of William the Conqueror. Harlot is used in Chaucer for a low male drudge. Dr. Johnson. — Hickes first suggested that horelet (i. e. harlot) is the diminutive of hore, in which manner whore was formerly written; from the Sax. hop. Mr. H. Tooke agrees with Hickes, pronouncing the word as the past participle of hypan, to hire, i. e. denoting any person hired. Thus Mr. Bagshaw deduces it from hire and let; and cites, in proof, an old indictment against certain women "common harlots of their bodies." This, I may add, agrees with the ancient notion of this character; a harlot being, as Plantus observes, quæ ipsa sese venditat. Mil. Glorios. A. 2. S. 3. — Bullet, however, refers the word to the Welsh herlodes, and Mr. Chalmers agrees with him; herlodes meaning, in that language, a hoiden or romping girl; and herlod and herlotyn, a stripling, a youth. And thus, in our old language, harlot was applied to both sexes. In the Rom. of the Rose, "king of harlots," as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, is Chaucer's translation of "roy des ribaulx;" and, as a writer, nearly two centuries before Mr. Tyrwhitt, remarks, "the kinge of ribaldes or harlots, or evill and wicked persons, was an officer of great accompte in tymes paste — sic autem appellantur, quia jam tum homines perditissimi RIBALDI, et RIBALDÆ mulieres puellæque perditæ vocantur. Regis nomen superiori aut judici tribuitur, &c." Fr. Thynne's Anfnadv. on Speght's Chaucer, 1598. Thus harlots (ribaldi et ribaldæ) were clearly of both sexes, the Fr. ribauld, a fogue, and ribaulde, a trull. Our old language applies the word, in this sense, to men. In the Cornish, harlot means a rogue. So in old French, arlot, "fripon, coquin, voleur." Rog. Indeed, so far back as about the close of our Henry the third's reign, a royal mandate was issued against "certain vagrant persons calling themselves harlots, maintaining idleness in divers parts of our realme; most shameleslie making their meetings, &c. against the honestie of the church and good manners." Fox's Acts and Mon. p. 305. Fox considers them as "people of a lewd disposition and uncivill," and at the same time as a pretended religious order. "It is most probable," he adds, "that the reproachful name of harlot had its beginning from hence."

1. A whore; a strumpet.

Away, my disposition, and possess me with
Some harlot's spirit. Shakespeare.
They help thee by such kids as geese and harlots. B. Jonson.
The barbarous harlots crowd the publick place;
Go, foole, and purchase an unclean embrace. Dryden.

2. A base person; a rogue; a cheat. Apparently the earliest usage of the word. See the etymology.

Whether we [be] the false harlots, and you the trewe men.
Dialogue betw. Euseb. and Theoph. (1556.) sign. b. 6. b.
No man but he and thou, and such other false harlots, preieth any such preaching. Fox, Acts and Mon. Exam. of W. Thorpe.

3. A servant.

A sturdy harlot went hem ay behind,
That was hir hostes man, and bare a sakke,
And what men yave him, laid it on his bakke.
Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

HA'RLOT.* adj.

1. Like a base person.

The harlot king
Is quite beyond mine arm. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

2. Wanton; like a harlot.

The harlot lap
Of Philistean Dalilah. Milton, P. L.
For now she rules me with her 'boks,
And 'round me winds her harlot chain.
Way, Fidd. Lay of the Ivy.

To HA'RLOT.* v. n. To play the harlot; to keep the company of harlots.

They that spend their youth in loitering, bezzling, and harloting. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

HA'RLOTRY.† n. s. [from harlot.]

1. Ribaldry.

Either filthy or soli speche, or harlotric, that perteyneth not to profit, [in the present version, jesting.] Wicliffe, Ephes. v. 4.
I had lever hear an harlotry. Vis. P. Ploughman, fol. 27.

2. The trade of a harlot; fornication.

Harlotry, when committed with a common strumpet.
Bp. Nicholson, Expos. of the Catechism, (1662.) p. 123.
Nor shall,

From Rome's tribunal, thy harangues prevail
'Gainst harlotry, while thou art clad so thin. Dryden.

3. A name of contempt for a woman.

A peevish self-will'd harlotry,
That no persuasion can do good upon. Shakespeare.
A kind of comition and harlotry Venus, which, deriving only from the body and a branch of the animal life, draws down the soul to what is merely corporeal, and mingling with it, defiles and pollutes it. Hallywell, Excell. of Mor. Virtue, (1692.) p. 111.

4. Any thing meretricious.

The harlotry of the ornaments, Pursuits of Literature.

HARM.† n. s. [hearm, Sax. Harm was in Anglo-Saxon harmð, or harmð, i. e. whatsoever harmeth or hurteth; the third person singular of the indicative of hman, or heman, to hurt. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. Purl. ii. 425. Mr. Tooke might have added, on the authority of Sommer, the verb hearmian.]

1. Injury; crime; wickedness.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt.

We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harm, which the wise Powers
Deny us for our good. Shakespeare.

How are we happy still in fear of harm?
But harm precedes all sin. Milton, P. L.

They should be suffered to write on: it would keep them out of harm's way, and prevent them from evil courses. Swift.

To HARM.† v. a. [Sax. hearmian.] To hurt; to injure.

What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?

I saw't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me. Shakespeare, Othello
Passions ne'er could grow

To harm another, or impeach your rest. Waller.

After their young are hatched, they brood them under their wings, lest the cold, and sometimes the heat, should harm them. Ray.

HA'RMFUL. adj. [harm and full.] Hurtful; mischievous; noxious; injurious; detrimental.

His dearly loved squire
His spear of heben-wood behind him bare,
Whose harmful head, thrice heated in the fire,
Had given many a breast with pike-head square. Spenser.

Let no man fear that harmful creature less, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Dy. Hall.

The earth brought forth fruit and food for man, without any mixture of harmful quality. Raleigh.

For flax and outs will burn the tender field,
And sleepy poppies harmful harvests yield. Dryden.

HA'RMFULLY. adv. [from harmful.] Hurtfully; noxiously; detrimentally.

A scholar is better occupied in playing or sleeping, than spending his time not only vainly, but harmfully in such kind of exercise. Ascham.

HA'RMFULNESS. n. s. [from harmful.] Hurtfulness; mischievousness; noxiousness.

HA'RMLESS.† adj. [from harm.]

1. Innocent; innoxious; not hurtful; not doing harm.

Touching ceremonies, harmless in themselves, and hurtful only in respect of number, was it amiss to decree that those things that were least needful, and newest come, should be the first that were taken away? Houker.

She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brother, me, her master, hitting
Each object with a joy. Shakespeare.

2. Unhurt; undamaged; not receiving harm.

The shipwright will be careful to gain by his labour, or at least to save himself harmless; and therefore suit his work slightly, according to a slight price. Raleigh.

HA'RMLESSLY. adv. [from harmless.] Innocently; without hurt; without crime.

He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmlessly, and in a recreation that became a churchman. Walton.
Bullets batter the walls which stand inflexible, but fall harmlessly into wood or feathers. Decay of Piety.

HA'RMLESSNESS. n. s. [from harmless.] Innocence; freedom from tendency to injury or hurt.

When, through careless sin humanity
In dough-bak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's vicious and not he. Donne.

Compare the harmlessness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliability to virtuous counsels, which is in youth untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obstinacy in an aged, long-practised sinner. South.

HARMONICAL. } adj. [ἀρμονικός; harmonique, Fr.]

HARMONICK. }

1. Relating to music; susceptible of musical proportion to each other.

After every three whole notes, nature requireth, for all har-monical use, one half note to be interposed. Bacon.

2. Concordant; musical; proportioned to each other; less properly.

Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds, are both active, and positive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, the privatives. Bacon.

So swells each wind-pipe; as it tones to ask,
Harmonick twang of leather, horn, and brass. Pope.

H A R

HARMONICALLY. * adv. [from harmonical.] Musically.

The mind, as some suppose, harmonically composed, is roused up at the tunes of musick. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 295.

HARMONIOUS. adj. [harmonieux, Fr. from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other; symmetrical.

All the wide-extended sky,
And all th' harmonious worlds on high,
And Virgil's sacred work shall die. Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads, "et once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical; symphonious.

Thoughts that voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton, P. L.

The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us: they who lived with him thought it musical. Dryden.

HARMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos-like together crush'd and bruis'd;
But as the world harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree. Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter, should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not to worship the instrument, but him that makes the musick. Stillingfleet.

HARMONIOUSNESS. n. s. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.

HARMONIST. * n. s. [Fr. harmoniste.]

1. One who understands the concord of sounds; one who delights in musick.

Sweet harmonist, and beautiful as sweet. Young, Night Th. 3.

I am well aware, that many profound harmonists may be disgusted at what I have already advanced, and think their craft in danger, when I seem to attack the very citadel of musick.

A musician may be a very skillful harmonist, and yet be defective in the talents of melody, air, and expression. A. Smith on the Imit. Arts, P. ii.

2. One who brings together corresponding passages on a subject; an harmonizer.

He endeavourerth to shew how, among the Fathers Augustin and Hieron are flatly against the harmonist.

Nelson, Life of Ep. Bull, p. 226.

TO HARMONIZE. v. a. [from harmony.] To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.

TO HARMONIZE. * v. u. To agree; to correspond.

R. Tancuman shews how the making of the tabernacle harmonizeth with the making of the world. Lightfoot, Miscell. (1629) p. 153.

HARMONIZER. * n. s. [from harmonize.] One who brings together corresponding passages on any subject.

They do not forget to shew a prudent disdain for commentators and harmonizers, by whose care all they have to say is often superseded.

Cleaver, Inq. into the Charact. of David, (1762) p. 5.

HARMONY. n. s. [Harmonia, Gr. harmonie, Fr.]

1. The just adaptation of one part to another.

H A R

The pleasures of the eye and ear are but the effects of equality, good proportion, or correspondence; so that equality and correspondence are the causes of harmony. Bacon.

The harmony of things,
As well as that of sounds, from discord springs. Denham.

Sure infinite wisdom must accomplish all its works with consummate harmony, proportion, and regularity. Chayne.

2. Just proportion of sound; musical concord.

The sound
Symphonious, of ten thousand harps that tun'd

Harmony is a compound idea made up of different sounds united. Watts.

3. Concord; corresponding sentiment.

In us both one soul,
Harmony to behold in wedded pair!
More grateful than harmonious sounds to the ear. Milton, P. L.

I no sooner in my heart divin'd,
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet! Milton, P. L.

HARNESS. n. s. [harnois, Fr. supposed from iern, or hiern, Runick; hiarn, Welsh and Erse, iron.]

1. Armour; defensive furniture of war. Somewhat antiquated.

A goodly knight, all dress'd in harness meet,
That from his head no place appeared to his feet. Spenser, F. Q.

3. To fix horses in their traces.

Before the door her iron chariot stood,
All ready harnessed for journey new. Spenser, F. Q.

Harness the horses, and get up the horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets. Jer. xlv. 4.

When I plow my ground, my horse is harnessed, and chained to my plough. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To the harness'd yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil. Thomson.

HARNESSER. * n. s. [from harness.] One who fixes horses in their traces; the "harnesser of a horse." Sherwood.

HARP. n. s. [heapp, Saxon; harpe, Fr. It is used through both the Teutonic and Roman dialects, and has been long in use.

* Romanusq; lyrâ plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpâ. Ven. Fort.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempests' cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet music which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spenser.

H A R

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton, P. L.
Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire;
The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryden.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies
The shell, as lightest first begins to rise;
This when sweet Orpheus struck, to listening rocks
He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks. Creech.

To HARP.† v. n. [heappian, Saxon; harper, Fr.
from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Rev. xiv. 2.

The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to Heaven's new-born heir. Milton, Ode Nativ.

You harp a little too much upon one string. Collier.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
He seems

Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To HARP.* v. a.

1. To play upon the harp.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harp'd? I Cor. xiv. 7.

2. To touch; to affect; to move.

For thy good caution thanks,
Thou hast harp'd my tear aright. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

HARPER.† n. s. [heappene, Saxon.] A player on the harp.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song. Shakspeare.
I'm the god of the harp: stop, my fairest: — in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper could fetch her again. Tickell.

HARPING IRON. n. s. [from harpago, Lat.] A bearded dart, with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping-iron the younger foe;
Who when he felt his side so rudely gor'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd. Waller.

HARPINGS.* n. s. pl. In naval language, the breadth of a ship at the bow: the fore part of the wales which go round the bow, and are fastened into the stem.

HARPIST.* n. s. [from harp.] A player on the harp.
She — can no less

Tame the fierce walkers of the wilderness,
Than that Oeagrian harpist, for whose lay Tigers with hunger pin'd, and left their prey. Broune, Brit. Past. B. 1. S. 5.

HARPONE'ER. n. s. [harponeur, Fr. from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.

HARPOON.† n. s. [harpon, Span. an arrow; harpon,
Fr. from the Gr. ἀγκυρα] A harping iron.

Some fish with harpoons, some with darts are struck,
Some drawn with nets, some hang upon the hook. Dryden.

HARPOONER.* See HARPONEER.

HARPSICORD.† n. s. [old Fr. harpechorde.] Our word was formerly written harpsicon.] A musical instrument, strung with wires, and played by striking keys.

H A R

Let them run divisions on the harpsicon or virginals.

Parthenia Sarr. (1633,) p. 144.
He would exactly perform his part of many things to a harp- sicon or theorbo. Fell, Life of Hammond.
I shall allow them to be harpsichords, a kind of musick, which every one knows is a consort by itself. Tatler, No. 153.

HA'RPY. n. s. [harpia, Lat. harpie, harpye, Fr.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures; which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile
the rest that they could not be endured. Raleigh.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any ambassage to the pignies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakspeare.

HA'RQUEBUSS.† n. s. [See ARQUEBUSE. Ital.
arca bouza, the bow with a hole; whence archibuso, arcubugio. Our old spelling was also harcabuse, or harcabuz.] A hand gun.

There entered into it as good as a dozen Frenchmen, well appointed with their harcabuzes and matches lighted.

Shelton, Transl. of Don Quix. iv. 14.

HA'RQUEBUSSIER. n. s. [from harquebuss.] One armed with a harquebuss.

Twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers were ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Knolles.

HARR.* n. s. A storm proceeding from the sea. See EAGRE. Coles.

HARRATE'EN.* n. s. A kind of stuff, or cloth.

Mean time, thus silver'd with meanders gay,
In mimic pride the snail-wrought tissue shines,
Perchance of tabby or of harrateen
Not ill expressive; such the power of snails!

Shestone, Econ. P. iii.

HA'RRIDAN. n. s. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed strumpet.

She just endur'd the winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd har'idan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

HA'RRIER.* n. s. A hare-hound.* See HARRIER.

HA'RRICO.* See HARICOT.

HA'RRROW. n. s. [charrouc, French; harrcke, Germ.
a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other,
and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and *harrow*s.

Two small *harrow*s, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Dryden.

To HA'RRŌW.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,
Not only thy peason, but also thy beams. Tuiss.

2. To break with the harrow.

Can'st thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow?
or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job, xxxix. 10.

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy. Shakspeare.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Shakspeare.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me growning on the reeling rack. Rowe.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. [Sax. haryan; Fr. harier. See To HARASS.]

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions; to subdue. [Sax. herygian.] Obsolete.

And he, that harrow'd hell with heavy stowrs,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre. Spenser, F. Q.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Didst make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, didst bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser.

6. To disturb; to put into commotion; to overpower. [This should rather be written harry. See To HARRY.]

Most like: it harrows me with fear and wonder. Shakespeare.
Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear. Milton, Comus.

HARROW.† interj. [old Fr. harau, horo; answering to the modern hue and cry; Su. Goth. hacrop, from haer, her, an army, and op, a cry.] An exclamation of sudden distress; a cry for help. Obsolete.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this curst light,
To see my lord so deadly damnify'd? Spenser.

HARROWER.† n. s. [from harrow.]

1. He who harrows.

The natives were likewise bound to give three plowdays each; and every plow was to be allowed four boon-loaves, and to harrow three days; and every harrower was allowed a brown loaf, and two herrings a day. Blount, Arc. Ten. p. 143.

2. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.
TO HARRY.† v. a. [Fr. harier; Sax. herygian. See To HARASS.]

1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle; to vex. Minsheu.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill. —
— I repent me much
That I so harry'd him. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See To HARROW.

TO HARRY.* v. n. To make harassing incursion.

What made your rogueships

Hurrying for victuals here? Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

HARSH.† adj. [Dutch, harsch; Su. Goth. harsk. Formerly written harish, and also harsk.]

1. Austere; roughly; sour.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought to appear. Denham.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our features, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And harsh in sound to thine. Shakespeare.

Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the least cadence of a rugged line. Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

The lord commands thee now
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To servile duties. Dryden.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wise man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Bp. Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou canst not praise. Prior.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him. Atterbury.

4. Rugged to the touch; rough.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle.

5. Unpleasing; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Dryden.

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.

I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Unpleasantly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
I tell you, 'twould sound harshly in her ears. Shakespeare.
Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy. Shakespeare.

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.

HARSHNESS.† n. s. [from harsh. It is rarely used in the plural: but Jeremy Taylor has somewhere so employed it.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antient words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.

Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.

Thy tender hefted nature shall not give
Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shakespeare.

Thy beauty cannot move
Rage from the seas, nor thy love teach them love,
Nor tame wild Boreas' harshness. Dennis, Poems, p. 257.

HART.† n. s. [heorte, Saxon.] A he-deer; the male of the hind; the stag.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare.

The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. May, Virgil.

HART-ROYAL. n. s. A plant. A species of buck-thorn plantain.

HARTSHORN. n. s. A drug.

Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use many ways, and under many forms. What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer: but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorifick, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill.

Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woodward.

HARTSHORN. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

HARTSTONGUE. † n. s. [lingua servinæ, Latin.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.

Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer.

So saxifrage is good, and hartstongue, for the stone. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

HARTWORT. n. s. [londylium, Latin.] An umbelliferous plant. Miller.

HARVEST. † n. s. [hæppert, Saxon; herfst, Dutch; herbst, German. Some derive it from the Lat. herba and festum, q. d. festivitas herbarum; others, from Hertha, the Vesta of the ancient Germans, and Dutch feest, q. d. the feast of the Earth. Serenius, from the Su. Goth. ar, the year, and vist, provision, q. d. provision for the whole year.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it ebbs, the seedsman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakespeare.

With harvest work he is worse than in Spring. L'Estrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.

From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that reared sow'd. Shakespeare.

When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find. Dryden.

3. The product of labour.

Let us the harvest of our labour eat,
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden.

HARVEST-HOME. n. s.

1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.

Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn it is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden.

2. The time of gathering harvest.

At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thinks to Pan and Falce pay. Dryden.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.

His wife I will use as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer;
and there's my harvest-home. Shakespeare.

HARVEST-LORD. n. s. The head reaper at the harvest.

Grant harvest-lord more by penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tusser.

HARVEST-QUEEN. † n. s. [harvest and queen.] An image apparelled in great finery, crowned with flowers, a sheaf of corn placed under her arm, and a sickle in her hand, carried out of the village in the morning of the conclusive reaping-day, with musick and much clamour of the reapers into the field, where it stands fixed on a pole all day; and, when the reaping is done, is brought home in like manner. This they call the harvest-queen, and it represents the Roman Ceres.

Hutchinson, Hist. of Northumberland.

Adam the while,

Waiting delicious her return, had wove
Of choicest flowers a garland, to adorn
Her tresses, and her rural labours crown;
As reapers oft are wont their harvest-queen. Milton, P. L.
To HARVEST. † v. a. [from the noun.] To gather in. [mestiver.] Sherwood.

I have seen a stock of seeds harvested and stacked, worth two or three hundred pounds. Pennant, Tour in Scotland.

HARVESTER. n. s. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

HARVESTMAN. † n. s. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.

In this large field of the Scriptures, a man may gather some ears untouched after the harvestmen, how diligent soever they were. Abp. Parker, Pref. to the Old Test.

Like to a harvestman, that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakespeare.

HARUMSCARUM. † adj. A low but frequent expression applied to flighty persons, persons always in a hurry; as if they were hared or frightened themselves, or haring others by their precipitancy; as, he is a harumscarum fellow. Grose, who notices this colloquial term, connects it with the verb hare, to affright, to make wild; others, both with that verb and with scare, though in our northern parts the word is harumstarum; and some, with the German herum, here and there.

TO HASH. v. a. [hacher, Fr.] To mince; to chop into small pieces, and mingle.

He rais'd his arm,
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,

As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, though some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order, and politeness: but hashed up in haste. Garth.

HASH. † n. s. [from the verb. Fr. hachis.] Minced meat; "a hachee, a sliced gallinawfry, or minced meat." Cotgrave.

HASK. † n. s. [Swedish, hass, a rush.] This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags. Obsolete.

Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser.

HASLET. } n. s. [hasla, Icelandic, a bundle; haste;
HARSLET. } rel. hastereau, hastier, Fr.] The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe and part of the throat to it.

HASP. † n. s. [hæpp, Saxon; whence in some provinces it is yet called hapse.]

1. A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer.

2. A spindle, to wind silk, thread, or yarn upon. [old Fr. haspe; Tent. haspe, haspel.] Skinner.

TO HASP. † v. a. [Sax. hæppan.] To shut with a hasp. Hæpt in a tomb, awkwardly you're shag'd
With one fat slave before, and none behind. Garth, Dispens. C. 5.

HASSOCK. † n. s. [hasock, German. Skinner. — hass, Swed. a rush; and sack, a sack. Serenius.]

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.

He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hush are the same.

HAST. The second person singular of have.

HASTE. n. s. [haste, Fr. haeste, Dutch.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!

But O, thou wilt not, canst not spare!

Haste hath never time to hear. Crashaw.

Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,

Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;

But as the present, so the last age writ;

In both we find like negligence and wit. Waller.

In as much haste as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden.

The wretched father, running to their aid

With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.

2. Passion; vehemence.

I said in my haste, all men are liars.

Psalms.

To HASTE. } v. n. [haster, Fr. haesten, Dutch.]

1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.

I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee. Jer.

2. To move with swiftness; eagerness; or hurry.

'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;

He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you so? Shakspeare.

They were troubled and hasted away.

Psalms.

All those things are passed away like a shadow, and as a post that hasted by. Wisdom.

Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,

Like mortal life to meet eternity.

Denham.

These rites perform'd, the prince, without delay,

Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way.

Dryden.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste

Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste.

Pope.

Soon as the sun awakes the sprightly court,

Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.

To HASTE. } v. a. To push forward; to urge on;

To HA'STEN. } to precipitate; to drive to a swifter pace.

Let it be so hasted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shakspeare.

All hopes of succour from your arms are past;

To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryden.

Each sees his lamp with different lustre crown'd;

Each knows his course with different periods bound;

And in his passage through the liquid space,

Nor hastens, nor towards his neighbour's race. Prior.

HA'STENER. } n. s. [from hasten.]

1. One that hastens or hurries.

Sherwood.

2. One that precipitates, or urges on.

[They] took upon them to be the saviours and preservers of the city; but, as it proved, the hasteners and precipitators of the destruction of that kingdom. Hammond, Works, iv. 590.

Pride and indigence, the two great hasteners of modern poems. Johnson, Rambler, No. 169.

HA'STILY. adv. [from hasty.]

1. In a hurry; speedily; nimbly; quickly.

A voice, that called loud and clear,

Come hither, hither, O come hastily!

Spenser.

If your grace incline that we should live,

You must not, sir, too hastily forgive.

Waller.

The next to danger, hot pursu'd by fate,

Half cloth'd, half naked, hastily retire.

Dryden.

2. Rashly; precipitately.

Without considering consequences, we hastily engaged in a war which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

3. Passionately; with vehemence.

HA'STINESS. n. s. [from hasty.]

1. Haste; speed.

2. Hurry; precipitation.

A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble hastiness told Basilus. Sidney.

3. Rash; eagerness.

The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastiness of my performance, would allow. Dryden.

There is most just cause to fear, lest our hastiness to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evils. Hooker.

4. Angry testiness; passionate vehemence.

HA'STINGS. } n. s. [from hasty.]

1. Peas that come early.

As loud as one that sings his part

To wheel-barrow, or turnip cart,

Or your new pick-pan'd old invention

To cry green hastings with an engine. Hudibras, Ep. to Sidoraphel.

The large white and green hastings are not to be set till the cold is over. Mortimer.

2. Any early fruit; as, hastings for pears and apples, soon ripe. Cotgrave and Sherwood. So likewise, roses d'hastiveau, very forward roses. Cotgrave.

HA'STY. adj. [hastif, Fr. from haste; haestig, Dutch.]

1. Quick; speedy.

Is this the counsel that we two have shar'd,

The sisters vows, the hours that we have spent,

When we have chid the hasty footed time

For parting us!

Shakspeare.

2. Passionate; vehement.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding; but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly. Prov. xiv. 29.

3. Rash; precipitate.

Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words? There is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov. xxix. 20.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Eccles. x. 2.

4. Early; ripe.

Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the Summer. Isaiah, xxviii. 4.

HA'STY-PUDDING. n. s. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.

Sure hasty-pudding is thy chiefest dish,

With bullock's liver, or some stinking fish. Dorset.

HAT. n. s. [haet, Saxon; hatt, German.] A cover for the head.

She's as big as he is; and there's her thrum hat, and her muffler too. Shakspeare.

Out of mere ambition you have made

Your holy hat be stamp't on the king's coin. Shakspeare.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,

And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd;

His hat adorn'd with wings dispos'd the god,

And in his hand he bore the sleep compelling rod. Dryden.

HATBAND. n. s. [hat and band.] A string tied round the hat.

They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like hatbands. Bacon.

Room for the noble gladiator! see

His coat and hatband shew his quality. Dryden.

HATBOX.* n. s. [hat and box.] The modern word for hatcase. See HATCASE.

HATCASE. n. s. [hat and case.] A slight box for a hat.

H A T

I might mention a hatoase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison.

TO HATCH.† v. a. [hecken, German, as Skinner thinks, from heghen, eghen, æg, egg, Saxon.]
r. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.

He kindly spreads his spacious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' ensuing spring. Denham.
The tepid caves, and fens, and shores,
Their brood as numerous hatch from the eggs, that soon
Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton, P. L.

2. To quicken the egg by incubation.
When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over and begin to sit.

Others hatch their eggs and tend the birth, till it is able to shift for itself. Ray.
Addison.

3. To produce by precedent action.
Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arians are renewed by them, who to hatch their heresy have chosen those churches as fittest nests, where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hooker.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.
He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour. Hayward.
Thy wicked head never at rest, but hammering
And hatching hellish things. Beaumont and Fl. Night-Walker.

5. [From hacher, Fr. to cut, particularly to engrave upon the hilt of a sword. V. Cotgrave in HACHÉ. See also HATCHING.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.
Who first shall wound, through others arms, his blood appearing fresh,
Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatcht. Chapman.
Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again
As venerable Nestor hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air strong, as the axle tree
On which heaven rides, knit all the Grecian cars
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakespeare.
Those tender airs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in painting, are never able to deceive the sight. Dryden.

Why should not I
Doat on my horse well trapp'd, my sword well hatch'd?
Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.
Some grave instructors on my life; they look
For all the world, like old hatch'd hilts.
Beaumont and Fl. Valentinian.
A sword bravely gilt and hatched with gold.
Heath, Chron. of the Civ. Wars, p. 411.

6. To steep. [from the preceding sense.]
His weapon hatch'd in blood.
Beaumont and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

His face
Is hatch'd with impudency threefold thick. Heywood, Iron Age.
TO HATCH.† v. n.

1. To be in the state of growing quick.
He observed circumstances in eggs, whilst they were hatching which varied. Boyle.

2. To be in a state of advance towards effect.
The soldiers find not recompence,
As yet there's none a hatching. Beaumont and Fl. Mad Lover.

HATCH.† n. s. [from the verb.]
1. A brood excluded from the egg.

In the age of Aristotle, it was generally said that no one had ever seen the hatch of the cuckoo. Tr. Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

2. The act of exclusion from the egg.

3. Disclosure; discovery.
Something's in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;

H A T

And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclose
Will be some danger. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. [hæca, Saxon; hecke, Dutch, a bolt.] A half door; a floor with an opening over it: perhaps from hacher, to cut, as a hatch is part of a door cut in two.

Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch. Shakespeare.

5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they descend from one deck or floor of a ship to another.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches. Shakespeare, Tempest.

There she's hid;
The mariners all under hatches stow'd. Shakespeare, Tempest.
So seas, impell'd by winds with added power,
Assault the sides, and o'er the hatches tow'r. Dryden.

A ship was fastened to the shore;
The plank was ready laid for safe ascent,
For shelter there the trembling shadow bent,
And skip'd and skulk'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.

6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of ignominy, poverty, or depression.

Some, who have been phlegmatick, and therefore meek, or kept under hatches, and therefore lowly.

Dean Pierce, Serm. 29 May 1661, p. 24.
He assures us how this fatherhood continued its course, till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Locke.

7. Hatches. Floodgates. Ainsworth.

TO HATCHEL.† v. a. [hachelen, German.] To beat flax, so as to separate the fibrous from the brittle part.

His teeth are very industrious in their calling; and his chops like a Bridewell perpetually hatcheling. Butler, Rem. ii. 462.
The asbestos, mentioned by Kircher in his description of China, put into water, moulders like clay, and is a fibrous small excrescence, like hairs growing upon the stones; and for the hatchelling, spinning, and weaving it, he refers to his Mundus Subterraneus. Woodward.

HATCHEL.† n. s. [from the verb; hachell, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten.

Sherwood.

A man ever in haste, a great hatcher and breeder of business. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 9.

HATCHET.† n. s. [hache, hachette, French; ascia, Latin. See TO HACK. Our word was formerly written without the t, agreeably to the etymology. See Butler's Eng. Gramm. 1633, p. 35.] A small axe.

The hatchet is to hew the irregularities of stuff, Moron.
His harmful hatchet he hent in his hand,
And to the field he speedeth. Spenser.

Ye shall have a hempen candle then, and the help of a hatchet. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Nails, hammers, hatchets sharp, and halters strong. Crashaw.

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden.

Our countryman presented him with a curious hatchet; and asking him whether it had a good edge, tried it upon the donor.

Addison.
HATCHET-FACE. n. s. An ugly face; such, I suppose, as might be hewn out of a block by a hatchet.

An ape his own dear image will embrace;
An ugly beau adores a hatchet-face. Dryden.
HATCHING.* n. s. [from the fifth sense of TO hatch.] A kind of drawing. See TO ETCH.

H A T

[The] figure is afterwards with new lines drawn deeper quite through the ground; and all the shadows and hatchings put in.

HATCHMENT. † n. s. [corrupted from achievement, sometimes written, and also pronounced, atchievement.] An armorial escutcheon, exhibited on the hearse at funerals; and sometimes hung up in churches.

His means of death, his obscure funeral,
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
No noble rights nor formal ostentation,
Cry to be heard.

Shakespeare.

I would have master Pye's mantle, her grace's hearse, to pluck down his hatchments, reverse his coat armour, and nullify him for no gentleman.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

Receive these pledges,
These hatchments of our grief, and grace us so much,
To place 'em on this hearse.

Benam. and Fl. Bonifacio.

HATCHWAY. n. s. [hatches and way.] The way over or through the hatches.

To HATE. v. a. [harian, Saxon.] To detest; to abhor; to abominate; to regard with the passion contrary to love.

You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.

— Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

Shakespeare.

Do all men kill the thing they do not love?

— Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

— Ev'ry offence is not a hate at first.

Shakespeare.

Those old inhabitants of thy holy land, whom thou hatest for doing most odious works.

Wisd. xii. 4.

But whatsoever our jarring fortunes prove,
Though our lords hate, methinks we two may love.

Dryden.

HATE. n. s. [hate, Saxon.] Malignity; detestation; the contrary to love.

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear

Your favours nor your hate.

Shakespeare.

Hate to Mezentius, arm'd five hundred more.

Dryden.

Nausica teaches that the afflicted are not always the objects of divine hate.

Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

Shewwood.

HATEFUL. adj. [hate and full.]

1. Causing abhorrence; odious; abominable; detestable.

My name's Macbeth

— The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.

Shakespeare.

There is no vice more hateful to God and man than ingratitude.

Preacham.

— What owe I to his commands

Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down,

To sit in hateful office here confin'd,

Inhabitant of heaven, and heav'nly born?

Milton, P. L.

I hear the tread

Of hateful steps: I must be viewless now.

Milton, Comus.

But Umbriel, hateful gnome! forbears not so;

He breaks the vial whence the sorrows flow.

Pope.

2. Feeling abhorrence; abhorrent; detesting; malignant; malevolent.

Palamou compell'd

No more to try the fortune of the field;

And, worse than death, to view with hateful eyes

His rival's conquest.

Dryden.

HATEFULLY. † adv. [from hateful.]

1. Odiously; abominably.

The ceremony was hatefully tedious.

Drummond, Trav. p. 75.

2. Malignantly; maliciously.

All their hearts stood hatefully appaid

Long since.

They shall deal with thee hatefully, take away all thy labour, and leave thee naked and bare.

Isa. xlii. 29.

H A T

HATEFULNESS. n. s. [from hateful.] Odiousness.

HATER. n. s. [from hate.] One that hates; an abhorrer; a detester.

I of her understood of that most noble courtesy, which whosoever loves not shows himself to be a hater of virtue, and unworthy to live in the society of mankind.

Sidney.

Whilst he stood up and spoke,

He was my master, and I wore my life

To spend upon his haters.

Shakespeare.

An enemy to God, and a hater of all good.

Brown.

They never wanted so much knowledge as to inform and convince them of the unlawfulness of a man's being a murderer, an hater of God, and a covenant-breaker.

South.

HATRED. n. s. [from hate.] Hate; ill-will; malignity; malevolence; dislike; abhorrence; detestation; abomination; the passion contrary to love.

Hatred is the thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us.

Lacke.

I wish I had a cause to seek him there,

To oppose his hatred fully.

Shakespeare.

Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversion and hostility included in its very essence; but then if there could have been hatred in the world when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object.

South.

Hatreds are often begotten from slight and almost innocent occasions, and quarrels propagated in the world.

Locke.

Retain no malice nor hatred against any: be ready to do them all the kindness you are able.

Wake.

She is a Presbyterian of the most rank and virulent kind,
and consequently has an inveterate hatred to the church.

Swift.

Hatred has in it the guilt of murder, and lust the guilt of adultery.

Sherlock.

HATTED. * adj. [from hat.] Wearing a hat of any kind.

Ceremony has made many fools:

It is as easy way unto a duchess,

As to a hatted dame.

Tourneur, Revenge's Tragedy.

To HATTER. † v. a. [Perhaps corrupted from batter.]

To harass; to weary; to wear out with fatigue.

He's hatter'd out with penance.

Dryden.

HATTER. n. s. [from hat.] A maker of hats.

A hatter sells a dozen of hats for five shillings a-piece.

Swift.

HATTOCK. † n. s. [attock, Erse.] A shock of corn; containing twelve sheaves according to some; and only three sheaves laid together according to others.

HAUBERK. † n. s. [hauberg, old French. See HABERGEON.] A coat of mail without sleeves, made of plate or of chain-mail.

And on the hauberk struck the prince so sore,

That quite disparted all the linked frame,

And pierced to the skin.

Spenser, F. G.

Hauberks and helms are hew'd with many a wound;

The mighty maces with such haste descend,

They break the bones, and make the solid armour head.

Dryden.

To HAVE. † v. a. in the present I have, thou hast,
he hath; we, ye, they have; pret. and part. pass.
had. [habun, Gothick; habban, Saxon; habben, Dutch; haber, old French; habeo, Latin. The Saxons also had hapan; Icelandic hafa; Sw. Goth. hafwa; modern French avoir; Ital. avere.]

1. Not to be without.

I have brought him before you, that after examination had
I might have something to write.

Acts, xxv. 26.

2. To carry; to wear.

back, having nothing upon him.

Sidney.

3. To make use of.

I have no Levite to my price.

Judges, xvii. 13.

4. To possess.

He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. Exod. xvi. 18.

5. To obtain; to enjoy; to possess.

Now, O Father, glorify me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was. St. John, xvii. 5.

6. To take; to receive.

A secret happiness, in Petronius, is called curiosa felicitas, and which I suppose he had from the feliciter audere of Horace. Dryden.

7. To be in any state; to be attended with or united to as accident or concomitant.

Have I need of madness, that ye have brought this fellow? 1 Sam. xxi. 15.

8. To put; to take.

That done, go, and cart it, and have it away. Tusser.

9. To procure; to find.

I would have any one name to me that tongue, that one can speak as he should do, by the rules of grammar. Locke.

10. Not to neglect; not to omit.

I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst! Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself. Shakspeare; Hen. IV.

Your plea is good; but still I say, beware:

Laws are explain'd by men: so have a care. Pope.

11. To hold; to regard.

Of them shall I be had in honour. 2 Sam. Psalms.

12. To maintain; to hold opinion.

Sometimes they will have them to be natural heat, whereas some of them are crude and cold; and sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of the tangible parts, whereas they are things by themselves. Bacon.

13. To contain.

You have of these pedlars that have more in 'em than you'd think, Shakspeare.

I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him, by wearing his apparel neatly. Shakspeare.

14. To require; to claim.

What would these madmen have?

First they would bribe us without pence, Deceive us without common sense, And without pow'r enslave. Dryden.

15. To be a husband or wife to another.

If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him. Shakspeare.

16. To be engaged, as in a task or employment.

If we maintain things that are established, we have to strive with a number of heavy prejudices, deeply rooted in the hearts of men. Hooker.

The Spaniards captain never hath to meddle with his soldiers. Spenser on Ireland.

Of the evils which hindered the peace and good ordering of that land, the inconvenience of the laws was the first which you had in hand. Spenser on Ireland.

Kings have to deal with their neighbours, their wives, their children, their prelates or clergy, their nobles, their merchants and their commons. Bacon.

17. To wish; to desire: in a lax sense. [from the Lat. aveo.]

I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. Psalms.

I would have no man discouraged with that kind of life or series of actions, in which the choice of others, or his own necessities, may have engaged him. Addison.

18. To buy.

If these trifles were rated only by art and artfulness, we should have them much cheaper. Collier.

19. It is most used in English, as in other European languages, as an auxiliary verb to make the tenses; have, hast, and hath or has, the preterperfect; and had and hadst the preterpluperfect.

If there had been words enow between them to have expressed provocation, they had gone together by the ears. Congreve.

I have heard one of the greatest geniuses this age has produced, who had been trained up in all the polite studies of antiquity, assure me, upon his being obliged to search into records, that he at last took an incredible pleasure in it. Addison.

I have not here considered custom as it makes things easy, but as it renders them delightful; and though others have made the same reflections, it is possible they may not have drawn those uses from it. Addison.

That admirable precept which Pythagoras is said to have given to his disciples, and which that philosopher must have drawn from the observation I have enlarged upon. Addison.

The gods have placed labour before virtue. Addison.

This observation we have made on man. Addison.

Evil spirits have contracted in the body habits of lust and sensuality, malice and revenge. Addison.

There torments have already taken root in them. Addison.

That excellent author has shewn how every particular custom and habit of virtue will, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or a state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practise it. Addison.

20. HAVE at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt. They seem to be imperative expressions: have this at you; let this reach you, or take this; have with you; take this with you: but this will not explain have at it, or have at him, which must be considered as more elliptical: as, we will have a trial at it, or at him. Dr. Johnson. — Have with you is a common expression denoting readiness to attend another; meaning, I will go along with you.

He that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakspeare.

I can bear my part; 'tis my occupation: have at it with you. Shakspeare.

Mrs. Ford. Will you go, Mrs. Page?

Mrs. Page. Have with you. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Iago. Captain, will you go?

21. HAVE after, an expression of the same import as have with you, i. e. I will follow you.

Mar. Let's follow; 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Have after. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

HAVELESS. * adj. [have and less.] HAVING little or nothing. An old word.

As poore as Job, and loveles,

Out taken one for haveles. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.

HAVEN. † n. s. [Sax. hæpen; Iceland. hafn; Dutch. haven; from the Goth. haban, to contain.]

1. A port; a harbour; a station for ships.

Love was threatened and promised to him, and his cousin, as both the tempest and haven of their best years. Sidney.

Order for sea is given:

They have put forth the haven. Shakspeare.

After an hour and a half sailing, we entered into a good haven, being the port of a fair city. Bacon.

The queen beheld, as soon as day appear'd,

The navy under sail, the haven clear'd. Denham.

We may be shipwreck'd by her breath:

Love, favour'd once with that sweet gale,

Doubles his haste, and fills his sail,

Till he arrive, where she must prove

The haven, or the rock of love. Waller.

2. A shelter; an asylum.

All places, that the eye of Heaven visits,

Are to a wise man ports and happy havens. Shakspeare.

HAVENER. n. s. [from haven.] An overseer of a port.

H A U

In champion countrie a pleasure they take
To mow up their haume for to brow and to bake,
The haume is the straw of the wheat or the ric,
Which once being reaped, they mow by and by. Tusser.
Having stripped off the haum or binds from the poles, as you pick the hops, stack them up. Mortimer.

2. A horse-collar. Sherwood's Dict. 1632. Still used in the north of England.

HAUNCH. n. s. [hancke, Dutch; hanche, French;
anca, Italian.]

1. The thigh; the hip.

Hail, groom! didst thou not see a bleeding hind,
Whose right haunch earst my stedfast arrow strake? Spenser.
To make a man able to teach his horse to stop and turn quick, and to rest on his haunches is of use to a gentleman both in peace and war. Lycke.

2. The rear; the hind part.

Thou art a Summer bird,
Which ever in the haunch of Winter sings
The lifting up of day. Shakespeare.

HAUNCHER. * adj. [from haunch.] Having haunches;
as "big-haunched," i. e. having large hips or haunches. Sherwood.

TO HAUNT. † v. a. [hanter, French.]

Hunte thyself, [in the present version exercise thyself] to pitee. Wicliffe, 1 Tim. iv. 7.
2. To frequent; to be much about any place or person.

A man who for his hospitality is so much haunted, that no news stir but come to his ears. Sidney.

Now we being brought known unto her, after once we were acquainted, and acquainted we were sooner than ourselves expected, she continually almost haunted us. Sidney.

I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
Because some tell me that thou art a king. Shakespeare.

She this dang'rous forest haunts,
And in sad accents utters her complaints. Waller.

Earth now
Secur'd like to heav'n, a seat where gods might dwell,
Or wander with delight, and love to haunt
Her sacred shades. Milton, P. L.

Celestial Venus haunts Idalia's groves;
Diana Cynthia, Ceres Hybla loves. Pope.

3. It is used frequently in an ill sense of one that comes unwelcome.

You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house;
I told you, sir, my daughter is dispos'd of. Shakespeare.

Oh, could I see my country seat!
There leaning near a gentle brook,
Sleep, or peruse some ancient book;
And there in sweet oblivion drown
Those cares that haunt the court and town. Swift.

4. It is eminently used of apparitions or spectres that appear in a particular place.

Foul spirits haunt my resting place,
And ghastly visions break my sleep by night. Fairfax.
All these the woes of Oedipus have known,
Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town. Pope.

TO HAUNT. v. n. To be much about; to appear frequently.

I've charg'd thee not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter's not for thee. Shakespeare, Othello.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate: Shakespeare, Macbeth.

HAUNT. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Custom; practice. The primary sense. See TO HAUNT.

Of cloth-making she had swiche an haunt,
She passed them by Ipres and of Gaunt. Chaucer, Prol. C. T.

2. Place in which one is frequently found.

Know and see his place where his haunt is, and who hath seen him there. 1 Sam. xxiii. 22.

H A U

We set toils, nets, gins, snares, and traps, for hunts and birds in their own haunts and walks. L'Estrange.

To me pertains not, she replies,
To know or care where Cupid flies;
What are his haunts, or which his way,
Where he would dwell, or whither stray. Prior.

A sceng where, if a god should cast his sight,
A god might gaze and wonder with delight!
Joy touch'd the messenger of Heaven, he stay'd Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope.

3. Habit of being in a certain place.

The haunt you have got about the courts will one day or another bring your family to beggary. Arbutnot.

HAUNTER. n. s. [from haunt.] Frequenter; one that is often found in any place.

The ancient Grecians were an ingenious people, of whom the vulgar sort, such as were haunters of theatres, took pleasure in the conceits of Aristophanes. Wotton on Education.

O goddess, haunter of the woodland green,
Queen of the nether skies. Dryden.

HA'VOCK. † n. s. [hafog, Welsh, devastation.

Dr. Johnson. — But that is supposed to be from the Sax. hapoc, the hawk; whence our havock for rapine or devastation.] Waste; wide and general devastation; merciless destruction.

Having been never used to have any thing of their own,
they make no spare of any thing, but havock and confusion of all they meet with. Spenser on Ireland.

Saul made havock of the church. Acts, viii. 2.

Ye gods! what havock does ambition make Among your works! Addison, Cato.

The Rabbins, to express the great havock which has been made of the Jews, tell us, that there were such torrents of holy blood shed, as carried rocks of a hundred yards in circumference above three miles into the sea. Addison.

If it had either air or fuel, it must make a greater havock than any history mentions. Cheyne.

HA'VOCK. † interj. [from the noun.] A word of encouragement to slaughter; a term formerly meaning that no quarter would be given.

That noo man be so hardy to crye havock, upon payne of hym that is so fownde begynner, to dye therefore; and the re-menant to be emprisoned, and theyr bodies punished at the kynges will. Statutes of Warre, &c. by K. Hen. VIII. (1513.)

Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry havock, kings. Shakespeare.

Até by his side,
Cries havock! and lets loose the dogs of war. Shakespeare.

TO HA'VOCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To waste; to destroy; to lay waste.

Whatsoever they leave, the soldiers spoileth and havocketh;
so that, between both, nothing is left. Spenser on Ireland.

See, with what heat these dogs of hell advance,
To waste and havock yonder world, which I
So fair and good created! Milton, P. L.

HAUST. * n. s.

1. A draught; as much as a man can swallow. [Lat.
haustus.] Coles.

2. A dry cough. [Sax. hpohta, a cough; leel. hooste, the same.] Ray and Grose place it among our north-country words.

HAUTBOY. † n. s. [Fr. haut bois, q. d. high wood;
a term said to be given to this instrument, because its tone is louder than that of the violin. It is often written, and almost always pronounced, hoboy.] A wind instrument.

I told John of Gaunt he beat his own haute; for you might have truss'd him and all his apparel into an eel-skin: the case of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him. Shakespeare.

The hautboy, not as now with latten bound,
And rival with the trumpet for his sound,
Ent soft, and simple, at few holes breath'd time
And tune too. B. Jonson, Horace's Art of Poetry.

Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes. Dryden.

H A W

HA'UTBOY Strawberry. See STRAWBERRY.

HAUTEUR.* n. s. [French.] Pride; insolence; haughtiness.

The ill-judging zeal and hauteur of this king in pushing things to extremity, brought on the Revolution.

Bp. Ellys, Tr. on Temp. Liberty, (1765) p. 125.

HAUT-GOUT.* n. s. [French; corrupted into hogo.] More writes it haugon, in one of his Letters, 1675; Butler, haut-goust.] Any thing with a strong relish, or with a strong scent.

He depraves his appetite with haut-gousts.

Butler, Rem. ii. 462.

They made use of both the leaves, stalk, and extract especially [of Silphium] as we now do garlick, and other haut-gouts, as nauseous altogether.

Evelyn.

HA'W.* n. s.

1. The berry and seed of the hawthorn. [Sax. hæz, hæg; hæg-doun, the hawthorn, hagan, the berries.] The seed of the bramble with kernel and haw. Tusser. Store of haws and hips portend cold winters.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

His quarrel to the hedge was, that his thorns and his brambles did not bring forth raisins, rather than haws and blackberries.

L'Estrange.

2. An excrescence in the eye.

Huloet.

3. A small piece of ground adjoining to an house. In Scotland they call it haugh. [Sax. haga; Germ. and Icel. hagr, a field; Dan. have, a garden. An enclosed place is our oldest sense of the word.

Haw, a hedge, or any inclosure. Ray.]

There was a polkat in his have,
That, as he said, his capons had yslawe.

Chaucer, Pardon. Tale.

Upon the haw at Plymouth is cut out in the ground the portraiture of two men, with clubs in their hands, whom they term Gog and Magog.

Carew.

4. Formerly, a dale; written hawgh, in Coke upon Lyttelton [Norm. Fr. haugh, a valley.]

HAW.* n. s. [See HA.] An intermission or hesitation of speech.

To HAW. v. n. [Perhaps corrupted from hawk or hack.] To speak slowly with frequent intermission and hesitation.

'Tis a great way; but yet, after a little humming and hawing upon't, he agreed to undertake the job.

L'Estrange.

HA'WA'W.* n. s. [apparently a duplication of have, in the sense of any inclosure. See the third sense of HAW. It is sometimes written haha, and is absurdly pretended by Dr. Ash to be derived from the expression of surprise at the sight of it!] A fence or bank that interrupts an alley or walk, sunk between two slopes, and not perceived till approached; sometimes, a kind of canal; intended generally, to open prospects by removing walls or other impediments, and yet to preserve a fence.

Wise men did not, to be thought gay,

Then compliment their power away;

But lest, by frail desires misled,

The girls forbidden paths should tread,

Of ignorance rais'd the safe high wall,

But we hawhaws that slew them all:

Thus we at once solicit sense,

And charge them not to break the fence.

Green's Poem of the Spleen, (1754.) ver. 277.

HAWK. n. s. [hebog, Welsh; hapoc, Sax. accipiter, Lat.]

1. A bird of prey, used much anciently in sport to catch other birds.

H A W

Do'st thou love hawking? Thou hast hawks will soar
Above the morning lark.

Shakspeare.

It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to cut his hawk's meat.

Peachment.

Whence borne on liquid wing

The sounding culver shoots; or where the hawk,

High in the beetling cliff, his airy builds.

Thomson.

2. [hoch, Welsh.] An effort to force phlegm up the throat.

To HAWK. v. n.

1. To fly hawks at fowls; to catch birds by means of a hawk. [from the noun.]

Ride unto St. Alban's,

Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk. Shakspeare.

He that hawks at larks and sparrows has no less sport, though a much less considerable quarry, than he that flies at nobler game.

Locke.

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks

With her of tarsels and of lures he talks.

Prior.

2. To fly at; to attack on the wing.

A falcon towering in her pride of place,

Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd.

Shakspeare.

Whether upward to the moon they go,

Or dream the winter out in caves below,

Or hawk at flies elsewhere, concerns us not to know. Dryden.

3. [hochio, Welsh.] To force up phlegm with a noise.

Come sit, sit, and a song. — Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice?

Shakspeare.

She complained of a stinking tough phlegm which she hawked up in the mornings.

Wiseman.

Blood, cast out of the throat or windpipe, is spit out with a hawking or small cough; that out of the gums is spit out without hawking, coughing, or vomiting.

Harvey.

To HAWK.* v. a. [from hocker, German, higgler, a huckster.] To sell by proclaiming it in the streets.

His works were hawk'd in ev'ry street;

But seldom rose above a sheet.

Swift.

HAWK-EYED.* adj. [hawk and eye.] Having a keen eye, like that of the hawk.

HAWK-NOSED.* adj. [hawk and nose.] Having an aquiline nose. This word is sometimes corrupted into hook-nosed.

He was tall of stature, and slender, being hawk-nosed.

Life of Bernard Gilpin, (1629.) p. 59.

If flat-nosed, she is gentle and courteous: if hawk-nosed, she seems then to be of a kingly race.

Ferrand, Love Mel. p. 35.

HA'WKED. adj. [from hawk.] Formed like a hawk's bill.

Flat noses seem comely unto the Moor, an aquiline or hawked one unto the Persian, a large and prominent nose unto the Roman.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HA'WKER.* n. s.

1. A falconer. [Sax. hawecepe.]

Huloet.

Hawkers and hunters, dronkards, fornicatours, adulterers, having no other god but their belly.

Harmer, Tr. of Beza's Scrm. p. 334.

2. One who sells his wares by proclaiming them in the street. [Germ. hocker.]

I saw my labours, which had cost me so much thought bawled about by common hawkers, which I once intended for the consideration of the greatest person.

Swift.

To grace this honour'd day the queen proclaims,

By herald hawkers, high heroick games:

She summons all her sons; an endless band

Pours forth, and leaves unpeopled half the land.

Pope.

HA'W'KING.* n. s. [from To hawk.] The diversion of flying hawks at fowls.

One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting.

Locke

H A Y

HA'WTHORN. n. s. [hæɪ-ðɔrn, Saxon.] A species of medlar; the thorn that bears haws; the white thorn.

The use to which it is applied in England is to make hedges: there are two or three varieties of it about London; but, that sort which produces the smallest leaves is preferable, because its branches always grow close together. Miller.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon haythorns, and elegies on brambles. Shakespeare, As you like it.
Some in their hands, beside the lance and shield,
The bough of woodbine, or of hawthorn held. Dryden.
Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring. Pope.
The hawthorn whitens. Thomson.

HA'WTHORN FLY. n. s. An insect.

The hawthorn fly is all black, and not big. Walton.

HAY. n. s. [Goth. hawi; Celt. hei, food of animals; Sax. hieɪ, hiz, hez; Dutch and Icel. hey. Our own word at first was hey. "He comaundide to them that they schulden make alle men sitte to mete by companies on grene hey." Wicliffe, St. Matt. vi. Grass dried to fodder cattle in winter.

Make hay while the sun shines. Camden, Rem.

Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set fire on barns and hay stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.

Tu. Andronicus.

We have heats of dungs, and of hays and herbs laid up moist. Bacon.

Or if the earlier season lead
To the taun'd hay cock in the mead. Milton, L'All.

Bring them for food sweet boughs and osiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay rick shut. May, Virgil.

Some turners turn long and slender sprigs of ivory, as small as a hay stalk. Mozon.

By some hay cock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even song and morn. Dryden.

The best manure for meadows is the bottom of hay mows and hay stacks. Mortimer.

Hay and outs, in the management of a groom, will make ale. Swift.

To dance the HAY. To dance in a ring: probably from dancing round a hay cock, Dr. Johnson says. It is, no doubt, from dancing in a kind of circle; and is probably from the Fr. huit, eight; for the dance is borrowed by us from the French. It was formerly written hey, as if an abbreviation of heydeguyes, a country-dance or round. See HEY-DEGUYES.

He taught them rounds and winding hays to tread,
And about trees to cast themselves in rings. Sir J. Davies, Orchest. (1599.)

I will play on the tabor to the worthies,
And let them dance the hay. Shakespeare.

This maids think on the hearth they see,
When fires well nigh consumed be
There dancing hays by two and three,
Just as your fancy casts them. Drayton.

The gum and glist'ning, which with art
And study'd method, in each part
Hangs down,

Looks just as if that day
Snails there had crawl'd the hay. Suckling.

HAY. n. s. [Sax. hæg; old Fr. haye. See HAW.]

H A Z

1. A hedge. In Norfolk, a clipt hedge.

For there is neither bush nor hay
In May that it n'ill shrouded bene. Chaucer, Rom. Rose.
Hay-ho, or hedge-bote, is wood for repairing hays, hedges, or fences. Blackstone.

2. A net which encloses the haunt of an animal.

Setting the toils and pitching the hays. Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon, p. 293.

Coneys are destroyed by hays, curs, spaniels, or tumblers bred up for that purpose. Mortimer.

HA'YTHORN.* n. s. Hawthorn.

To be delivered from witches, they hang in their entries (among other things) haythorn, otherwise white-thorn, gathered on May-day. Scott, Discov. of Witchcraft, p. 152.

HA'YWARD.* n. s. [from hay.] A keeper of the common herd of cattle of a town or village; who is bound to take care, that they neither crop nor break the hedges of enclosed grounds.

Sherwood, and Chambers.

HA'ZARD. n. s. [hasard, French; azar, Spanish; haski, Rumick, danger.]

1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.

I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shakespeare.

I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well.

Shakespeare.

Where the mind does not perceive connection, there men's opinions are not the product of judgement, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures without choice and without direction. Locke.

2. Danger; chance of danger.

We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein so many things are brought in, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved. Hooker.

The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate. Dryden.

Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger. Rogers.

3. A game at dice. [perhaps from the Fr. as, an ace.] Alan Chartier employs azar, in conformity to this etymon. V. Morin. in HASARD.

Hazard is vcray moder of lesinges,
And of deceit. Chaucer, Pard. Tale.

The duke playing at hazard, held in a great many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold. Swift.

To HA'ZARD. v. a. [hasarder, Fr.] To expose to chance; to put into danger.

They might, by persisting in the extremity of that opinion, hazard greatly their own estates, and so weaken that part which their places now give. Hooker.

H A Z

It was not in his power to adventure upon his own fortune, or bearing a publick charge, to hazard himself against a man of private condition.

By dealing indifferently mercies to all, you may hazard your own share.

Hayward.

Sherlock.

To HA'ZARD. v. n.

1. To try the chance.

I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in choosing wrong,
I lose your company.

Shakespeare.

2. To adventure; to run the danger.

She from her fellow-provinces would go,
Rather than hazard to have you her foe.

Waller.

HA'ZARDABLE. adj. [from hazard.] Venturous; liable to chance.

An hazardable determination it is, unto fluctuating and indiffer-ent effects, to affix a positive type or period.

Brown.

HA'ZARDER.† n. s. [from hazard, Fr. hasarteur.]

1. He who hazards.

2. A gamester. I find the word in our old writers, only in this sense. The preceding definition is Dr. Johnson's. In Huloet's old dictionary also, it has no other meaning than that of a gamester.

It is reprove, and contrary of honour,
For to beholden a common hazardour.

Chaucer, Pardon. Tale.

The outrageous disers and hazarders.

Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546.) sign. B. vi.

HA'ZARDRY.† n. s. [from hazard.]

1. Temerity; precipitation; rash adventurousness. Obsolete.

Hasty wrath, and heedless hazardry,
Do breed repentance late, and lasting infamy.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Gaming in general; playing at the game of hazard.

Now that I have spoke of glotonie,

Now wol I you defenden hazardrie :

Hazard is veray moder of lesinges,

And of deceit.

Chaucer, Pardon Tale.

Some fell to daunce; some fell to hazardry;

Some to make love.

Spenser, P. Q.

HA'ZARDOUS. adj. [hazardous, Fr. from hazard.]

Dangerous; exposed to chance.

Grant that our hazardous attempt prove vain,

We feel the worst, secur'd from greater pain.

Dryden.

HA'ZARDOUSLY.† adv. [from hazardous.] With danger or chance.

Sherwood.

HAZE.† n. s. [The etymology unknown. Dr.

Johnson. — One of the conjectures, made by Serenius, affords a probable etymon, viz. haes, Icel.

a very small particle, of which a great number forms a cloud or mist.] Fog; mist.

In the fog and haze of confusion all is enlarged, and appears without any limit.

Burke.

To HAZE.† v. n. To be foggy or misty.

It hazes; it mingles, or rains small rain.

Ray, North Country Words.

To HAZE. v. a. To fright one.

Ainsworth.

HAZEL. n. s. [hæzel, Saxon; corylus, Lat.] Nut tree.

The nuts grow in clusters, and are closely joined together at the bottom, each being covered with an outward husk or cup, which opens at the top, and when the fruit is ripe it falls out. The species are hazelnut, cobnut, and filbert. The red and white filberts are mostly esteemed for their fruit.

Müller.

Kate, like the hazel twig,
Is straight and slender; and as brown in hue

As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernel.

Shakespeare.

Her chariot is an empty hazel nut.

Shakespeare.

Why sit we not beneath the grateful shade,

Which hazels, intermix'd with elms, have made?

Dryden.

H E A

There are some from the size of a hazel nut to that of a man's fist.

Woodward.

HA'ZEL. adj. [from the noun.] Light brown; of the colour of hazel.

Chuse a warm dry soil, that has a good depth of light hazel mould.

Mortimer.

HA'ZELLY. adj. Of the colour of hazel; a light brown.

Uplands consist either of sand, gravel, chalk, rock or stone, hazelly loam, clay, or black mould.

Mortimer.

HA'ZY. adj. [from haze.] Dark; foggy; misty.

Our clearest day here is misty and hazy; we see not far, and what we do see is in a bad light.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Of engender'd by the hazy North,

Myriads on myriads, insects armies waft.

Thomson.

HE.† pronoun. gen. him; plur. they; gen. them. [hy, Dutch; hie, German; he, Saxon. It seems to have borrowed the plural from ðij, of which the plural is ðar, dative ðirum.]

1. The man that was named before.

All the conspirators, save only he,

Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar.

Shakespeare.

If much you note him,

You shall offend him, and increase his passion;

Feed and regard him not.

Shakespeare.

I am weary of this moon; would he would change.

Shakespeare.

Adam spoke;

So cheer'd he his fair spouse, and she was cheer'd.

Milton, P. I.

When Adam wak'd, he on his side

Leaning half rais'd hung over her.

Milton, P. L.

Thus talking, hand in hand along they pass'd

On to their blissful bow'rs.

Milton, P. L.

Extol

Him first, him last, him midst.

Milton, P. L.

2. The man; the person. It sometimes stands without reference to any foregoing word.

He is never poor

That little hath, but he that much desires.

Daniel.

3. Man or male being.

Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law

Is death to any he that utters them.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

I stand to answer thee, or any he the proudest of thy sort.

Shakespeare.

Tros and his race the sculptor shall employ,

And he the god who built the walls of Troy.

Dryden.

4. Male: as, a he bear, a he goat. It is used where the male and female have not different denominations.

The he's in birds have the fairest feathers.

Bacon.

5. In the two last senses he is rather a noun than pronoun.

6. According to the Saxon usage, he, in our old language, is prefixed to proper names emphatically; as, he Moyses, him Holofernes. Chaucer.

7. Formerly also he was frequently used for it, in all cases.

HEAD.† n. s. [heafod, heaf, Saxon; hoofd,

Dutch; heved, old English, whence by contraction head. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius considers it as de-ri-ved from the Icel. hæd, height. But Mr. Tooke's etymon is heafod, the past participle of heapan, to heave; meaning that part (of the body, or any thing else,) which is heaved, raised, or lifted up, above the rest. Div. Purl. ii. 39.]

1. The part of the animal that contains the brain or the organ of sensation or thought.

H E A

- Vain healing verben, and head purging dill. Spenser, F. Q.
 Over head up-grew
 Insuperable height of loftiest shade. Milton, P. L.
 The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
 For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy head. Dryden.

 higher, would be glad to accept. Swift.
2. Person as exposed to any danger or penalty.
 What he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakespeare.
 Who of all ages to succeed, but feeling
 The evil on him brought by me, will curse
 My head? ill fare our ancestor impure. Milton, P. L.
3. HEAD and Ears. The whole person. In colloquial language, over head and ears in debt is applied to a person greatly in debt.
 You're over head and ears, ere you be aware.
Beaumont and Fl. Wit. at Ser. Weapons.
 In jingling rhymes well fortify'd and strong,
 He fights intrench'd o'er head and ears in song. Granville.
4. Denomination of any animals. Here, perhaps, from the Sax. ebe, græx, a herd; hence to make head, to raise a body of forces.]
 When Innocent desired the Marquis of Carpio to furnish thirty thousand head of swine, he could not spare them; but thirty thousand lawyers he had at his service. Addison.
 The tax upon pasturage was raised, according to a certain rate per head upon cattle. Arbuthnot.
5. Chief; principal person; one to whom the rest are subordinate; leader; commander.
 For their commons, there is little danger from them, except it be where they have great and potent heads. Bacon.
 Your head I him appoint;
 And by myself have sworn, to him shall bow
 All knees in heaven, and shall confess him lord. Milton.
 The heads of the chief sects of philosophy, as Thales, Anaxa-goras, and Pythagoras, did consent to this tradition. Tillotson.
6. Place of honour; the first place.
 Notwithstanding all the justices had taken their places upon the bench, they made room for the old knight at the head of them. Addison.

 With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
 And never shew thy head by day or light. Shakespeare.
 Ere to-morrow's sun shall shew his head. Dryden.
9. Understanding; faculties of the mind: commonly
 in a ludicrous sense.
 The wenches laid their heads together. L'Estrange.
 A fox and a goat went down a well to drink: the goat fell to hunting which way to get back; Oh, says Reynard, never trouble your head, but leave that to me. L'Estrange.
 Work with all the ease and speed you can, without breaking your head, and being so very industrious in starting scruples. Dryden.
 The lazy and inconsiderate took up their notions by chance, without much beating their heads about them. Locke.
 If a man shews that he has no religion, why should we think that he beats his head and troubles himself to examine the grounds of this or that doctrine? Locke.
 When in ordinary discourse we say a man has a fine head, we express ourselves metaphorically, and speak in relation to his understanding; and when we say of a woman she has a fine head, we speak only in relation to her comode. Addison.
 We laid our heads together, to consider what grievances the nation had suffered under King George. Addison.
10. Face; front; fore part.
 The gathering crowd pursues;
 The ravishers turn head, the fight renews. Dryden.
11. Resistance; hostile opposition. [Sax. ebe. See the fourth sense.]

H E A

- Then made he head against his enemies;
 And Hymner slew. Spenser, F. Q.
 Sometimes hath Henry Bolingbroke made head against my power. Shakespeare.
 Two valiant gentlemen making head against them, seconded by half a dozen more, made forty run away. Raleigh.
 Sin having depraved his judgement, and got possession of his will, there is no other principle left him naturally, by which he can make head against it. South.
12. Spontaneous resolution.
 The bordering wars in this kingdom were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head, without any pay or commission from the state. Davies.
13. State of a deer's horns, by which his age is known.
 It was a buck of the first head. Shakespeare.
 The buck is called the fifth year a buck of the first head.
Shakespeare.

 acres for every head. Gravitt.
15. The top of any thing bigger than the rest.
 His spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron.
1 Sam.
 As high
 As his proud head is rais'd towards the sky,
 So low towards hell his roots descend. Denham.
 Trees, which have large and spreading heads, would lie with their branches up in the water. Woodward.
 If the buds are made our food, they are called heads or tops; so heads of asparagus and artichokes. Watts.
 Head is an equivocal term; for it signifies the head of a nail, or of a pin, as well as of an animal. Watts.
16. The fore part of any thing, as of a ship.
 By galleys with brazen heads she might transport over Indus at once three hundred thousand soldiers. Raleigh.
 His galleys moor;
 Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.
17. That which rises on the top.
 Let it stand in a tub four or five days before it be put into the cask, stirring it twice a-day, and beating down the head or yeast into it. Mortimer.
18. The blade of an axe.
 A man fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree;
 and the head slippeth from the helve. Deut. xix. 5.
19. Upper part of a bed.
 Israel bowed upon the bed's head. Gen. xlvii. 31.
20. The brain.
 As eastern priests in giddy circles run,
 And turn their heads to imitate the sun. Pope.
21. Dress of the head.
 Ladies think they gain a point when they have teased their husbands to buy them a laced head, or a fine coiffure. Swift.
22. Principal topick of discourse.
 These heads are of a mixed order, and we propose only such as belong to the natural world. Burlet, Theory of the Earth.
 'Tis our great interest, and duty, to satisfy ourselves on this head, upon which our whole conduct depends. Atterbury.
23. Source of a stream.
 It is the glory of God to give; his very nature delighteth in it: his mercies in the current, through which they would pass, may be dried up, but at the head they never fail. Hooker.
 The current by Gaza is but a small stream, rising between it and the Red sea, whose head from Gaza is little more than twenty English miles. Raleigh, Hist.
 Some did the song, and some the choir maintain,
 Beneath a laurel shade, where mighty Po
 Mounts up to woods above, and hides his head below. Dryden.
24. Crisis; pitch.
 The indisposition which has long hung upon me, is at last grown to such a head, that it must quickly make an end of me, or of itself. Addison.
25. Power; influence; force; strength; dominion.
 [See the eleventh sense.]

HEAD

Within her breast though calm, her breast though pure,
Motherly cares and fears got head, and rais'd
Some troubled thoughts. Milton, P. R.

26. Body; confluent. [Sax. ebe.]

People under command chuse to consult, and after to march in order; and rebels, contrariwise, run upon an head together in confusion. Bacon.

A mighty and a fearful head they are,
As ever offer'd foul play in a state. Shakspeare.

Far in the marches here we heard you were,
Making another head to fight again. Shakspeare.

Let all this wicked crew gather
Their forces to one head. B. Jonson.

27. Power; armed force. [Sax. ebe.]

My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head. Shakspeare.

At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he sought
Beyond the mark of others. Shakspeare.

28. Liberty in running a horse.

He gave his able horse the head,
And bounding forward struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel-head. Shakspeare.

29. Licence; freedom from restraint; a metaphor from horsemanship

God will not admit of the passionate man's apology, that he has so long given his unruly passions their head, that he cannot now govern nor controul them. South.

30. It is very improperly applied to roots.

How turneps hide their swelling heads below,
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow. Gay.

31. HEAD and Shoulders. By force; violently.

People that hit upon a thought that tickles them, will be still bringing it in by head and shoulders, over and over, in several companies. L'Estrange.

They bring in every figure of speech, head and shoulders by main force, in spite of nature and their subject. Felton.

HEAD. adj. Chief; principal: as, the head work- man; the head inn.

The horse made their escape to Winchester, the head quarters. Clarendon.

To HEAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lead; to influence; to direct: to govern.

Abas, who seem'd our friend, is either fled,
Or, what we fear, our enemies does head. Dryden.
Nor is what has been said of princes less true of all other governours, from him that heads an army to him that is master of a family, or of one single servant. South.
This lord had headed his appointed bands,
In firm allegiance to his king's commands. Prior.

2. To behead; to kill by taking away the head.

If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten years together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. Shakspeare.

Father or mother, sister or brother, he never knew none;
A headborough and a constable, a man of fame,
The first of his house, and last of his name. Camden.

This none are able to break thorough,
Until they're freed by head of borough. Mudibras.

HE'ADDRESS. n. s. [head and dress.]

1. The covering of a woman's head.

There is not so variable a thing, in nature as a lady's headdress: I have known it rise and fall above thirty degrees. Addison, Spect. No. 98.

If ere with airy horns I planted heads,
Or discompos'd the headdress of a pride. Pope.

2. Any thing resembling a headdress, and prominent on the head

Among birds the males very often appear in a most beautiful headdress, whether it be a crest, a comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, crested like a kind of pinnacle on the very top of the head. Addison.

HE'ADED. * adj. [from head.]

1. Having a head or top.

Emboss'd sores, and headed evils. Shakspeare, As you like it.

2. Much used in composition; as, clear-headed, having a clear head, long-headed, and the like.

The mother cow must wear a louring look,
Sour-headed, strongly neck'd to bear the yoke. Dryden, Georg.

HE'ADER. † n. s. [from head.]

1. One that heads nails or pins, or the like.

2. One who heads a mob or party.

3. The first brick in the angle.

If the header of one side of the wall is toothed as much as the stretcher on the outside, it would be a stronger toothing, and the joints of the headers of one side would be in the middle of the stretchers of the course they lie upon of the other side. Moxon.

HE'ADGARGLE. n. s. [head and gargle.] A disease,

I suppose, in cattle.

For the headgargle give powder of fenugreek. Mortimer.

HE'ADGEAR. * n. s. [head and gear.] The dress of a woman's head.

curled hairs, &c. wherewith our countrywomen counterfeit a beauty. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 475.

HE'ADINESS. n. s. [from heady.] Hurry; rashness; stubbornness; precipitation; obstinacy.

If any will rashly blame such his choice of old and un-wonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardness in condemning. E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal.

HE'ADLAND. n. s. [head and land.]

1. Promontory; cape.

An heroic play ought to be an imitation of an heroic poem, and consequently love and valour ought to be the subject of it: both these Sir William Davenant began to shadow;
but it was so as discoverers draw their maps, with headlands and promontories. Dryden.

2. Ground under hedges.

Now down with the grass upon headlands about,
That groweth in shadow so rank and so stout. Tusser.

HE'ADLESS. † adj. [Sax. henþoleap.]

1. Without an head; beheaded.

His shining helmet be 'gan soon unlace,
And left his headless body bleeding at the place. Spenser, F. Q.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks. Shakspeare.

Of mermaids that the southern seas do haunt,
Of headless men, of savage cannibals. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 6.
On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denham.
Prickly stubs, instead of trees, are found;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

2. Without a chief.

They rested not until they had made the empire stand headless about seventeen years. Raleigh.

3. Without foundation.

[He] calleth it a rumour, which is an headless tale.

Bacon, Charge in the Star-Chamber.

It may more justly be numbered among those headless old-wives' tales, which Plutarch so justly derideth.

Fotherby, Atheom. p. 62.

4. Obstinate; inconsiderate; ignorant; wanting intellects: perhaps for heedless.

less headiness in judging, or of headless hardness in condemning. E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal.

HEADLONG. adj.

1. Steep; precipitous.

Rise, rise, and heave thy rosy head
From thy coral-paven bed;
And bridle in thy headlong wave,
Till thou our summons answer'd have. Milton, Comus.

2. Rash; thoughtless.

3. Sudden; precipitate.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which, many examples having taught them, never stopt his race till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney.

HEADLONG. adv. [head and long.]1. With the head foremost. It is often doubtful whether this word be adjective or adverb.

I'll look no more,

Iest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong. Shakespeare.

Who, while he steering view'd the stars, and bore
His course from Africk to the Latian shore, Fell headlong down. Dryden.

Headlong from thence the glowing fury springs,
And o'er the Theban palace spreads her wings. Pope.

2. Rashly; without thought; precipitately.

To give Ahab such warning, as might infallibly have prevented his destruction, was esteemed by him evil; and to push him on headlong into it, because he was fond of it, was accounted good. South.

Some ask for envy'd pow'r, which publick hate
Pursues and hurries headlong to their fate;
Down go the titles. Dryden.

3. Hastily; without delay or respite.

Unhappy offspring of my teeming womb!
Dragg'd headlong from thy cradle to thy tomb. Dryden.

4. It is very negligently used by Shakspeare.

Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels,
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave. Shakspeare.

or knowledge why she was cruel. Sidney.

The word is given with eager speed they lace

The shining headpiece, and the shield embrace. Dryden.

A reason for this fiction of the one-eyed Cyclops, was their wearing a head-piece, or martial vizor, that had but one sight.

Broome.

This champion will not come into the field, before his great blunderbuss can be got ready, his old rusty breastplate scoured, and his cracked headpiece mended. Swift.

2. Understaying; force of mind.

'Tis done by some severals

Of headpiece extraordinary, lower messes

Perchance are to this business purblind.

Shakspeare.

Eumenes had the best headpiece of all Alexander's captains.
Prideaux.

HEADQUARTERS. n. s. [head and quarters.] The place of general rendezvous, or lodgement for soldiers. This is properly two words.

Those spirits, posted upon the out-guards, immediately scour off to the main, which is the headquarters, or office of intelligence, and there they make their report. Collier.

HEADSHAKE. n. s. [head and shake.] A significant shake of the head.

You, at such times seeing me, never shall
With arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake,
Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,

note

That you know aught of me. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

HEADSHIP. n. s. [from head.] Dignity; authority;
chief place.

Not the plotting for an headship, (for that is now become a court-business,) but the contriving of a bursarship of twenty nobles a year, is many times done with as great a portion of suing, siding, &c. Hales, Rem. p. 276.

That the followers should be bound to each other as well as to the chief; that this headship was not at first hereditary.

Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

HEADSTALL. n. s. [head and stall.] Part of the bridle that covers the head.

His horse, with a half-cheek'd bit, and a headstall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from ambling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots.

Shakspeare.

HEADSTONE. n. s. [head and stone.]

1. The first or capital stone.

The stone, which the builders refused, is become the headstone. Psalm cxviii. 24.

2. A grave-stone; so called in many places.

HEADSTRONG. adj. [head and strong.] Unrestrained;
violent; ungovernable; resolute to run his own way:
as a horse whose head cannot be held in.

An example, for headstrong and inconsiderate zeal, no less fearful than Achitophel for proud and irreigious wisdom.

Hooker.

How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?

— Where I have learnt me to repent the sin

Of disobedient opposition. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

But such a headstrong potent fault it is,

That it but mocks reproof. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

He ill aspires to rule

Cities of men or headstrong multitudes,
Subject himself to anarchy within. Milton.

H E A

There's no opposing the torrent of a headstrong multitude.
L'Estrange.

Now let the headstrong boy my will controul;
Virtue's no slave of man; no sex confines the soul;
I, for myself, the imperial seat will gain;
And he shall wait my leisure for his reign. Dryden.
Your father's folly took a headstrong course;
But I'll rule your's, and teach you love by force. Dryden.
Can we forget how the mad headstrong foot
Defy'd their prince to arms, nor made account
Of faith or duty, or allegiance sworn? Phillips.
I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason
This headstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato. Addison.
You will be both judge and party. I am sorry thou discoverest so much of thy headstrong humour. Arbutnot.

HEADSTRONGNESS.* n. s. [from headstrong.] Obstinacy; like that of a horse, whose head cannot be held in, or which will not be guided.

Rosinante's headstrongness is here remarkable, and shews that a beast knows when he is weary, or hungry, better than his rider. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 6.

HEADTIRE.* n. s. [head and tire.] Attire for the head.

An headtire of fine linen, and a chain about his neck. 1 Esdr. iii. 6.

HEADY.† adj. [from head.]

1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent; ungovernable; hurried on with passion.

Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil, and villany. Shakspeare.

I am advis'd what I say:
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor heady rash, provok'd with raging ire;
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad. Shakspeare.

I'll forbear,
And am fall'n out with my more heady will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man. Shakspeare.

Wives, the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy. R. Jonson.

Those only are regarded who are true to their party; and all the talent required is to be hot, to be heady, to be violent on one side or other. Temple.

Men, naturally warm and heady, are transported with the greatest flush of good-nature. Addison.

2. Apt to affect the head.

I was entertained with a sort of wine which was very heady, but otherwise seem'd to be sack. Boyle.

Since hearty beef and mutton will not do,
Here's julep-dance, pisan of song and show;
Give you strong sense, the liquor is too heady;
You're come to farce, that's asses milk, already. Dryden.

Flow, Welsted! flow, like thine inspirer beer;
Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not full. Pope.

3. Violent; impetuous.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current scouring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat. Shakspeare.

Thou clav'st the rock, from whose green wound
The thirst-exPELLING fountain brake:
Thou mad'st the heady streains forsake
Their channels, and become dry ground. Sandys, Ps. 74.

Lies slumbering sullen in the white abyss. Thomson.

Nor can Freewill find a place for the sole of her foot among the heapy ruins, wherewith he bestrews the ground. Beauch, Freewill, Foreknowledge, and Fate, p. 188.

TO HEAR. v. n. [Sax. hepan, heopan, hýpan; Icel. heyrn; Dutch, hooren. See EAR.]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflexions of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds.

H E A

Quincy.

The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence.

Holder.

Princes cannot see far with their own eyes, nor hear with their own ears.

Temple.

HEARDGROOM. } HERD and HERDGROOM.

HE'ARMR. n. s. [from hear.]

1. One who hears.

And so was she lulled withal, that we could come so near as to hear her speeches, and yet she not perceive the hearers of her lamentation.

Sidney.

St. John and St. Matthew, which have recorded these serious, heard them; and being hearers, did think themselves as well respected as the pharisees.

Hooker.

Words, be they never so few, are too many, when they benefit not the hearer.

Hooker.

The hearers will shed tears,

And say, Alas! it was a piteous deed!

Shakespeare.

Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,

And send the hearers weeping to their beds.

Shakespeare.

2. One who attends to doctrine or discourse orally delivered by another; as, the hearers of the gospel.

3. One of a collected audience.

Plays in themselves have neither hopes nor fears;

Their fate is only in their hearers' ears.

B. Jonson.

Her hearers had no share

In all she spoke, except to stare.

Swift.

HE'ARING. † n. s. [from hear.]

1. The sense by which sounds are perceived.

Bees are called with sound upon brass, and therefore they have hearing.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Aged ears play truant at his tales,

And younger hearings are quite ravished;

So sweet and voluble is his discourse.

Shakespeare, Love's L. Lost.

2. Audience.

The French ambassador upon that instant

Crav'd audience; and the hour, I think, is come

To give him hearing.

Shakespeare.

3. Judicial trial.

Acts, xxv. 23.

The readers are the jury to decide according to the merits of the cause, or to bring it to another hearing before some other court.

Dryden.

Those of different principles may be betrayed to give you a fair hearing, and to know what you have to say for yourself.

Addison.

4. Note by the ear; reach of the ear.

If we profess, as Peter did, that we love the Lord, and profess it in the hearing of men; charity is prone to hear all things, and therefore charitable men are likely to think we do so.

Hooker.

In our hearing the king charged thee, beware that none touch Absalom.

2 Sam. xviii. 12.

You have been talked of since your travels much,

And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality

Wherein they say you shine.

Shakespeare.

The fox had the good luck to be within hearing.

L'Esrange.

To HE'ARKEN. † v. n. [heopman, Sax. harken, Fris.]

H E A

1. To listen; to listen eagerly or curiously.
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors. Shakespeare.
He hearkens after prophecies and dreams. Shakespeare.
They do me too much injury,
That ever said I hearken'd for your death:
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you. Shakespeare.
'The gapping three-mouth'd dog forgets to snarl;
The furies hearken, and their snakes uncurl. Dryden.
He who makes much necessary, will want much; and, wearied with the difficulty of the attainment, will hearken after any expedient that offers to shorten his way to it. Rogers.

2. To attend; to pay regard.
Hearken unto me, thou son of Zippor. Numbers, xxiii. 18.
Those who put passion in the place of reason, neither use their own, nor hearken to other people's reason, any farther than it suits their humour. Locke.
There's not a blessing individuals find,
But some way leads and hearkens to the kind. Pope.

TO HE'ARKEN.* v. a.

1. To hear by listening.
She past into his dreadful den,
Where nought but darksome dreariness she found,
No creature saw, but hearkened now and then
Some little whispering, and soft-groning sound. Spenser, F. Q.
But here she comes; I fairly step aside,
And hearken, if I may, her business here. Milton, Comus.
2. To hear with attention; to regard.
When Thelamon harkened had his tale. Lydgate.

With this sad hearsal of his heavy stress
The warlike damsell was empassioned sore. Spenser, F. Q.

HE'ARSAY. n. s. [hear and say.] Report; rumour; what is not known otherwise than by account from others.

For prey these shepherds two he took,
Whose metal stiff he knew he could not bend
With hearsay pictures, or a window look. Sidney.

He affirms by hearsay, that some giants saved themselves upon the mountain Baris in Armenia. Raleigh, Hist.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him, publish every blot in his life, and depend upon hearsay to defame him. Addison.

HEARSE.* n. s. [of unknown etymology, Dr. Johnson says; yet, under the other form of writing the word, viz. herse, he cites the low Lat. hersia, "supposed" to come from the Sax. hepian, to praise."—Mr. H. Tooke pronounces it the past participle of the Sax. hýpjan, to adorn, to decorate. Div. Purl. ii. 323.—Serenius derives it from the Goth. hersa, a sepulchral mount or hill.—The low Lat. hersia, or hercia, is said to have been a kind of candlestick, in the form of a harrow, (old Fr. herce,) having branches filled with lights, and being placed at the head of graves or cenotaphs; and hence hearse came to be used for the grave, and for the coffin, or chest containing the dead.]

1. A temporary monument set over a grave; according to Huloet, as well as Dr. Johnson. The solemn obsequy at funerals; according to E. K. the contemporary commentator on Spenser.

H E A

A cenotaph is an empty funeral monument or tombe, erected for the honour of the dead; in imitation of which our hearses here in England are set up in churches, during the continuance of a year, or the space of certain months. Weever.

So many torches, so many tapers, so many black gowns, so many merry mourners laughing under black hoods, and a gay hears. Sir T. More, De Quad. Nov.

The gaudy girlonds deck her grave,
The faded flowers her corse embrace.
O heavie hearse! Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov.

2. The place, or the case, in which a dead corse is deposited.

Beside the hearse a fruitful palmtree grows,
Ennobled since by this great funeral,
Where Duden's corse they softly laid in ground. Fairfax, Tuss.

To add to your laments,
Wherewith ye now bedew king Henry's hearse,
I must inform you of a dismal sight. Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.
These poor and fruitless drops,
Which willingly would fall upon his hearse,
To embalm him twice. Beaumont and Fl. Coronation.

3. A carriage, in which the dead are conveyed to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' hearse,
Who does not weep that reads the moving verse. Rowe, common.

TO HEARSE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose in a hearse, or coffin.

Tell,
Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,
Have burst their cerements? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I would my daughter were dead at my feet, and the jewels in her ear. O! would she were hearsed at my feet, and the ducats in her coffin. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

HE'ARSE-CLOTH.* n. s. [hearse and cloth.] A covering thrown over the hearse, or coffin; a pall.

Without any blacks to be hung any where in or about the church, other than a pulpit-cloth, a hearse-cloth, and a mourning gown for the preacher. Bp. Sanderson's Will, in Walton's Lives.

HE'ARSE-LIKE.* adj. [hearse and like.] Mournful; suitable to a funeral.

If you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many hearse- like airs as carols. Bacon, Ess. of Adversity.

HEART.* n. s. [Sax. heort; Germ. hertz; Goth. hiarto; Icel. hiarta; "ab ant. hýra, hurra, horfa, movere, agitare." Serenius.—"The heart, in the Teutonic languages,—should probably be referred to the Gr. καρδια, in which the rough breathing of the h is hardened into a consonant. Junius has been aware of this connexion." Whiter.]

1. The muscle which by its contraction and dilation propels the blood through the course of circulation, and is therefore considered as the source of vital motion.

The heart gives heat, and motion, and life, unto that which is to be our nourishment. Smith on Old Age, p. 230.

2. It is supposed in popular language to be the seat sometimes of courage, sometimes of affection, sometimes of honesty, or baseness.

He with providence and courage so passed over all, that the mother took such spiteful grief at it, that her heart brake withal, and she died. Sidney.

Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood there,
Rather than made that savage duke thine heir,
And disinherited thine only son. Shakespeare

Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my heart. Shakespeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakespeare.

I thank you for my venison, master Shallow.

—Master Page, much good do it your good heart. Shakespeare.

But since the brain doth lodge the powers of sense,

How makes it in the heart those passions spring?

The mutual love, the kind intelligence,

'Twixt heart and brain, this sympathy doth bring. Davies.

We all set our hearts at rest, since whatever comes from above is for the best. L'Estrange.

The only true zeal is that which is guided by a good light in the head, and that which consists of good and innocent affections in the heart. Sprat.

Prest with heart corroding grief and years,

To the gay court a rural shed prefers. Pope.

3. The chief part; the vital part; the vigorous or efficacious part.

Barley being steeped in water, and turned upon a dry floor, will sprout half an inch; and, if it be let alone, much more until the heart be out. Bacon.

4. The inner part of any thing.

Some Englishmen did with great danger pass by water into the heart of the country. Abbot, Descript. of the World.

The king's forces are employed in appeasing disorders near the heart of the kingdom. Hayward.

Generally the inside or heart of trees is harder than the outward parts. Boyle.

Here in the heart of all the town I'll stay,

And timely succour, where it wants, convey. Dryden.

If the foundation be bad, provide good piles made of heart of oak, such as will reach ground. Morgan.

5. Person; character. Used with respect to courage or kindness.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,

A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakespeare.

Hey, my hearts; cheerly, my hearts. Shakespeare.

What says my heart of elder? Ha! is he dead? Shakespeare.

6. Courage; spirit.

If it please you to make his fortune known, I will after take heart again to go on with his falsehood. Sidney.

There did other like unhappy accidents happen out of England, which gave heart and good opportunity to them to regain their old possessions. Spenser on Ireland.

Wide was the wound; and a large lukewarm flood,

Red as the rose, thence gushed grievously.

That when the paynim spy'd the streaming blood,

Gave him great heart and hope of victory. Spenser, F. Q.

Eve, recovering heart, reply'd. Milton, P. L.

Having left that city well provided, and in good heart, his majesty removed with his little army to Bewdley. Clarendon.

Finding that it did them no hurt, they took heart upon't, went up to't, and viewed it. L'Estrange.

The expelled nations take heart, and when they fly from one country invade another. Temple.

7. Seat of love.

Ah! what avails it me the flocks to keep,

Who lost my heart while I preserv'd my sheep? Pope.

8. Affection; inclination.

Joab perceived that the king's heart was towards Absalom.

2 Sam. xiv. 1.

Means how to feel, and learn each other's heart,

By the abbot's skill of Westminster is found. Daniel.

Nor set thy heart,

Thus over-tend, on that which is not thine. Milton, P. L.

'Tis well to be tender; but to set the heart too much upon any thing, is what we cannot justify. L'Estrange.

A friend makes me a feast, and sets all before me; but I set my heart upon one dish alone, and if that happen to be thrown down, I scorn all the rest. Temple.

Then mixing powerful herbs with magick art,

She chang'd his form who could not change his heart. Dryden.

What did I not, her stubborn heart to gain?

But all my vows were answer'd with disdain. Dryden.

9. Memory: though South seems to distinguish.

Whatsoever was attained to concerning God, and his working in nature, the same was delivered over by heart and tradition from wise men to a posterity equally zealous. Raleigh.

We call the committing of a thing to memory the getting it by heart; for it is the memory that must transmit it to the heart; and it is in vain to expect that the heart should keep its hold of any truth, when the memory has let it go. South.

Shall I in London act this idle part,

Composing songs for fools to get by heart? Pope.

10. Good-will; ardour of zeal. To take to heart any thing, is to be zealous, or solicitous, or ardent about it.

If he take not their causes to heart, how should there be but in them frozen coldness, when his affections seem benumbed, from whom theirs should take fire? Hooker.

If he would take the business to heart, and deal in it effectually, it would succeed well. Bacon.

The lady marchioness of Hertford engaged her husband to take this business to heart. Clarendon.

Amongst those who took it most to heart, Sir John Stawel was the chief. Clarendon.

Every prudent and honest man would join himself to that side, which had the good of their country most at heart. Addison.

Thou sawest the contradiction between my heart and hand. King, Charles.

Would you have him open his heart to you, and ask you advice, you must begin to do so with him first. Locke.

Men, some to pleasure, some to business take;

But every woman is, at heart, a rake. Pope.

13. Disposition of mind.

Doing all things with so pretty a grace, that it seemed ignorance could not make him do amiss, because he had a heart to do well. Sidney.

14. The heart is considered as the seat of tenderness: a hard heart therefore is cruelty.

I've seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld

Heart hardening spectacles. Shakespeare.

Such iron hearts we are, and such

The base barbarity of human kind. Rowe.

15. To find in the heart. To be not wholly averse.

For my breaking the laws of friendship with you, I could find in my heart to ask you pardon for it, but that your now handling of me gives me reason to confirm my former dealing. Sidney.

16. Secret meaning; hidden intention.

I will on with my speech in your praise,

And then shew you the heart of my message. Shakespeare.

17. Conscience; sense of good or ill.

Every man's heart and conscience doth in good or evil, even secretly committed, and known to none but itself, either like or disallow itself. Hooker.

18. Strength: power; vigour; efficacy.

While down her cheeks the gushing torrents ran,
Fast falling on her hands. Rew.

To HEART.* v. a. [Sax. hyrtan. See To HEARTEN.]

To encourage; to hearten.

For putting life into and hearting this free-will worship, which is only acceptable to God when it proceeds according to his own directory, three things in the Scripture and our church-book are especially to be taken notice of.

Bp. Prideaux, Euch. (1656,) p. 193.

To HEART-STRIKE.* v. a. [heart and strike.] To affect at heart. See HEART-STRUCK.

They seek to heart-strike us,
That are spectators, with their misery. B. Jonson, Tr. Horace.

HEARTED.† adj. It is only used in composition; as, hard hearted, Dr. Johnson says, which is a mistake; for Shakespeare twice uses it uncompounded.

1. Seated or fixed in the heart.

Yield up, O love, thy crown, and hearted throne,
To tyrannous hate. Shakespeare, Othello.

2. Laid up in the heart.

I have told thee often, and I re-tell thee again and again, I hate the Moor: My cause is hearted; thine hath no less reason. Shakespeare, Othello.

To HEARTEN.† v. a. [Sax. hyrtan, hyrtan; Teut. herten.]

1. To encourage; to animate; to stir up.

Palladius blaming those that were slow, heartening them that were forward, but especially with his own example leading them, made an impression into the squadron. Sidney.

H E A

My royal father, cheer these noble lords,
And hearten those that fight in your defence:
Unsheath your sword, good father; cry, St. George.

Shakspeare.

This rare man, Tydides, would prepare;
That he might conquer, hearten'd him. Chapman.
Thus hearten'd well, and flesh'd upon his prey,
The youth may prove a man another day. Dryden.

2. To meliorate or renovate with manure.

The ground one year at rest; forget not then
With richest dung to hearten it again. May, Virgil.

HE'ARTENER.* n. s. [from hearten.] That which animates or stirs up.

A coward's heartener in war,
The stirring drum, keeps lesser noise from far.
Brown, Brit. Past. B. i. S. 1.

HEARTH.† n. s. [Sax. heorð; Goth. hawja; Icel. ar or hjr, fxc.] The pavement of a room on which a fire is made; the ground under the chimney.

Hoop'd out of Rome; now this extremity
Hath brought me to this hearth. Shakspeare.

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap,
Where thou find'st fires unrak'd, and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry. Shakspeare.

Good luck befriend thee, so; for at thy birth
The fairy ladies danc'd upon the hearth. Milton, Val. Ex.

The vanquish'd fires withdraw from every place;
Or, full with feeding, sink into a sleep:
Each household genius shews again its face,
And from the hearths the little lares creep. Dryden.

HEARTH-MONEY.* } n. s. A sort of tax upon HEARTH-PENNY. } hearths; heorð-pennig, Sax. It was also called chimney-money. V. Cowel in HARTH-PENY.

Upon the revolution hearth-money was declared to be not only a great oppression to the poorer sort, but a badge of slavery upon the whole people. Blackstone.

HE'ARTILY. adv. [from heartly.]

1. From the heart; fully.
I bear no malice for my death;
But those that sought it, I could wish more Christians;
Be what they will, I heartily forgive them. Shakspeare.
If to be sad is to be wise,
I do most heartily despise

Whatever Socrates has said,
Or Tully writ, or Wauley read. Prior.

2. Sincerely; actively; diligently; vigorously.
Where his judgement led him to oppose men on a publick account, he would do it vigorously and heartily; yet the opposition ended there. Atterbury.

3. Eagerly; with desire.
As for my eating heartily of the food, know that anxiety has hindered my eating till this moment. Addison.

HE'ARTINESS. n. s. [from heartly.]

1. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.
This entertainment may a free face put on; derive a liberty from heartiness, and well become the agent. * Shakspeare.

2. Vigour; eagerness.
The anger of an enemy represents our faults, or admonishes us of our duty, with more heartiness than the kindness of a friend. Bp. Taylor.

HE'ARTLESS. adj. [from heart.] Without courage; spiritless.

I joyed oft to chase the trembling pricket,
Or hunt the heartless hare till she were tame. Spenser.

Then hopeless, heartless gan the cunning thief,
Persuade us die, to stint all further strife. Spenser, F. Q.

What, art thou drawn among these heartless hinds?
Turn thee, Benvolio; look upon thy death. Shakspeare.

Thousands besides stood mute and heartless there,
Men valiant all; nor was I us'd to fear. Cowley.

The peasants were accustomed to payments, and grew heartless as they grew poor. Temple.

VOL. II.

H E A

Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground,
While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryden.

HE'ARTLESSLY. adv. [from heartless.] Without cou- rage; faintly; timidly.

HE'ARTLESSNESS.† n. s. [from heartless.] Want of courage or spirit; dejection of mind.

Who have yielded themselves over to a disconsolate heartlessness, and a sad dejection of spirit.

Bp. Hall, Christ Myst. § 10.

HE'ARTY.† adj. [from heart.]

1. Sincere; undissembled; warm; zealous. [Teut.
herzlich.]

Omnient and perfume rejoice the heart: so doth the sweetness of a man's friend by heartly counsel, [in the margin, the counsel of the soul.] Prov. xxvii. 9.

They did not bring that heartly inclination to peace, which they hoped they would have done. Clarendon.

But the kind hosts their entertainment grace
With heartly welcome and an open face;
In all they did you might discern with ease

A willing mind, and a desire to please, Dryden.

Every man may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself heartly for the government. Swift.

2. In full health.

3. Vigorous; strong.
Whose laughs are heartly, though his jests are coarse,
And loves you best of all things but his horse. Pope.

4. Strong; hard; durable.
Oak, and the like true heartly timber, being strong in all positions, may be better trusted in cross and transverse work.
Wotton, Architecture.

HEARTY-HALE. adj. [heart and hale.] Good for the heart.

Vein-healing verven, and head-purging dill,
Sound savory, and basil heartly-hale. Spenser, F. Q.

HEAST.* See HEST.

HEAT.† n. s. [heaf, hæc, Saxon; heefe, Danish. Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of the Sax hætan, to make warm. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation:
whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burns by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.

3. Hot weather.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to go naked. Bacon.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Morson.

5. Fermentation: effervescence.

6. One violent action unintermitted.

H E A

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

7. The state of being once hot; a single effort.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,
And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden.

They the turn'd lines of golden anvils beat,
Which look as if they struck them at a heat. Tate.

8. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace;
But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

9. Pimples in the face; flush.

It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats in their faces, and broke out in their ribbons. Addison.

10. Agitation of sudden or violent passion; vehemence of action.

They seeing what forces were in the city with them, issued against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to discover them. Sidney.

The friend hath lost his friend;
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curst
By those that feel their sharpness. Shakspeare.

It might have pleased in the heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displaced in cool sedate reflection.

We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle, or the chase. Atterbury.

One playing at hazard, drew a huge heap of gold; but, in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

11. Faction; contest; party rage.

They are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shakspeare.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe
Than those distemper'd heats? Dryden.

12. Ardour of thought or elocution.

Plead it to her
With all the strength and heat of eloquence,
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison, Cato.

TO HEAT. v. a. [Sax. hætan.]

1. To make hot; to endure with the power of burning.

He commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heat. Dan. iii. 19.

2. To cause to ferment.

Hops lying undried heats them, and changes their colour. Mortimer, Husbundry.

3. To make the constitution feverish.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shakspeare.

Whatever increaseth the density of the blood, even without increasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To warm with vehemence of passion or desire.

A noble emotion heats your breast,
And your own rage now robs you of your rest. Dryden.

5. To agitate the blood and spirits with action.

When he was well heated the younger champion could not stand before him; and we find the elder contended not for the gift, but for the honour. Dryden.

HEAT. part. adj. Hot, says Mr. H. Tooke, as a participle, is sufficiently common; heat is rarely so used; and he accordingly cites a solitary instance from Ben Jonson. Heat, however, was formerly sufficiently common also as a participle, and stands in the present version of our Bible, though Dr. Johnson, in his first citation to illustrate the verb heat, has unwarrantably printed the word heated. Chaucer uses het as the pret. of the verb: "One me het, the other did me cold." Ass. of Fowls, ver. 145.] Heated.

H E A

Nebuchadnezzar — commanded, that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heat. Dan. iii. 19.

As a herdess in a summer's day,
Heat with the glorious sun's all-purging ray,
In the calm evening leaving her fair flock.

Browne, Brit. Past.

And fury ever boils more high and strong,
Heat with ambition, than revenge of wrong.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

HEATER. n. s. [from heat.] An iron made hot, and put into a box-iron, to smoooth and plait linen.

HEAVEN.† n. s. [heoron, which seems to be derived from heorp, the places over head, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Heaven signifies that which is raised high, or heaved up. Thus Serenius refers it to the verbs hafjan, and hafa, to heave or lift up. See TO HEAVE. And thus Mr. H. Tooke and Mr. Whiter refer it to the Sax. heapan. An ingenious writer deduces the Saxon from the Hebrew she-aphon, or leaving out the s or hiss, he-aphon, that is to say, the round orb of air which is above our heads: from which idea the Latins took their word cælum. See A Commentary on the 53d chapter of Isaiah, by S. Harris, D.D. 1739. p. 204.]

1. The regions above; the expanse of the sky. A station like the herald Mercury, New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill. Shakspeare.

Thy race in time to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome; Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heaven invade, Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden.

The words are taken more properly for the air, and ether than for the heavens. Raleigh, Hist.

This act, with shouts heaven high, the friendly band Applaud. Dryden.
Some fires may fall from heaven. Temple.

2. The habitation of God, good angels, and pure souls departed.

It is a knell

That summons thee to heaven or to hell. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

These, the late

Heaven-banish'd host, left desert utmost hell. Milton, P. L.

'All yet left of that revolted rout,

Heaven-fullen, in station stood, or just array,

Sublime with expectation. Milton, P. L.

3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven.

Now Heaven help him!

Shakspeare.

The will

And high permission of all-ruling Heaven

Left him at large. Milton, P. L.

TO HEAVENIZE.* v. a. [from heaven.] To render like heaven.

O my soul, if thou be once soundly heavenized in thy thoughts and affections, it shall be otherwise with thee: then thou shalt be ever, like this firmament, most happily restless. Bp. Hall, Soliloq. § 80.

HEAVENLINESS.* n. s. [from heavenly.] Supreme excellence.

Goddess of women, sith your heavenliness

Hath now vouchsaf'd itself to represent

To our dim eyes, &c. Sir J. Davies, Orchestra.

HEAVEN-LOVED.* adj. Beloved of Heaven.

But oh! why didst thou not stay here below

To bless us with thy heaven-lov'd innocence. Milton, On the Death of a Fair Infant.

Such was this heaven-lov'd isle,

Than Lesbos fairer, and the Cretan shore. Sir W. Jones, Ode.

HEAVENLY. adj. [from heaven.]

1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.

As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, so doth the love of the world make one become worldly. Sidney.

Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;

Not Pindar's heavenly lyre, nor Horace when a swan. Dryden.

2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.

Adoring first the genius of the place,

Then earth, the mother of the heavenly race. Dryden.

HEAVENLY. adv.

1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells,

Where heavenly pensive contemplation dwells,

And ever-musing melancholy reigns,

What means this tumult in a vestal's veins? Pope.

2. By the agency or influence of heaven.

Truth and peace and love shall ever shine

About the supreme throne

Of him, to whose happy-making sight alone,

Our heavenly guided soul shall climb. Milton, Ode on Time.

HEAVENLY-MINDEDNESS.* n. s. A state of mind abstracted from the world, and directed to heaven.

The danger of being all soul, all holiness, all heavenly-mindedness so early, is a sad frightful thing for a young courtier! Hammond, Works, iv. 515.

With how much more difficulty may we imagine a man to get humility, or heavenly-mindedness, while all the appetites, and the very nerves of his soul strive against it, and endeavour to pull down as fast as he can build up. South, Serm. vii. 54.

HEAVEN-SALUTING.* adj. Touching the sky; heaven-kissing.

What shall they do,

When stubborn rocks shall bow,

And hills hang down their heaven-saluting heads. Crashaw, Poems, p. 153.

HEAVENWARD.* adv. [heaven and peapb, Saxon.] Towards heaven.

Out of the west comst, a wendie as me thought

Came walking in the way; to heavenward she loked;

Mercy hight that mayde. Via. of P. Ploughman.

I prostrate lay,

By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,

H E A

Or to object; at length, my mournful look Heavenward erect, determin'd, thus I spoke.

Prior.

HEAVEN-WARRING.* adj. Warring against heaven.

None among the choice and prime
Of those heaven-warring champions could be found
So hardy, as to proffer or accept
Alone the dreadful voyage.

Milton, P. L.

The subject is concerning the heaviness of several bodies, or the proportion that is required betwixt any weight and the power which may move it. Wilkins.

2. Dejection of mind; depression of spirit.

We are, at the hearing of some, more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness; of some more mollified, and softened in mind.
Hooker.

Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foreruns the good event.

Shakspeare.

Let us not burthen our remembrance with
An heaviness that's gone.

Shakspeare.

Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop; but a good word maketh it glad. Prov. xii. 25.

Ye greatly rejoice; though now for a season ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptations. 1 Pet. i. 6.

3. Inaptitude to motion or thought; sluggishness;
torpidness; dulness of spirit; languidness; languor.

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight.

Shakspeare.

What means this heaviness that hangs upon me?
This lethargy that creeps through all my senses?

Addison.

He would not violate that sweet recess,
And found besides a welcome heaviness,
Which seiz'd his eyes.

Dryden.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbuthnot.

4. Oppression; crush; affliction: as, the heaviness of taxes.

5. Deepness or richness of soil.

As Alexandria exported many commodities, so it received some, which, by reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce; such as metals, wood, and pitch. Arbuthnot on Coins.

HE'AVING.* n. s. [from heave.]

1. A pant; a motion of the heart.

'Tis such as you, —

That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless heavings; such as you
Nourish the cause of his awaking. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. A swell.

Of all objects that I have ever seen, there is none which affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean. I cannot see the heavings of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment.

H E A

Addison, Spect. No. 489.

HE'AVY.* adj. [heafiz, Saxon, from heapan, to heave; whence the usage, in some counties, of heft for weight.]

1. Weighty; ponderous; tending strongly to the centre; contrary to light.

an hundred double pulleys, might move this earth, though it were much heavier than it is. Wilkins.

2. Sorrowful; dejected; depressed.

He talk'd with him Peter and James and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy; and saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death.

St. Mark, xiv. 33.

Let me not be light;

For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shakspeare.

3. Grievous; oppressive; afflictive.

Menelaus bore an heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind. 2 Mac. v. 23.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound

That ever yet they heard. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

If the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind. Dryden.

7. Drowsy; dull; torpid.

Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep.
St. Luke, ix. 33.

8. Slow; sluggish.

But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy gaited toads lie in their way. Shakspeare.

9. Stupid; foolish.

This heavy headed revel, East and West
Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations. Shakspeare.

I would not be accounted so base minded, or heavy headed, that I will confess that any of them is for valour, power, or fortune better than myself. Knolles.

10. Burthensome; troublesome; tedious.

I put into thy hands what has been the diversion of some of my idle and heavy hours. Locke, Ep. to the Reader.

When alone, your time will not lie heavy upon your hands for want of some trifling amusement. Swift.

11. Load'd; encumbered; burthened.

Hearing that there were forces coming against him, and not willing that they should find his men heavy and laden with booty, he returned unto Scotland. Bacon, Hen. VII.

12. Not easily digested: not light to the stomach.

Such preparations as retain the oil or fat, are most heavy to the stomach, which makes baked meat hard of digestion.

Arbuthnot.

13. Rich in soil; fertile; as, heavy lands.

14. Deep; cumbersome; as, heavy roads.

HE'CKLE.* See HACKLE.

HE'CTICAL. † } adj. [hectique, French, from ἔκτε.]

HE'CTICK. } Habitual; constitutional.

This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual; and, ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fullness from obstruction. It is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot.

Quincy.

That silence which I will not call a symptom of my sickness, but a sickness itself. However, I will keep it from being hectic.
Wotton to Sir E. Bacon, Rem. p. 433.

- A hectic fever bath got hold
Of the whole substance, not to be control'd. Donne.
- 2. Troubled with a morbid heat.
A corrosive to one already in a hectic condition.

The busy brain of the lean and hectic chymist. Sterne, Sermon.
HECTICALLY. * adv. [from hectic.] Constitutionally.

He was for some years hectically feverish.
Johnson, Life of Aischa.

HECTICK. † n. s. An hectic fever.

Like the hectic in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
By wasting hecticks of his flesh bereft. Sandys, Job, p. 48.

HECTOR. n. s. [from the name of Hector, the great Homerick warrior.] A bully; a blustering, turbulent, perversive, noisy fellow.

Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,
And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.

TO HECTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectored out of it.

The weak low spirit fortune makes her slave;
But she's a drudge, when hector'd by the brave. Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

TO HECTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.

One would think the hectoring, the storming, the sullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured.

Don Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants hector. Swift.

HECTORLY. * adj. [from hector.] Blustering; insolent; outrageous.

Those, who seek glory from evil things, (who glory in their shame,) from presumptuous transgression of God's law, hectorly profaneness, and debauchery, from outrageous violence, from over-reaching craft, are not only vainglorious but impudent. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 31.

HERACEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Lat.] Producing ivy.

HEDGE. † n. s. [hegge, Saxon; and so our own word is written hegge by Wicliffe and Chaucer, from hegan, to enclose.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes, or woven twigs.

It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer.

The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant maze
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.

HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first shew: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakespeare.

The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate, vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-press in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

TO HEDGE. † v. a. [Saxon, hegian.]

1. To enclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.

Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclesi. xxviii. 24.
Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon.

2. To obstruct.

I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hos. ii. 6.

3. To encircle for defence.

England, hedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakespeare, K. John.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. To shut up within an enclosure.

It must not be paid and exported in ready money: so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange? Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is, to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.

You forget yourself
To hedge me in. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

When I was hasty, thou delay'dst me longer:
I prythee, let me hedge one moment more
Into thy promise; for thy life preserv'd. Dryden.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own. Swift, Direct. to the Footman.

TO HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, and vain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth: meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-CREEPER. [hedge and creep.] One that skulks under hedges for bad purposes.

HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. s. A plant; fumaria sepium. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. s. [hedge and hog; crinaceus.]

1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in a hedge.

Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my barefoot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collyrium of Albertus; that is, to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserv'd in a brazen vessel, effect. Broun, Vulg. Err.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under-part, head, belly, and legs, within his thicket of prickles. Ray on the Creation.

2. A term of reproach.

Did'st thou not kill this king?
—I grant ye.
—Do'st grant me, hedge-hog? Shakespeare, Rich. III.

3. A plant; trefoil; medica echinata. Ainsworth.

4. The globe-fish; orbis echinatus. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. s. [hedge and hyssop.] A species of willow-wort; gratiola.

Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one; externally it is said to be a vulnerary. Hill, Mat. Medica.

HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. s. A plant.

HEDGE-NETTLE. n. s. A plant; galeopsia. Ainsworth.

H E E

HEDGE-NOTE. n. s. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low writing.

When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant railery. Dryden.

HEDGE-PIG. n. s. [hedge and pig.] A young hedgehog.

Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd,
Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

HEDGE-ROW. n. s. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.

Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row clins, on hillocks green. Milton.
The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Berkeley to Pope.

HEDGE-SPARROW. n. s. [hedge and sparrow; curruca.] A sparrow that lives in bushes, distinguished from a sparrow that builds in thatch.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakspeare.

HEDGING-BILL. n. s. [hedge and bill.] A cutting hook used in making hedges.

Come, master Dametas with a hedging-bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Sidney.

HEDGER. n. s. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.

The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink'd hedger at his supper sat. Milton, Comus.
He would be laugh'd at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedger at past fifty. Locke.

To HEED. v. a. [heban, Sax.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;
But wonders much at those new vocal reeds. Dryden.
He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention heed all the parts of it. Locke.

To HEED.* v. n. To mind; to consider.

Thoughtless she leaves amid the dusty way
Her eggs, to ripen in the genial ray;
Nor heeds, that some fell beast, who thirsts for blood,
Or the rude foot, may crush the future brood. Warton, Paraphr. of Job, ch. 39.

HEED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.

With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running. Milton, l' All.
Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Locke.
Thou must take heed, my Portius;
The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison.

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.

Either wise hearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Take heed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

3. Care to avoid.

We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Tillotson.

4. Notice: observation.

Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more heed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.

5. Seriousness; staidness.

He did unveil them; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance. Shakspeare.

6. Regard; respectful notice.

It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no heed is given to what he says. L' Estrange.

H E E

HE'EDFUL. adj. [from heed.]

1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.

Give him heedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgements join,
In censure of his seeming. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Attentive; careful; observing: with of.

I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late ent'ring at his heedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shakspeare.
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. Shakspeare.
Thou heedful of advice, secure proceed;
My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope.

HE'EDFULLY. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.

That worthy divine did not heedfully observe the great difference betwixt these instanced degrees.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 5.
I would wish parents to mark heedfully the witty excuses of their children. Wotton on Education.

Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor, and heedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led. Watts.

HE'EDFULNESS. n. s. [from heedful.] Caution; vigilance; attention.

HE'EDILY. adv. Cautiously; vigilantly. Dict.

HE'EDINESS. n. s. Caution; vigilance. Dict.

And evermore that craven coward knight
Was at his back with heartlesse heediness,
Wayting if he unwares him murker might. Spenser, F. Q. vi. vi. 26.

HE'EDLESS. adj. [from heed.] Negligent; inattentive; careless; thoughtless; regardless; unobserving: with of.

The heedless lover does not know
Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Wallcr.
Heedless of verse, and hopeless of the crown
Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown. Dryden.
Some ideas, which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either heedless, as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men. Locke.
Surprises are often fatal to heedless unguarded innocence. Sherlock.

HE'EDLESSLY. adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.

Post not heedlessly on unto the non ultra of folly, or precipice or perdition. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 30.

Our women run on so heedlessly in the fashion, that though it is the interest of some to hide as much of their faces as possible, yet because a leading toast appeared with a backward head-dress, the rest shall follow the mode, without observing that the author of the fashion assumed it because it could become no one but herself. Taiter, No. 212.

HE'EDLESSNESS. n. s. [from heedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention.

In the little harms they suffer from knocks and falls, they should not be pitied, but bid do so again; which is a better way to cure their heedlessness. Locke.

HEEL. n. s. [Sax. hel. hele; Su. Goth. hacl, from haella, to sustain.]

1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind.

If the luxated bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone. Wicman, Surgery.

2. The whole foot of animals.

The stag recalls his strength, his speed,
His wings, heels, and then his armed head;
With these t' avoid, with that his fate to meet;
But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet. Denham.
Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel. Addison.

3. The feet, as employed in flight.

Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tygers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for't. L'Estrange.

4. To be at the heels. To pursue closely; to follow hard.

Sir, when comes your book forth?
— Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakespeare, Titus.
But is there no sequel at the heels of this Mother's admiration? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

5. To attend closely.

Could we break our way
By force, and at out heels all hell should rise
With blackest insurrection, to confound Heav'n's purest light. Milton, P. L.

6. To pursue as an enemy.

The Spaniards fled on towards the North to seek their fortunes, being still chased by the English navy at their heels, until they were fain to give them over for want of powder. Bacon.
Want! Worldly want! that hungry meagre fiend,
Is at my heels, and chases me in view. Olway.

Huloet, and Barret.

HEGEMONICAL.  adj.* [ηγεμονικος, Gr. from ηγμων,

HEGEMONICK. } a leader.] Ruling; predominant.

The most princelike and hegemonical part of his soul, which ought to rule over all, is now become servile and a slave unto all. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 120.

All maniacs have a predominant idea, which masters every other, and is hegemonick in most of their propositions.

Johnstone on Madness, p. 2.

HEGIRA. n. s. [Arabick.] A term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time, used by the Arabians and Turks, who begin their computation from the day that Mahomet was forced to make his escape from the city of Mecca, which happened on Friday, July 16. A. D. 622, under the reign of the emperor Heraclius. *Harris.*HE'IFER. n. s. [Sax. heapone.] A young cow.

Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh,

And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,

But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter? Shakespeare.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain. Bacon.

For her the flocks refuse their verdant food

Nor thirsty heifers seek the gliding flood. Pope.

HEIGH-HO. † interj. [formerly written also hah-ho.]

1. An expression of slight languor and uneasiness.

Heigh-ho! an't be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd. Shakespeare.

I would I had a wife, saith he; hah-ho for an husband, cries she! Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 569.

2. It is used by Dryden, contrarily to custom, as a voice of exultation.

We'll toss off our ale till we cannot stand,

And heigh-ho for the honour of old England. Dryden.

HEIGHT. † n. s. [Dr. Johnson considers it as derived from high; and Milton wrote it highth. It is the Sax. substantive heðe, hihð, and the Goth. hauitha. Mr. H. Tooke pronounces it to be heapeð, the third person singular of the indicative heapan, to lift up.]

1. Elevation above the ground: indefinite.

Up to what pit thou seest,

From what highth fallen. Milton, P. L.

An amphitheatre's amazing height

Here fills the eye with terror and delight. Addison.

2. Altitude; definite space measured upwards.

Abroad I'll study thee,

As he removes far off, that great heights takes. Donne.

There is in Ticinum a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty. Bacon.

An amphitheatre appear'd,

Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd;

That when a man was plac'd in one degree,

Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

3. Degree of latitude. Latitudes are higher as they approach the pole.

Guinea lieth to the North sea, in the same height as Peru to the South. Abbot, Descr. of the World.

From Alpine heights the father first descends;
His daughter's husband in the plain attends. Dryden, Æn.

5. Elevation of rank; station of dignity; great degree of excellence.

By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd. Shakespeare.

Ten kings had from the Norman conquest or reign'd,
When England to her greatest height attain'd,
Of pow'r, dominion, glory, wealth, and state. Daniel.

Every man of learning need not enter into their difficulties, nor climb the heights to which some others have arrived. Watts.

6. The utmost degree; full completion.

Putrefaction doth not rise to its height at once. Bacon.

Did not she
Of Timna first betray me, and reveal
The secret, wrested from me in the height
Of nuptial love profess'd? Milton, S. A.

Hide me from the face
Of God, whom to behold was then my height
Of happiness! Milton, P. L.
Despair is the height of madness. Sherlock.

7. Utmost exertion.

Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding. Shakespeare.

8. State of excellence; advance towards perfection.

Social duties are carried to greater heights, and enforced with stronger motives, by the principles of our religion. Addison.

To HEIGHTEN.† v. a. [from height.]

1. To raise high; to elevate.

Being so heighten'd,
He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery,
Seducing so my friends; and, to this end,
He bow'd his nature. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Heighten'd in their thoughts beyond
All doubt of victory. Milton, P. L.

Heighten'd as with wine. Milton, P. L.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

By the infusion of three drops out of one of his phials, he converted it into a most beautiful pale Burgundy. Two more of the same kind heighten'd it into a perfect Languedoc.
Addison, Tatler, No. 131.

3. To aggravate.

Foreign states used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war. Addison.

4. To improve by decorations. See HEIGHTENING.

HEIGHTENING.* n. s. [from heighten.] Improvement by decorations.

As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden.

All these amazing incidents do these inspired historians relate nakedly and plainly, without any of the colourings and heightenings of rhetoric. West on the Resurrection, p. 356.

HEINOUS adj. [haineux, Fr. from hain, hate; or from the Teut. hoon, shame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege. Hooker.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakespeare.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson.

HEINOUSLY.† adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

If the act be so heinously flagitious, and redounding to so high dishonour of God. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, Add.

HEINOUSNESS. n. s. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences, provoking God, as jests and trifles, must have little sense of the heinousness of them. Rogers.

HEIR.† n. s. [heire, old Fr. hæres, Latin; derived by some from hæreo, to be close to, q. d. to be next to; by others from herus, lord or master, the heir being such when in possession of the inheritance.]

1. One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Locke.

What lady is that?

—The heir of Alanson, Rosaline her name. Shakespeare.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,

To bar my master's heirs in true descent,

God knows, I will not do it. Shakespeare.

Being heirs together of the grace of life

Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost. 1 Pet. iii. 7.

And I his heir in misery alone. Pope.

The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.

2. One newly inheriting an estate.

The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate. Swift.

3. HEIR Apparent. He, who, if he survives, will certainly inherit, after the present possessor.

4. HEIR Presumptive. One, who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present state of things, be his heir; but whose succession or inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as that of a daughter, by the birth of a son; or that of a brother or nephew, by the birth of a child.

To HEIR. v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His sons in blooming youth were snatch'd by fate;

One only daughter heir'd the royal state. Dryden.

HEIRDOM.* n. s. [heir and dom.] The state or possessions of an heir.

Or if, O shame! in hired harlot's bed

Thy wealthy heirdom thou have buried;

Then, Pontice, little boots thee to discourse

Of a long line of golden ancestours. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 3.

HEIRESS. n. s. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heiress she, while yet alive;

All that was her's to him did give. Waller.

Æneas, though he married the heiress of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law.

Dryden.

HEIRLESS adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of

The wrong I did myself; which was so much,

That heirless it hath made my kingdom. Shakespeare.

HEIRLOOM.† n. s. [heir and geloma, goods, Sax.]

Any furniture or movable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Those principles of obedience and patience, which our Saviour left to his apostles, and they like heirlooms to their successors. Proceedings against Garnet, &c. (1616,) Y. y. 3.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,

Transmitted to the hero's line;

Thence through a long descent of kings

Came an heirloom, as Homer sings.

Swift.

HEIRSHIP. n. s. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to build an hospital within a year, under pain of being deprived of his heirship. Ayliffe, Parergon.

HELD. The preterite and part. pass. of hold.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends. Eccles.
If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design. Dryden.

To HEEL.* v. a. [Sax. helan; Su. Goth. and Icel. haela; to cover. The word was formerly written also heal, hill, hell, and heal.] To hide; to conceal; to cover. It is yet used in some parts of England. See HELL, and To HILL.

There may no man's privtee
Be held halve so well as myn. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.
We women connen nothing hele.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale.

Else would the waters overflow the lands,
And fire devour the air, and hell them quight.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 45.

To heal the fire; to heal a house; to heal a person in bed;
i. e. to cover them. Ray, South Country Words.

HELIER.* See HELLIER.

HELIACAL.* adj. [heliacque, Fr. from ἥλιος; Gr.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its heliacal ascent. Brown.
The exact light and magnitude of the stars; their heliacal, acronical, matutine, and vespertine motions.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 227.

The heliacal rising of the star Sothis.
Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 4.

HELIACALLY. adv. [from heliacal.]

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emersion from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their calicular days. Brown.

He is tempestuous in the Summer, when he rises heliacally; and rainy in the Winter, when he rises achronically. Dryden.

HELICAL. adj. [helice, Fr. from ἥλιος, Gr.] Spiral; with many circumvolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vectis at one end of it. Wilkins.

HE'LING.* n. s. [from To hele.] The covering of the roof of a building. See HILLING.

HE'LIOD Parabola, in mathematicks, or the parabolic spiral, is a curve which rises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola's being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge towards the centre of the said circle. Harris.

HELIOCENTRICK. adj. [heliocentrique, Fr. ἥλιος, and κέντρον.]

The heliocentrick place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harris.

HELIO'METER.* n. s. [ἥλιος, the sun, and μέτρον, a measure; heliometre, Fr.] An instrument for measuring the diameters of the sun and moon.

HELIOSCOPE. n. s. [heliroscope, Fr. ἥλιος, and σκοπεῖν.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes. Harris.

HELIOTROPE.* n. s. [ἥλιος, and τρέπω; heliotrope, French; heliotropium, Latin.]

1. A plant that turns towards the sun; but more particularly the turnsol or sun-flower.

'Tis an observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night and in cloudy weather.

Gov. of the Tongue.

2. A precious stone, of a green colour, streaked with red veins.

They sell — agats, turquoises, heliotropes, cornelians.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 44.

HELISPHERICAL.* adj. [helix and sphere.]

The heliispherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called, because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it. Harris.

They are heliispherical lines, as they call them, that is, partly circular and partly helical or spiral.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650.) p. 285.

HELIX. n. s. [ἥλις, Fr. ἥλιος.] Part of a spiral line, a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the quantity of water which every helix does contain. Wilkins.

HELL.* n. s. [Goth. halje, from huljan, to cover; Germ. hella; Sax. helle. "Some derive it from the Hebrew word sheol, either subtracting the first letter, or including it in the aspiration. — But the derivation given by Verstegan is the most probable; from being helled over, that is to say, hidden or covered. For in the German tongue (from whence our English was extracted) hil signifieth to hide; and hiluk in Otfridus Wissenbergensis, is hidden: And in this country, [Ireland,] with them that retain the ancient language, which their forefathers brought with them out of England, to hell the head, is as much as to cover the head; and he that covereth the house with tile or slate, is from thence commonly called a hellier. So that, in the original propriety of the word, our hell doth exactly answer to the Greek ἄδης, which denoteth τὸν αἰὸν τόπον, the place which is unseen, or removed from the sight of man." Abp. Usher's Answ. to the Jesuit Malone in Ireland, 4th edit. p. 219.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakespeare, Macb.

If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Let none admire

That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. Milton, P. L.

Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold
The glorious light he forfeited of old. Country.

2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.

I will go down into hell.

Gen. xxxvii. 35. (Dou. and Answ. Transl. 1609, &c.)
He descended into hell. Apostle's Creed.

3. Temporal death.

The pains of hell came about me; the snares of death overtook me. Psalms xxv. 4.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;

They of both ends the middle two do fly;

The two that in mid-place, hell called were,

Must strive with waiting foot, and watching eye,

To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,

That they, as well as they, hell may supply. Sidney.

5. The place into which the taylor throws his shreds.

This trusty squire, he had, as well

As the bold Trojan knight, seen hell;

Not with a counterfeited pass

Of golden bough, but true gold lace.

In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,

Who might deserve a place in his own hell. King, Cookery.

6. Formerly, a dungeon in a prison.

In Wood-street's hole, or Poultney's hell. The Counter-Rat, 1658.

7. The infernal powers.

HEL

Much danger first, much toil did he sustain,
While Saul and hell crost his strong fate in vain. Cowley.
8. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head,
In hell-black night endur'd, would have boil'd up,
And quench'd the stelled fires. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

HELL-BORN.* adj. [hell and born.] Born in hell.

Like the hell-born hydra. Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 32.
Dann'd hell-born pride. Marston, Sat. (1598.)

Learn by proof,

Hell-born, not to contend with spirits of heaven. Milton, P. L.

HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With foul enfolded smoke and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies. Spenser, F. Q.

HELL-BREWED.* adj. [hell and brew.] Prepared or brewed in hell.

Hence with thy hell-brew'd opiate.

Milton, Comus, ver. 696. (MS. reading.)

HELL-BROTH. n. s. [hell and broth.] A composition boil'd up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork and blind-worm's sting,
Lizard's leg and owl's wing;
For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

HELL-CAT.* n. s. [hell and cat.] Formerly, a witch; a hag.

The whorson old hel-cat would have given me the brayne of a cat once—I had her make sawce with't. Middleton's Witch.

HELL-CONFOUNDING.* adj. [hell and confound.]

Vanquishing the power of hell.
With that he from his holy bosom drew
A golden banner, in whose silken lap
His Lord's almighty name wide open flew,
Of hell-confounding majestie made up:
The fiend no sooner Jesus there did read,
But shame fell'd down his eyes, and fear his head.
Beaumont, Psyche, p. 20.

HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.

And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of heav'n,
Hell-doom'd! and breath'st defiance here and scorn,
Where I reign king. Milton, P. L.

HELL-GOVERNED. adj. Directed by hell.

Earth gape open wide, and ate him quick,
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd. Shakspeare.

HELL-HAG.* n. s. [hell and hag.] A hag of hell.

A corroding disease it [envy] is; an hel-hag that feeds upon its own marrow, bones, and strongest parts.

In. Ri. hardson on the O. Test. p. 281.

HELL-HATED. adj. Abhorred like hell.

Back do I toss these treasours to thy head,
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shakspeare.

HELL-HAUNTED. adj. [hell and haunt.] Haunted by the devil.

Fierce Osmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark,
And bid me stand exposed to the bleak winds,
Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove. Dryden.

HELL-HOUND.* n. s. [hell-hund, Saxon.]

1. Dog of hell.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death.
Now the hell-hounds with superior speed
Had reach'd the dame, and, fastning on her side,
The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd. Dryden.

2. Agent of hell.

I call'd

My hell-hounds to lick up the draff, and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton, P. L.

3. A profligate person.

God, keep me from these hell-hounds. Beaumont and Fl. Philast.

HEL

HELL-KITE. n. s. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed.

The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.

Did you say all? What all? Oh hell-kite! all?

What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop?

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

HELLEBORE. n. s. [helleborus, Lat.] Christmas flower.

HELLEBORE White. n. s. [veratrum, Lat.] A plant.

There are great doubts whether any of its species

Be the true hellebore of the ancients. Miller.

And melancholy cures by sovereign hellebore.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

HELLEBORISM.* n. s. [from hellebore.] A medicinal preparation of hellebore.

In vain should the physician attempt, with all his medicines
And helleborism, the cure of those that are sick of love, or any the like passions. Ferrand, L'oeur Malade. (1640.) p. 169.

HELLENICK.* adj. [ἑλληνικός, Gr.] Grecian; heathen.

So great an injury they [the Christians] then held it to be deprive [of hellenick learning; and thought it a persecution more undermining and secretly decaying the church, than the open cruelty of Decius or Dioclesian. Milton, Areopagitica.

HELLENISM.* n. s. [ἑλληνισμός.] A Greek idiom.

Virgil is full of the Greek forms of speech, which the critics call hellenisms. Addison, Spect. No. 285.

HELLENIST.* n. s. [ἑλληνιστής.]

1. A Grecianizing Jew.

That the thing was done by the Jews, I deny not; but by those, I mean the Hellenists. Gregory, Posthum. p. 88.

Uncanonical pieces that had been annexed to it by the Hellenists. Cosin, Can. of Script. p. 50.

2. Any one skilled in the Greek language.

Another thing observable of s with its affinis t: when they come alone, without the implication of other consonants, they are of an easy and graceful pronunciation. Homer seems to have loved them.—But if all this do not satisfy the critical Hellenist, then I must add, &c.

Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, p. 126.

HELLENISTICAL.* adj. [from hellenist.] Relating to the language used among the Grecianizing Jews.

The importance of the hellenistical dialect, into which he had made the exactest search. Fell, Life of Hammond, § 1.

Heinsius and some other scrupulous critics reckon this an hellenistical form of speech. Blackwall, Sac. Class. ii. 157.

HELLENISTICALLY.* adv. [from hellenistical.] According to the hellenistical dialect.

It may bear the same signification hellenistically in this place.

Gregory, Notes on Script. p. 60.

TO HELLENIZE.* v. n. [ἑλληνίζω, Gr.] To use the Greek language.

To hellenize is to speak Greek, and to have skill in the Greek learning. Hammond on Acts, viii.

HELLIER.* n. s. [from helle or hell. See TO HELE.]

A slater; a tiler.

He that covereth the house with tile or slate, is commonly called a hellier. Abp. Usher, Answer to the Jes. Malone, p. 219.

In the West, he that covers a house with slates is called a heler or hellier. Ray.

HELLISH. adj. [from hell.]

1. Sent from hell; belonging to hell.

O thou celestial or infernal spirit of love, or what other heavenly or hellish title thou list to have, for effects of both I find in myself, have compassion of me. Sidney.

Victory and triumph to the Son of God,

Now entering his great duel, not of arms,

But to vanquish by wisdom hellish wiles. Milton, P. R.

2. Having the qualities of hell; infernal; wicked; detestable.

No benefits shall ever allay that diabolical rancour that ferments in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out at its foul mouth in slander. South.

HELLISHLY.* adv. [from hellish.] Infernally; wickedly; detestably.

HEL

That wicked plot [the gunpowder treason] was contrived and managed with the greatest sworn secrecy, made hellishly sacred and firm by solemn oaths. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 390.

HELLISHNESS. n. s. [from hellish.] Wickedness; abhorred qualities.

HELLWARD. adv. [from hell.] Toward hell.

Be next thy care the sable sheep to place
Full o'er the pit, and hellward turn their face. Pope.

HELM'NTHICK. adj. [from helms.] Relating to worms. Dict.

HELMSMAN.  n. s.* [helm and man.] He who manages the rudder of a vessel.

HELMWIND.  n. s.* [helm and wind.] A particular kind of wind in some of the mountainous parts of England.

In these mountains [of Westmorland,] towards the north-east part of the county, is a very remarkable phenomenon, such as we have not found any account of elsewhere in the kingdom, except only about Ingleton, and other places bordering upon the mountains of Ingleborrow, Pendle, and Penigent, in the confines of the counties of York and Lancaster. It is called a helmwind. A rolling cloud, sometimes for three or four days together, hovers over the mountain tops, the sky being clear in other parts. When this cloud appears, the country people say, the helm is up: which is an Anglo-Saxon word signifying properly a covering for the head. — This helm is not dispersed or blown away by the wind, but continues in its station, although a violent roaring hurricane comes tumbling down the mountain, ready to tear up all before it. Then on a sudden ensues a profound calm. And then again alternately the tempest; which seldom extends into the country above a mile or two from the bottom of the mountain.

Burn and Newolson, Hist. of Westm. and Cumb. i. 7.

HELOT.  n. s.* [Lat. Helotes, from Helos, a Laconian town, conquered by the Spartans, who made all the inhabitants prisoners of war, and reduced them into the condition of slaves. Potter, Archæol. Gr. b. i. ch. 10.] A slave.

Nor was it lawful for any Spartan to improve this lot to the best, by living upon it; for they were strictly prohibited all occupations, even that of agriculture; and their hinds or helots paid them only an annual quantity of corn, wine, and other fruits. Bp. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, p. 140.

TO HELP. v. a. preter helped, or holp; part. helped, or holpen. [hilpan, Gothick; helpan, Saxon.]

1. To assist: to support; to aid.

Let us work as valiant men behoves;
For boldest hearts good fortune helpeth out. Fairfax.
O Lord, make haste to help me. Psalms.

L'Estrange.

14. To present at table.

In plenty starving, tantaliz'd in state,

And complaisantly help'd to all I hate;

Treated, carress'd, and tir'd, I take my leave.

Pope.

TO HELP. v. n.

1. To contribute assistance.

Sir, how come it you

I have help to make this rescue?

Shakspeare.

Discreet followers and servants help much to reputation.

Bacon.

Bennet's grave look was a pretence,

And Danby's matchless impudence

Help'd to support the knave.

Dryden.

A generous person helps to persuade as well as an agreeable person.

Garth.

2. To bring a supply.

Some, wanting the talent to write, made it their care that the actors should help out where the muses failed.

Rymer.

HELP. † n. s. [helpe, assistance, Sax. from the verb; hulpe, Dutch.]

1. Assistance; aid; support; succour.

Muleasses, despairing to recover the city, hardly escaped his enemies hands by the good help of his uncle.

Knolles.

He may be beholden to experience and acquired notions, where he thinks he has not the least help from them.

Locke.

So great is the stupidity of some of those, that they may have no sense of the help administered to them.

Smolridge.

2. That which gives help.

Though these contrivances increase the power, yet they proportionably protract the time: that which by such helps one man may do in a hundred days, may be done by the immediate strength of a hundred men in one day.

Wilkins.

H E L

Virtue is a friend and an help to nature; but it is vice and luxury that destroys it, and the diseases of intemperance are the natural product of the sins of intemperance.

South.

Another help St. Paul himself affords us towards the attaining the true meaning contained in his epistles.

Locke.

3. That which forwards or promotes.

Coral is in use as an help to the teeth of children.

Bacon.

4. Remedy.

There is no help for it, but he must be taught accordingly to comply with the faulty way of writing.

Holder on Speech.

HELPER. n. s. [from help.]

1. An assistant; an auxiliary; an aider; one that helps or assists.

There was not any left, nor any helper for Israel.

2 Kings.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow helpers to the truth.

3 Jo. 8.

It is impossible for that man to despair who remembers that his helper is omnipotent.

Bp. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. One that administers remedy.

Compassion, the mother of tears, is not always a mere idle spectator, but an helper oftentimes of evils.

More.

3. One that supplies with any thing wanted: with to.

Heaven

Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower,

As it hath fated her to be my motive

And helper to a husband.

Shakspeare.

I live in the corner of a vast unfurnished house: my family consists of a steward, a groom, a helper in the stable, a footman, and an old maid.

Swift to Pope.

HELPLEFUL. adj. [help and full.]

1. Useful; that which gives assistance.

Let's fight with gentle words,

Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords.

Shakspeare.

He orders all the succours which they bring;

The helpful and the good about him run,

And form an army.

Dryden.

2. Wholesome; salutary.

A skillful chymist can as well, by separation of visible elements, draw helpful medicines out of poison, as poison out of the most healthful herbs.

Raleigh, Hist.

HELPLEFULNESS. * n. s. [from helpful.] Assistance; usefulness.

God ordained it [marriage] in love and helpfulness to be indissoluble.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

HELPLESS. adj. [from help.]

1. Wanting power to succour one's self.

One dire shot

Closes by the board the prince's main-mast bore;

All three now helpless by each other lie.

Dryden.

Let our enemies rage and persecute the poor and the helpless; but let it be our glory to be pure and peaceable.

Rogers.

2. Wanting support or assistance.

How shall I then your helpless fame defend?

'Twill then be infamy to seem your friend.

Pope.

3. Irremediable; admitting no help.

Such helpless harms it's better hidden keep,

Than rip up grief, where it may not avail.

Spenser.

4. Unsupplied; void: with of. This is unusual, perhaps improper.

Naked he lies, and ready to expire,

Helpless of all that human wants require.

Dryden.

HELPLESSLY. † adv. [from helpless.] Without ability; without succour.

If he thus be helplessly distract,

'Tis requisite his office be resign'd.

Kyd, Span. Tragedy.

HELPLESSNESS. † n. s. [from helpless.] Want of ability; want of succour.

It was an objection constantly urged by the ancient Epicureans, that man could not be the creature of a benevolent being, as he was formed in a state so helpless and infirm: Montaigne took it, and urged it also. They never considered or perceived that this very infirmity and helplessness were the cause and cement of society.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

H E M

HE'LFMATE.* n. s. [help and mate.] A companion; an assistant; a partner.

HELTER-SKELTER.* adv. [as Skinner fancies, from heolſter ꝛeabo, the darkness of hell; hell, says he, being a place of confusion. Dr. Johnson. — Others, not less fancifully, from the Latin hilariter and celeriter, i. e. merrily and hastily. But Grose has given a better derivation. "Kelter or kitter, is frame, order, condition, a northern word; hence helters-kelter, a corruption of halter, to hang, and kelter, order, i. e. hang order, or in defiance of order." In a hurry; without order; tumultuously.

"Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend;
And helter-skelter have I rode to England,
And tidings do I bring. Shakespeare.

HE'MISPHERE. n. s. [ἡμισφαίριον; hemisphere, French.] The half of a globe when it is supposed to be cut through its centre in the plane of one of its greatest circles.

That place is earth, the seat of man; that light

His day, which else, as the other hemisphere, Night would invade. Milton, P. L.

A hill

Of Paradise, the highest from whose top

The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken

Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect lay. Milton, P. L.

The sun is more powerful in the northern hemisphere, and in the apogee; for therein his motion is slower. Brown.

In open prospect nothing bounds our eye,
Until the earth seems join'd unto the sky;

So in this hemisphere our utmost view

Is only bounded by our king and you. Dryden.

HEMISPHERICAL. } adj. [from hemisphere.] Half

HEMISPHERICK. } round; containing half a globe.

HE'MISTICH, or HE'MISTICK.* n. s. [ἡμιστίχιος; hemistich, Fr. It is most correctly written hemistich, as distich.] Half a verse.

He broke off in the hemistich, or midst of the verse; but seized, as it were, with a divine fury, he made up the latter part of the hemistich. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

The method of writing parallel hemistichs in opposite columns — may sometimes have caused a transposition of whole lines. Abp. Newcome, Ess. Tr. of the Bib. p. 248.

HE'MISTICHAL.* adj. [from hemistich.] Denoting a division of the verse.

The reader will observe the constant return of the hemistichal point, which I have been careful to preserve; — as I suspect, that it shews how these poems were sung to the harp by the minstrels. Warren, Hist. E. P. Add. to Vol. I.

The hemistichal division is not exhibited to the eye in the printed page.
Bp. Horsley, Tr. of Hosea, p. 43.

HEMLOCK. n. s. [hemleac, Saxon.] An herb.

The leaves are cut into many minute segments: the petals of the flower are bifid, heart-shaped, and unequal: the flower is succeeded by two short channelled seeds. One sort is sometimes used in medicine, though it is noxious; but the hemlock of the ancients, which was such deadly poison, is generally supposed different.
Miller.

He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
With hardocks, hemlock. Shakespeare, R. Lear.

We cannot with certainty affirm, that no man can be nourished by wood or stones, or that all men will be poisoned by hemlock. Locke.

That I must die here, and live hence by truth? Shakespeare.

All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are insinew'd to this action. Shakespeare.

4. From this time; in the future.

Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace. Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may. Locke.

Let not posterity a thousand years hence look for truth in the voluminous annals of pedants. Arbuthnot.

5. For this reason; in consequence of this.

Hence perhaps it is, that Solomon calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom. Tillotson.

6. From this cause; from this ground.

By too strong a projectile motion the aliment tends to putrefaction: hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion. Arbutnot on Aliments.

7. From this source; from this original; from this store..

My Flora was my sun; for as
One sun, so but one Flora was:
All other faces borrow'd hence
Their light and grace, as stars do thence. Suckling.

8. From hence is a vicious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten. Hence signifies from this.

An ancient author prophesied from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince! Dryden.

To HENCE. v. a. [from the advrb.] To send off; to dispatch to a distance. Obsolete.

Thanks and kinamen,
Henceforth be curis. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Happier thou may'st be, worthier can'st not be;
Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods,
Thyself a goddess. Milton, P. L.

I never from thy side henceforth will stray,
Till day droop. Milton, P. L.

If we treat gallant soldiers in this sort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come? Dryden.

HENCEFO'WARD. adv. [hence and forward.] From this time to futurity.

Henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair shining suns. Shakespeare.

Pardon, I beseech you;
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you. Shakespeare.

The royal academy will admit henceforward only such who are endued with good qualities. Dryden.

HE'NCHMAN. † n. s. [hýne, or hine, Sax. a servant,
and man, Skinner: hengst, Teut. a horse, and man,

Spelman. Sax. hengert, a horse. And the primary usage of henschman is in the sense of a horseman.

Our old poets often use henschboy also for an attendant, and we have now horseboy.] A page; an attendant. Obsolete.

Every knight had after him riding
Three henschmen [each] on him awaiting. Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf.

Why should Titania cross her Oberon?

seven, and μέρος, a portion.] That which divides into seven parts.

The heptamerde of M. Sauvveur could express an interval so small as the seventh part of what is called a comma, the smallest interval that is admitted in modern music.

A. Smith on the Imitative Arts.

HEPTA'RHICK.  adj.* [heptarchique, French, from heptarchy.] Denoting a sevenfold government.

The Saxons practised this mode of division for fixing the several extents of their heptarchic empire.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 69.

HE'PTARCHIST.  n. s.* [from heptarchy.] He who rules one of the divisions of a sevenfold government.

In 752, the Saxon heptarchists, Cuthred and Ethelbald, fought a desperate battle at Beorgford, or Burford.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 48.

HE'PTARCHY. n. s. [heptarchie, Fr. ἑπτα and ἀρχή]

A sevenfold government.

In the Saxon heptarchy I find little noted of arms, albeit the Germans of whom they descended, used shields. Camden.

England began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale, Orig. of Manhood.

The next returning planetary hour
Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of power,
His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent. Dryden.

HE'PTATEUCH.  n. s.* [heptateuque, Fr. ἑπτα and τεύχος] seven, and τεύχος, a work, a book.] A term applied to the first seven books of the Old Testament.

HER

HER. pron. [hepa, hep, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth. Shakspeare, As you like it.
Still new favourites she chose,
Till up in arms my passion rose,
And cast away her yoke. Cowley.
One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the sovereign power;
Wonderous beautiful her face;
But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern were unfit,
And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
She cannot seem deform'd to me,
And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.
The moon arose clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her they rise, with her they set again. Cowley.
Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HER's. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms are her's.

This pride of her's,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her. Shakspeare.
Thine own unworthiness,
Will still that thou art mine not her's confess. Cowley.
Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
And what he fortune wanted, her's could mend. Dryden.
I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not her's, but yours. Dryden.

HERALD. n. s. [herault, French; herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,
For strict degrees of rank or title look;
'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,
And I a poet here, no herald am. B. Jonson.
When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;
Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden.
Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.
It was the lark, the herald of the morn, Shakspeare.

3. A proclaimer; a publisher.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shakspeare.

To HERALD. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as by an herald. A word not used.

We are sent from our royal master,
Only to herald thee into his sight, Shakspeare.
Not pay thee.

HERALDICK.  adj.* [from herald.] Denoting genealogy; relating to heraldry.

The figures of herself and Sir Thomas Pope, both kneeling in their heraldic surcoats of arms. Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 199.

Grant her, besides, of noble blood that ran
In ancient veins, ere heraldry began. Dryden.

2. Registry of genealogies.

'Twas no false heraldry, when madness drow
Her pedigree from those who too much knew. Denham.

3. Blazonry.

Metals may blazon common beauties; she Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry. Cleveland.

HE'RALDSHIP.  n. s.* [from herald.] The office of an herald, as a proclaimer.

Being by name president of ways, and by his office of heraldship peacemaker, as an old stamp titles him, [Mercury.] Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 3.

HERB. n. s. [herbe, French; herba, Latin.]

Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them; as grass and hemlock. Locke.

In such a night
Mulea gather'd the enchant'd herbs
That did renew old Æson. Shakspeare.

With sweet swelling herbs
'Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milton, P. L.

Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie
Of herbs and roots the harmless luxury. Cowley.

If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs; as sage and mint. Watts, Logick.

Herb eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

HERB Christopher, or Bane-berries, n. s. A plant.

HERBA'CEOUS. adj. [from herba, Latin.]

1. Belonging to herbs.

Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk; but an herbaceous plant, resembling the water flower-de-luce. Brown.

2. Feeding on vegetables; perhaps not properly.

Their teeth are fitted to their food; the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables. Derham.

HERBAGE. n. s. [herbage, French.]

1. Herbs collectively; grass; pasture.

Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields. Dryden.

At the time the deluge came the earth was loaded with herbage, and thronged with animals. Woodward.

2. The tythe and the right of pasture. Ainsworth.

HE'RBAGED.  adj.* [from herbage.] Covered with grass.

Delicious is your shelter to the soul,
As to the hunted hart the sallying spring,
Or stream full flowing, that his swelling sides
Laves, as he floats along the herbag'd brink. Thomson, Summer.

HE'RBAL. n. s. [from herb.] A book containing the names and description of plants.

We leave the description of plants to herbals, and other like books of natural history. Bacon.

Such a plant will not be found in the herbal of nature. Brown.

As for the medicinal uses of plants, the large herbals are ample testimonies thereof. More, Anid. against Atheism.
Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants. Baker.

HE'RBAL.  adj.* Pertaining to herbs.

The herbal savour gave his sense delight.

Quarles, Hist. of Jonah, (1620.) I. 3. b.
The least of herbal plants, [mustard-seed.]

HE'RBALIST. † n. s. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.

What every herbalist almost, and physician, hath written.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 551.

HER

Other plants, and trees, and herbs, and flowers, should constantly partake of the like decay; — which our best physicians and herbalists have not yet found to be so.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 145.

Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit rounder. Brown.

HERBAR. n. s. [A word, I believe, only to be found in Spenser.] Herb; plant.

The roof hereof was arched over head,

— And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintily. Spenser, F. Q.

HERBARIST. n. s. [herbarius, from herba, Latin.] One skilled in herbs.

Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Boyle.

He was too much swayed by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colours or multiplicity of leaves in the flower, were sufficient to constitute a specific difference. Ray on the Creation.

As to the fuci, their seed hath been discovered and shewed me first by an ingenious herbarist. Derham.

TO HERBARIZE. v. n. [Fr. herboriser; from herb.] To go about gathering medicinal herbs.

The apothecaries' company very seldom miss coming to Hampstead every spring, and here have their herbarizing feast; and I have heard them often say, that they have found a greater variety of curious and useful plants near and about Hampstead than in any other place.

Soame, Analysis of Hampstead Water, (1734,) p. 27.

HERBARY.* n. s. [Lat. herbarium.] Our old word is herbere or erbere.] A garden of herbs.

An herbary for furnishing domestick medicines, always made a part of our ancient gardens. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 231.

HERBELET. n. s. [Diminutive of herb, or of herbula, Latin.] A small herb.

Thes herbelets, which we upon you strow. Shakspeare.

HERBER.* n. s. See HERBARY. It was also formerly an arbour.

A pleasant herber well ywrought. Chaucer, Pl. and Leaf.

Abs. and Achitophel, P. ii.

Near some rugged herbless rock,

Where no shepherd keeps his flock.

Jos. Warton, Ode to Solitude.

HERBORIST. n. s. [from herb.] One curious in herbs. This seems a mistake for herbarist.

A curious herborist has a plant, whose flower perishes in about an hour. Ray.

HERBORIZATION.* n. s. [French; from herboriser.] The appearance of plants in fossils.

Mr. Daubenton gives an account of three different kinds of herborizations. The first, amongst which are those found on agates, are owing to parts of real plants. — The second sort are owing to the stone containing particles of iron, which are so disposed as to present ramifications, &c.

Muty, Acc. of the Hist. of the R. Acad. of Sciences at Paris.

HERBOUR.* See HARBOUR.

HERBOURLESS.* See HARBOURLESS.

HERBOROUGH. n. s. [herberg, German.] Place of temporary residence. Now written harbour.

Drummond, Trav. p. 31.

HERD.† n. s. [heopð, heph, Sax. hiord, Goth.

from hyrda, to keep. Serenius. So Mr. H. Tooke deduces the Saxon word from the verb hyrdan, to keep. Some French etymologists, noticing their old word herde, conceive it to be from the Lat.

herere, to be close together.]

1. A number of beasts together. It is peculiarly applied to black cattle. Flocks and herds are sheep and oxen or kine.

Note a wild and wanton herd,

Or race of youthful and unbanded colts,

Fetching mad bounds.

Shakspeare.

To make a sweet savour unto the Lord, of the herd, or of the flock.

Numb. xv. 3.

There find a herd of heifers, wandering o'er

The neighbouring hill, and drive them to the more. Addison.

2. A company of men in contempt or detestation.

Survey the world, and where one Cato shines,

Count a degenerate herd of Catilines. Dryden.

I do not remember where ever God delivered his oracles

by the multitude, or nature truths by the herd. Locke.

3. Not always in contempt and detestation, as the preceding definition of Dr. Johnson insinuates.

The impartial gods, who from the mounted heavens

View us their mortal herd, behold who err,

And in their time chastise.

Baum, and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

4. It anciently signified a keeper of cattle, and in Scotland it is still used. [hyrd, Saxon.] A sense still retained in composition: as goatherd.

From thence into the open fields he fled,

Whereas the herds were keeping of their neat.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 4.

Ne was there herd, ne was their shepherds' swayne,

But her did honour.

Ibid. st. 10.

TO HERD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run in herds or companies.

Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer. Dryden.

It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to endure men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-sailors in a storm. Norris.

2. To associate; to become one of any number or party.

I'll herd among his friends, and seem

One of the number.

Addison, Cato.

Run to towns, to herd with knaves and fools,

And undistinguish'd pass among the crowd.

Wals.

TO HERD.† v. a. To throw or put into an herd.

The rest,

However great we are, honest and valiant,

Are herded with the vulgar.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

The most in fields like herded beasts lie down.

Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

HERDESS.* n. s. [from herd, a keeper of cattle.] A shepherdess. Obsolete.

An herdesse,

Which that yclepid was Ceone. Chaucer, Tr. i. 654.

As a herdesse in a summer's day,
Heat with the glorious sun's all purging ray.

Brown, Brit. Past.

HERDGROOM. n. s. [herd and groom.] A keeper of herds. Not in use.

But who shall judge the wager won or lost?

That shall yonder herdgroom, and none other. Spenser.

HERDMAN.* n. s. herd and man. Sax. [leapman.]

HERDSMAN. } One employed in tending herds:
formerly, an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,

In whom no evil did reign, or good appear. Sidney.

The words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa.

Amos, i. 1.

And you, enchantment,

Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou

These rural latches to his entrance open,

I will devise a cruel death for thee. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Scarce themselves know how to hold

A sheehook, or have learn'd aught else the least

That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs. Milton, Lyciur.

There off the Indian herdsman, shuffling heat,

Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds

At loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milton, P. L.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear

Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

The herdsman, round

The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd.

Dryden, Virg. Georg.

When their herdsman could not agree, they parted by consent.

Locke.

HERE.* adv. [hep, Saxon; hier, Dutch; her, Icel. and Goth.]

1. In this place.

Before thy here approach,

Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,

All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I, upon my frontiers here,

Keep residence. Milton, P. L.

Here Nature first begins

Her farthest verge. Milton, P. L.

How wretched does Prometheus's state appear,

While he his second misery suffers here!

Cowley.

To-day is ours, we have it here.

Cowley.

2. In the present state.

Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter.

Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for earnest:

'Tis finish'd. Dryden.

4. In drinking a health.

'Here's to thee, Dick.

Cowley,

However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;

To him who was the king, the friend replies. Prior.

5. It is often opposed to there; in one place, distinguished from another.

Good-night: mine eyes do itch;

Doth that bode weeping?

'Tis neither here nor there. Shakespeare, Othello.

We are come to see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakespeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave, implore;

Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.

I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweetbriar and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade; and these to be in the heath here and there, not in

Bacon.

The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestions, have drawn in here and there a single proselyte. Gov. of the Tongue.

HER

Your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continued streets; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined.

Sprat, Serm.

He that rides post through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass and there a river, woodland in one part, and savanas in another. Locke.

6. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;

Thou lovest here, a better where to find. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HEREABOUT.* adv. [here and about.] About this place.

For all this same, I'll hide me hereabout;

His looks I fear, and his intent I doubt. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

HEREABOUTS. adv. [here and about.] About this place.

I saw hereabouts nothing remarkable, except Augustus's bridge.

Addison on Italy.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come; in futurity.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shakespeare.

The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd, departs

From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd

'Egypt. Milton, P. L.

Hereafter he from war shall come,

And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.

2. In a future state.

You shall be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

HEREAFTER.* n. s. A future state. This is a figurative noun, not to be used but in poetry,

Dr. Johnson says; citing only the examples from Addison's Cato, and from Prior. Yet it is finely employed in prose.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;

'Tis Heaven itself that points out an hereafter,

And intimates eternity to man. Addison, Cato.

He supersedes every little prospect of gain and advantage which offers itself here, if he does not find it consistent with his views of an hereafter. Addison, Spect. No. 225.

The mind that is habituated to the lively sense of an here- after, can hope for what is the most terrifying to the generality of mankind, and rejoice in what is the most afflicting.

Tatler, No. 156.

I still shall wait

Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.

HEREA'T. adv. [here and at.] At this.

One man coming to the tribune, to receive his donative, with a sword in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean? Hooker.

HEREBY.* adv. [here and by.] By this.

In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hooker.

Hereby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment: hereby

we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HERE'DITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] Whatever may be occupied as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditable, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's. Locke.

HEREDITAMENT.* n. s. [heredium, Lat.] A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

Hereditament, says Sir Edward Coke, includes not only lands and tenements, but whatsoever may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed. Blackstone.

HER

HEREDITARILY. † adv. [from hereditary.] By inheritance.

In this kingdom such were hereditarily honoured with it.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 11.
Titular respects, which, those who are really and hereditarily possessed of, can wield without any such taint or suspicion of transportedness. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 420.

Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily. Pope to Swift.

HEREDITARY. adj. [hereditaire, French; hereditarius, Lat.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakespeare.

These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shakespeare.

He shall ascend
The throne hereditary, and bound his reign
With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heavens. Milton, P. L.

Thus while the mute creation downward bend
Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend,
Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden, Ovid.

When heroic verse his youth shall raise,
And form it to hereditary praise? Dryden, Virg.

HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this.

How highly soever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not herein offend us. Hooker.

My best endeavours shall be done herein. Shakespeare.

Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgement is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereinto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.

HEREOF. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant. Shakespeare.

HEREON. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.

If we should strictly insist hereon, the possibility might fall into question. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HEREOUT. adv. [here and out.]

1. Out of this place.

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing,
Hereout up to the throne of God did fly. Spenser.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HEREMITE.* n. s. See EREMIT. A hermit.

Heremites, and other votaries, professing only devotion.

Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 85.

HEREMITICAL. adj. [It should be written eremitical, from eremite, of ignus, a desert; heremitique,
French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.

HERESIARCH. n. s. [heresiarche, French; ἀρχιερεῖς and ἀγχι.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of hereticks.

The pope declared him not only an heretick, but an heresiarch. Stillingfleet.

HERESIARCHY.* n. s. [from heresiarch.] Principal heresy.

The book itself [the alcoran] consists of heresiarchies against our Blessed Saviour. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 323.

HERESY. n. s. [heresie, French; hæresis, Latin; ἀιρέσις.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholick and orthodox church.

HER

Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states. Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgement, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and disloyalty. King Charles.

HERETICK. n. s. [heretique, Fr. ἀιρετικός.]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholick church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread
Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretick instead of a father. Baker on Learning.

When a Papist uses the word hereticks, he generally means Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors. Watts, Logick.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold
Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,
In him that was of late an heretick,
As firm as faith. Shakespeare.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who in their opinion not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decay of Piety.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERETOCH.* n. s. [Sax. hepetoza, from hepe, an army, and teon, to lead.] A general; a leader of an army. Obsolete.

In the time of our Saxon ancestors, as appears from Edward the Confessor's laws, the military force of this kingdom was in the hands of the dukes, or heretochs. Blackstone.

HERETO. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly;
anciently.

I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more
Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HEREUNTO. adv. [here and unto.], To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereunto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that whose assenteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker.

Agreeable hereunto might not be amiss to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know. Lacke.

HEREUPON.* adv. [here and upon.] Upon this.

The melancholy silence that follows hereupon — raises in the spectators a grief that is inexpressible. Tatler, No. 133.

HERewith. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith dismayd,
But constant keep the way in which ye stand. Spenser.

Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surprised by the Scots. Hayward.

HERIOT.* † n. s. [hepezið, Sax. Dr. Johnson. —

The Saxon hepezið was military tribute; and hejjegeat, which some derive from hepe, an army, and geotan, to render, to pay, was the military assistance formerly supplied by the vassal to his lord.]

A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, sometimes the best thing in the landholder's possession; usually, a beast.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof, but the olive dispenseth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Howell, Voc. Forest.

Though thou consume but to renew,
Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleveland.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

HERIOTABLE.* adj. [from heriot.] Subject to the demand of an heriot.

The tenants are chiefly customary and heriotable.

Burn, Hist. Camb. and Westm. i. 174.

HERITABLE.† adj. [old French, heritable; from héres, Lat.] Capable to inherit whatever may be inherited.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England. Hale's Common Law.

HERITAGE.† n. s. [heritage, French.] Not often found in the plural.

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our father's heritage divide. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

To cause to inherit the desolate heritages. Isaiah, xlix. 8.

He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that tarries but a day. Rogers.

2. [In divinity.] The people of God.

O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage.

Com. Prayer.

HERMAPHRODITY.* n. s. [from hermaphrodite.]

The being in the state of an hermaphrodite.

Some do believe hermaphroditely,

That both do act and suffer.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. s. [hermaphrodite, Fr. from ἑρμῆς and ἀρσινόη.] An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one right

Canonical hermaphrodite.

Cleveland.

Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaphrodites.

Arbutnot and Pope.

HERMAPHRODITICAL.† adj. [from hermaphrodite.]

Partaking of both sexes.

[These ladies] cry down, or up, what they like or dislike in a brain of fashion, with most masculine, or rather hermaphroditical, authority.

B. Jonson, J. p. 100.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality of different forms.

Brown.

There is another kind of occasional dress in use among the ladies; I mean the riding habit, which some have not judiciously styled the hermaphroditical, by reason of its masculine and feminine composition.

Guardian, No. 149.

HERMAPHRODITICALLY.* adv. [from hermaphroditical.] After the manner of both sexes.

Unite not the vices of both sexes in one; be not monstrous in iniquity, nor hermaphroditically vicious.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 31.

HERMAPHRODITICK.* adj. [from hermaphrodite.]

Partaking of both sexes.

Look on me, and with all thine eyes,

Male, female, yea hermaphroditick eyes.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

HERMETICAL.† adj. [from Hermes, or Mer-

HERMETICK. adj. [from Hermes, or Mer- cury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, French.] Chymical.

Their seals, their characters, hermetick rings,

Their gem of riches, and bright stones that brings invisibility.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal. Boyle.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chimick art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels, close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air and keep out the insects: no living thing was ever produced there. Bentley.

HERMIT. n. s. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, ἐρημίτης.]

1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, fivescore Winters worn,

Might shake off fifty looking in her eye.

Shakespeare.

You lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render.

Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

He had been duke of Savoy, and after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison on Italy.

2. A beadsman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,

And the late dignities heap'd up to them,

We rest your hermits.

Shakespeare.

HERMITAGE. n. s. [hermitage, French.] The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass

Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;

On top whereof a sacred chapel was,

And eke a little hermitage thereby.

Spenser, F. Q.

Go with speed

To some forlorn and naked hermitage,

Remote from all the pleasures of the world.

Shakespeare.

And may at last my weary age

Find out the peaceful hermitage,

The hairy gown and mossy cell,

Where I may sit and rightly spell

Of every star that heaven doth shew,

And every herb that sips the dew.

Milton, Il Pens.

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison on Italy.

HERMITAGE.* n. s. A French wine.

By the infusion of three drops out of one of his phials, he converted it into a most beautiful pale Burgundy. Two more of the same kind heightened it into a perfect Languedoc; from thence it passed into a florid Hermitage.

Addison, Tatler, No. 101.

HERMITARY.* n. s. [from hermit.] A religious cell, annexed to some abbey. This is sometimes written hermitage.

Chapels, monasteries, hermitaries, nunneries, and other religious houses.

Howell, Lett. B. 77.

HERMITESS.† n. s. [from hermit.] Written hermitresse, by Drummond; from the Fr. hermitresse, Cotgrave and Sherwood.] A woman retired to devotion.

Here she stay'd; among these pines,

Sweet hermitress, she did alone repair.

Drummond, Sonn.

The violet is truly the hermitess of flowers, affecting woods and forests.

Parthenia Sacra, (1633,) p. 38.

HERMITICAL.† adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

You would have me resolve the hermitical and austere character into a timid, gloomy, and phlegmatick one.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

HERMODACTYL. n. s. [ἑρμῆς; and δακτύλος.]

Hermodactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used. Hill, Mat. Med.

HERN. n. s. [Contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, heron, and bittern. Beacham on Drawing.

HERNHILL. n. s. [hern and hill.] An herb.

Ainsworth.

HERNIA. n. s. [Lat.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.

A hernia would certainly succeed. Wise man, Surgery.

HERNSHAW.* n. s. [from heron; and written also hernew, and heronshaw, whence the vulgar corruption handsaw, noticed by Warburton in one of the following examples.] A heron.

As when a cast of falcons make their flight
At an hernewshaw, that lies aloft on wing,
The whyles they strike at him with heedlesse might
The warie foule his bill doth backward wring.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 9.

Like a tame hernew.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

"I know a hawk from a handsaw." Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This was a common proverbial speech. The Oxford editor alters it to "I know a hawk from an hernewshaw;" as if the other had been a corruption of the players; whereas the poet found the proverb thus corrupted in the mouth of the people: so that the critic's alteration only serves to shew us the original of the expression. Warburton.

HERO. n. s. [heros, Latin; ἦρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery.

I sing of heroes and of kings,
In mighty numbers mighty things. Cowley.
Heroes in animated marble frown.
In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope, on the Odys.

These are thy honours, not that here thy bust
Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust. Pope.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect; as, a hero in learning.

HERODIANS.* n. s. pl. A Jewish sect, of which mention is made in the New Testament; and which some commentators consider merely as a political party, and not as a religious sect, so distinguished in the time of Herod the great.

They sent unto him their disciples with the Herodians.

St. Matt. xxii. 16.

We cannot forbear assenting to the judicious conjectures of Dr. Prideaux and others, who look upon the Herodians not as a religious sect, but a political party, who began to become eminent in the days of Herod the great, as favouring his claims, and those of his patrons the Romans, to the sovereignty of Judea. Bp. Percy, Key to the New Test. Intr.

HEROESS. n. s. [from hero; herois, Lat.] A heroine; a female hero. Not in use.

In which were held, by sad decease,

Heroes and heroesses. Chapman.

HEROICAL. adj. [from hero.] Befitting an hero; noble; illustrious; heroick.

Musidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprises. Sidney.

Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryden.

HEROICALLY., adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to an hero.

Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney.

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad;
And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.

H E R

HEROICK.* adj. [from hero; heroique, Fr.]

1. Productive of heroes.

Bolingbroke

From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shakespeare.

2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroick name

To person or to poem. Milton.

Verse makes heroick virtue live,

But you can life to verses give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.

Methinks heroick poetry, till now,

Like some fantastick fairy-land did show. Cowley.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war. Dryden.

An heroick poem is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

4. Denoting that kind of verse, in which heroick or epick poems are usually composed.

The measure is English heroick verse without rime, as that, of Homer in Greek, and of Virgil in Latin.

Milton, Introduct. to P. L.

HEROICK.* n. s. An heroick verse; which consists, in our poetry, of ten feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick. Dryden.

HEROICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero.

Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samson hath quit himself

Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd

A life heroick. Milton.

HEROICO'MICAL.* adj. [from hero and comical.]

HEROICO'MICK.* adj. Consisting of a mixture of dignity and levity.

He offended Pope, by adopting the machinery of his sylphs, in an heroicomical poem. Dr. War ton, Essay on Pope.
The Rape of the Lock, now before us, is the fourth, and most excellent of the heroicomick poems.

Dr. War ton, Ess. on Pope.

HEROINE. n. s. [from hero; heroine, Fr.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroess.

But inborn worth, that fortune can confound,
New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

Then shall the British stage

More noble characters expose to view,

And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.

HEROISM. n. s. [heroisme, Fr.] The qualities or character of an hero.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broome, Notes to the Odyssey.

HERON. n. s. [heron, Fr.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.

So lords, with sport of stag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.

The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.

The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
Who tenor bears upon his soaring wing;
Let them on high the frighted hern survey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HERONRY.* n. s. [from heron; commonly pronounced hernry.] Dr. Johnson joins heronshaw with this word as denoting place, without any authority; and it is believed to be used only of the bird. See HERNSHAW.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles.

HEROSHIP.* n. s. [from hero.] The character of a hero, jocularly speaking.

[He.] his three years of heroship expir'd,
Returns indignant to the slighted plow. Cowper, Task, B. 4.

HERPES. n. s. [ἕρπης.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers. Quincy.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens. Wiseman, Surgery.

HERPETICK.* adj. [Gr. ἑρπιδός.] Creeping: a modern word applied to the eruptions occasioned by the disease herpes.

HERRICA NO.* See HURRICANE.

HERRING.† n. s. [old. Fr. hairang, harenc; Sax. hepung, hepunc; probably from hepe, a troop, an army, as Serenius and others suppose; these fish usually appearing together in large numbers.] A small sea-fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackerel, and cod. Garew, Surv. of Cornwall.
Buy my herring fresh. Suif.

HERRNHUTER.* n. s. [from the German huth des herrn, the assumed name of the habitation of the original Herrnhuters; afterwards, herrnhuth; which may be interpreted, "the guard or protection of the Lord."] One of a fanatical sect, established by Nicholas Lewis, Count of Zinzendorf, in the early part of the eighteenth century; called also Moravians.

A worthy friend of mine, some years ago, communicated to me a treatise published in Germany, against the Herrnhuters, or Moravians, intitled, as far as I remember, "The Wickedness of the Herrnhuters detected."

Rimius, Narr. of the Rise, &c. of the Herrnhuters, (1753.) Prof. Isaac Le Long is himself an Herrnhuter, and has published his work with the approbation of Count Zinzendorf.

Ibid. p. 6. (note.)

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers. See HER.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;
If so, my eyes are oftner wash'd than hers. Shakespeare.

Whom ill fate would ruin it prefers;
For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.

I see her rolling eyes;
And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human sound,
She makes the obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

HERSAL.* See HEARSAL.

HERSE.† n. s. [hersia, low Lat. supposed to come from hepian, to praise. Dr. Johnson.— See, however, HEARSE.]

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave. See HEARSE.

2. A grave; a coffin. See HEARSE.

3. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
And frequent herces shall besiege your gates. Pope.

4. [French, herce.] A kind of portcullis, in fortification, stuck full of iron spikes. This is not written hearse.

TO HERSE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To put into an herse; to enclose. See TO HEARSE.

The Grecians sprightly drew from the darts the cores,
And her'd it, bearing it to Sept. Chapman.
The house is her'd about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree. Crashaw.

HERSELF. pronoun.

1. A female individual, as distinguished from others.

The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakespeare.

2. Being in her own power; mistress of her own thoughts.

The more she looks, the more her fears increase,
At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryden.

3. The oblique case of the reciprocal pronoun; as, she hurt herself.

The daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself. Exodus.
She returned answer to herself. Judges.

HERSELIKE.† adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals. See HEARSELIKE.

TO HERV. v. a. [hepian, Sax. to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thenot, now nis the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to hery, nor with Love to play;
Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

But were thy years green, as now bene mine,—
Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love,
And hery with hymns thy lass's glove. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

HE'SITANCY. n. s. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.

The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.

Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to shew that they believed their own reasonings. Atterbury.

TO HE'SITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin; hesiter, Fr.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HESITATION. n. s. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.

I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each peruser. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Intermission of speech; want of volubility.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a panner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HE'SKY.* See HUSKY.

HEST.† n. s. [hæst, Saxon; one of our oldest words, from the Goth. haitan, to command; written also heast. Wicliffe uses it.] Command; precept; injunction. Obsolete, or written behest.

The sacred things and holy heastes fortaught. Spenser, F. Q.
Thou dost afflict the not deserver,

As him that doth thy lovely hests despise. Spenser.

Thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhorr'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests. Shakespeare.

HE'TERN.* See YESTER.

HE'TERARCHY.* n. s. [heteros, another, and arché, command, Gr.] The government of an alien.

It is a joy to think we have a king of our own; our own blood; our own religion; — otherwise, next to anarchy, is heterarchy; neither do we find much difference betwixt having no head at all, and having another man's head on our shoulders.
Bp. Hall, Sermon, Christ and Caesar.

HETEROCLITE.† n. s. [heteroclite, French; heteroclitum, Latin; ἑτεροκλίτης and κλίτης.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise, are called heteroclitites. Clarke.

2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

Heteroclitites, which no new hospital can hold, no physick help.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

There are strange heteroclitites in religion now-a-days.
Howell, Lett. iv. 35.

Here only riddles be,
And heteroclitites in physiognomy. Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 32.

The example will, I believe, be found an heteroclitite, and to stand alone in the history of nature. Spencer on Prod. p. 160.

HETEROCLITE.* adj.

1. Denoting nouns varying from the common forms of declension.

The heteroclitite nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Wallis.

2. Deviating from common rules; singular.

Upon a general view of his poetry, we shall find him, as in his other performances, an uncommon, surprising, heteroclitite genius.
Orrery on Swift, p. 120.

It is impossible for a man of sense to guard against the mortification that may be given him by fools, or heteroclitite characters, because he cannot foresee them. Shenstone.

HETEROCLITICAL. adj. [from heteroclitite.] Deviating from the common rule.

In the mention of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HETEROCLITOUS.* adj. [from heteroclitite.] Varying from grammatical declension.

Parrot-like, repeating heteroclitous nouns and verbs.

Sir W. Petty, Advice to Harlib, (1648), p. 23.

HETERODOX. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἑτεροδοξα and δοξα.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.

HETERODOX. n. s. An opinion peculiar.

Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HETERODOXY.* n. s. [from heterodox.] The quality of being heterodox.

Pelagianism and Socinianism, with several other heterodoxies cognate to, and dependant upon them.

South, Dedic. of his Sermon, to the Univ. of Oxford.

Heterodoxies, false doctrines, yea and heresies may be propagated by prayer as well as preaching.

Bp. Bull, Works, ii. 562.

HETEROGENE.* adj. [heterogene, Fr. ἑτερος and γενος, Gr.] Not of the same kind; dissimilar.

An old French hood,

And other pieces, heterogene enough. B. Jonson, New Inn.

All the guests are so meer heterogene,
And strangers, no man knows another. B. Jonson, Maga. Lady.

HETEROGENEAL.*† adj. [heterogene, Fr.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not conmaterial, but merely heterogeneal towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Whatever next presents itself, his heavy conceit seizeth upon, and goeth along with, however heterogeneous to his matter in hand.

VOL. II.

Donne, Charact. of a Dunce.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar.

Newton.

HETEROGENEITY. n. s. [heterogenéité, Fr. from heterogeneousus.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety of dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and soot; whereas the same wood, distilled in a retort, does yield far other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGENEOUS.† adj. [ἑτερος and γενος.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature; which cannot be arranged one under another.

That which may be added to, or subtracted from, a right-lined angle, is homogeneous to it: because heterogeneous quantities are not capable of addition or subduction.

Wallis, Correct. of Hobbes, § 4.

I have observed such heterogeneous bodies, which I found included in the mass of this sandstone. Woodward.

HETEROGENEOUSNESS.* n. s. [from heterogeneous.] Dissimilitude in nature; contrariety of parts. Ash.

HETEROSCIAN.* adj. [ἑτερος and σκια, Gr.] Having the shadow only one way. See HETEROSCIANS.

The noon-shadows are heteroscian.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650) p. 300.

HETEROSCIANS. n. s. [ἑτερος and σκια.] Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropic fall at noon always to the North.

To HEW. v. a. part. hewn or hewed. [heapan, Sax. hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut by blows with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenser.

I had purpose

Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for't. Shakspeare.

He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryden.

3. To cut, as with an axe: with the particles down, when it signifies to fell; up, to excavate from below; off, to separate.

He that depends

Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:

Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint. Shakspeare.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.

He, from the mountain hewing amber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton, P. L.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage. Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe: with in.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. Ira, xxix. 16.

H E X

Not is it so proper to hew out religious reformatations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations.

K. Charles.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks.

Addison on Italy.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame;
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god.

Dryden, Fob.

Next unto bricks are preferred the square hewn stone.

Mortimer.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new.

Pope to Swift.

To Hew. * v. n. To dig.

Solomon told out threescore and ten thousand men to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to hew in the mountains.

2 Chron. ii. 2.

Hew. * n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Destruction by cutting down.

Then to the rest his wrathfull hand he bends;
Of whom he makes such havock and such hew,
That swarms of damned soules to hell he sends.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 49

2. Colour. So huc was formerly written. See HUE.

HE'WER. † n. s. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

From the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water.

Deut. xxix. 11.

And Solomon had fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains.

1 Kings, v. 15.

That is, hewers of stone; for timber was hewed by Hiram's servants in Lebanon.

Patrick.

HE'XACHORD. * n. s. [ἑξ and χορδή, Gr.] In music, a concord, commonly called a sixth.

HEXAE'DRON. * n. s. [ἑξ and ἔδρα, Gr.] In geometry, a cube.

HEXAGON. n. s. [hexagone, French; ἑξ and γωνία.]

A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXA'GONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered.

Brown.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal.

Ray.

HEXA'GONY. n. s. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonics, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians?

Bp. Branchall against Hobbes.

HEXA'METER. n. s. [ἑξ and μέτρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick.

Dryden.

Like Ovid's Fasti, in hexameter and pentameter verse.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

HEXAMETRICAL. * } adj. Consisting of hexameters.

HEXA'METRICK. }

That Ovid among the Latin poets was Milton's favourite, appears not only from his elegiac but his hexametric poetry.

Warton, Pref. to Milton's Sm. Poems.

I have already cited his version of Naueorgus's hexametrical poem.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 458.

HE'XAPEDE. * n. s. [ἑξ, Gr. and pedes, Lat.] A fathom.

Cockeram.

HEXA'NGULAR. adj. [ἑξ and angulus, Lat.] Having six corners.

H I A

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of chrysal.

Woodward.

HE'XAPOD. n. s. [ἑξ and ποδῆς.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America.

Ray.

HEXA'STICK. † n. s. [ἑξ and σῆκος, Gr. Usually written hexastick; but hexastich would be more correct. It was formerly hexastichon.] A poem of six lines.

His request to Diana in an hexastich.

Seklen on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 1.

That famous hexastich which Sannazarius made.

Howell, Lett. i. l. 36.

The following hexastic on a similar subject, is of the same rude period.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 30.

HE'XASTYLE. * n. s. [ἑξ and σῦλος, Gr.] In architecture, a building with six columns in front.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation: the contrary to the Latin heui.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the wood with peaceful lyric:

Then hey for praise and panegyrick.

Prior.

HEY. * See, under HAY, To dance the HAY, and also HEYDEGUY.

HEY'DAY. † interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolick and exultation, and sometimes of wonder; pronounced highday.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday!

Mudibras.

HEY'DAY. n. s. A frolick; wildness.

At your age

The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgement.

Shakespeare.

HEY'DEGUY. † n. s. [perhaps from heyday, and guise, meaning in a frolick manner; or from hay, in the sense of dancing the hay, i. e. in a figure or company of eight, huit, Fr! Dr. Johnson merely notices this word as if it were heydegive, and corrupts the example in Spenser accordingly. There is no such word as heydegives.] A kind of dance; a country-dance, or round, as the contemporary commentator on Spenser explains it.

Friendly Facries, met with many Graces,
And lightfoot Nymphs, can chase the lingering night
With heydeguyes and trimly trodden traces.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. June.

Our Banquet done, we had our music by,
And then, you know, the youth must needs go dance,
First, galliards; then, larouse; and heydeguy.

Breton's Works of a Young Wit, (1577.)

The nimble Cambrian rills
Dance hy-day-gies amongst the hills.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 5. Arg.

By wells and rills, in meadows greene,
We nightly dance our hey-day guise.

Old Song of Robin Goodfellow.

HEY'WARD. * See HAYWARD.

HIA'TION. n. s. [from hio, Lat.] The act of gaping. Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open the camelion's mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the glimment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIA'TUS. n. s. [hiatus, Lat.]

1. An aperture; a gaping breach.

Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below open into and communicates with it.

Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless when the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.

HIBERNAL. adj. [hibernus, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the Winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIBERNIAN.* n. s. [Hibernus, from Hibernia, the Latin name of Ireland; Hiberie, old French; Pibinia, Saxon; adopted, according to some, from Iberia, and the Iberi, in Spain; according to others from the Celt. ibh, ivar, denoting western.] An Irishman.

There is one Hibernian, whose mind is superior to the general delusion, as his talents and erudition are superior to the antiquarian scribblers of the present day.

Campbell, Ecc. and Lit. Hist. of Ireland, p. 260.

HIBERNIAN.* adj. Relating to Ireland.

HIBERNICISM.* n. s. [Lat. Hibernicus.] A mode of speech peculiar to natives of Ireland.

HICCIUS DOCTIUS.* n. s. [corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this of here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves. Dr. Johnson.—The term is supposed to have arisen from the veneration in which the Roman Catholic priests were, in old times, held; the presence of whom, in the assemblies of the people, was announced with the words, hic est doctus! hic est doctus! See Brand's Popular Antiq. vol. ii. p. 417.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock

For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hicks's-hall;
And hiccius doctus play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
It had been both friend and foe to crimes. Hudibras.

HICCOUGH.* n. s. [Mcken, Danish. Dr. Johnson.—The orthography of this word is very unsettled; some writing hiccup; others, hiccough, hick, hichoc, and hicket. The last is French, hoquet; and base Latin, hoquetu.—Hick is both Danish and Belgick, and may be the British ig also; or may be an abbreviation of any of the rest. Hiccup, or hickup, is the Belgick huckup, as hichoc is their hickhock. Hiccough is so given, because it seems to have something of the nature of a cough. Pegge.—From the Su. Goth. hicka, whence our old word yering in the same sense.] A convulsion of the stomach producing sobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late

I heard an echo supererogate

Through imperfection, and the voice restore,

As if she had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Cleveland.

Sneezing curth the hiccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour Brown, Vulg. Err.

If the stomach be hurt, singultus or hiccough follows.

Wiscman, Surgery.

To HICCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To sob with convulsion of the stomach.

To HICKUP. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To sob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, so bid me not to love,

Is to forbid my pulse to move,

My beard to grow, my ears to prick up,

Or, when I'm in a fit, to hickup. Hudibras.

HICKWAIL.* n. s. A bird; a kind of small wood-

HICKWAY. n. s. pecker. Chambers.

HID.* } part. pass. of hide. [Sax. hubb, hibbe.]
HIDDEN. }

Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renown on earth;

And what most merits fame, in silence hid. Milton, P. L.

Other hidden cause

Left them superiour.

Milton, P. L.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;

God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

HIDDENLY.* adv. [from hidden.] Privily; secretly. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HIDAGE.* n. s. [from hide.] A tax formerly laid on every hide of land.

HIDALGO.* n. s. [Spanish.] One of noble birth. Of all the miseries which he had endured, this was the greatest; that he, an hidalgo, a gentleman of Spain, should live to become a servant. Terry, Voyage to East Ind. (1655,) p. 109.

To HIDE. v. a. preter. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [Sax. hidan.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avant, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee!

Shakespeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates,

And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews' fates. Dryden.

Thus the sire of gods and men below:

What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The several parts lay hidden in the piece;

The occasion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.

Then for my corpse a homely grave provide,

Which love and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.

Sens hid with navies, chariots passing o'er

The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection?

Addison.

The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head

In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart

Is filled with peace. Rowe, Royal Convert.

To HIDE. v. n. To lie hid; to be concealed.

A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.

Our bolder talents in full view display'd;

Your virtues open fairest in the shade;

Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide,

Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride,

Weakness or delicacy. Pope.

HIDE and SEEK. n. s. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

HIDE.* n. s. [hyde, Sax. haude, Dutch.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon past

Through mine bull hides, each under other plac'd

On his broad shield. Dryden

Pisistratus was first to grasp their hands,

And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin: in contempt.

Oh, tiger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!

How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shakespeare.

His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs

Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [hide, hyde, Fr. hida, barbarous Latin, as much as one plough can till; hida, hyde, Saxon. "When the realm was first divided into hides, a hide contained 100 acres, that is, 120 according to English measure.—The just value of a hide, that might fit the whole kingdom, never appears from Domesday; and was ever of an uncertain quantity." Kelham on Domesday Book, p. 231.]

One of the first things was a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Wotton.

HIDEBOUND.† adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from over-riding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.

2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.

A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Like stunted hidebound trees, that just have got sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.

To blot or alter what precisely accords not with the hidebound humour, which he calls his judgement. Milton, Arcopagitica.

And still the harsher and hidebunder, The damsels prove, become the fonder. Hudibras.

In detestation of the former, whom they observe to be often absurd and unreasonable, but always hidebound and fantastical. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious.

He hath wealth; yet he will scarce use it, though to purchase his own health; but starves his poor hidebound carcass, and impoverisheth his body to enrich his purse.

Stafford's Niobe (1611), P. i. p. 91.

Hath my purse been hidebound to my hungry brother?

Quarles, Judg. and Mer. The Swearer.

Cares and sleepless nights tormented with continual lashings a hidebound miser. Situation of Paradise, &c. (1683), p. 73.

HIDEOUS.† adj. [hideux, Fr. Dr. Johnson. —

Perhaps from the Icel. heide, a desert, a wild frightful place. Our word at first was hidous: "So hidous is the shours," i. e. dreadful. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.]

1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney.

Some monster in thy thoughts,

Too hideous to be shewn. Shakespeare, Othello.

I fled, and cry'd out death!

Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd From all her caves, and back resounded death. Milton, P. L.

Her eyes grew, suffer'd, and with sulphur burn;

Her hideous looks and hellish form return;

Her curling snakes with hissings fill the place,

And open all the furies of her face. Dryden.

2. It is commonly used of risible objects: the following use is less authorised.

'Tis forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. It is used by Spenser in a sense not now retained; detestable.

O hideous hanger of dominion.

Spenser.

HIDIOUSLY. adv. [from hideous.] Horribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I arm myself.

To welcome the condition of the time;

Which cannot look more hideously on me, Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakespeare.

H I E

This, in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier's Defence.

HIDEOUSNESS.† n. s. [from hideous.] Horribleness; dreadfulness; terror.

Go antickly, and shew outward hideousness.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

She presented in her trusty glass The faithful copy of my hideousness.

Beaumont, Psych. (1651), p. 79.

HIDER.† n. s. [from the verb.] He that hides.

Sherwood.

HIDING.* n. s. [from To hide.] Concealment; the act of withholding from sight.

Sherwood.

There was the hiding of his power.

Habb. iii. 4.

HIDING-PLACE.* n. s. A place of concealment.

Had they now known the world, and the hiding-places that are therein, they would have gone into the dens and rocks of the mountains. Shuckford on the Creation, p. 104.

To HIDE.† v. n. [higan, higan, Saxon; heya, Icel.

"Highe thou to come to me soone." Wicliffe,

2 Tim. iv. 9. In the present version, Do thy diligence.

Spenser, in his early poetry, writes it high:

"The night higheth fast, it's time to be gone."

Shep. Cal.]

1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mark'd the changed skies,

They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies.

Spenser, F. Q.

My will is even this,

That presently you hie you home to bed.

Shakespeare.

Well, I will hie,

And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

Shakespeare.

Some to the shores do fly,

Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;

But running from, all to destruction hie.

Daniel.

The snake no sooner hiss'd,

But virtue heard it, and away she hy'd.

Crashaw.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,

Accurs'd, and in a cursed hour, he hies.

Milton, P. L.

Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree

Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea.

Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, hies.

Dryden.

2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Auster spy'd him;

Cruel Auster thither hy'd him.

Crashaw.

HIE.* n. s. [from the verb. Yet retained in Yorkshire, according to Pegge: "Make as much hie as you can."] Haste; diligence.

He — charged hem in hie

To shapen for his life some remedie.

Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.

HIERARCH.† n. s. [i^{er} and agxi; hierarque, French.]

1. The chief of a sacred order.

Angels, by imperial summons call'd,

Forthwith from all the ends of heaven appear'd,

Under their hierarchs in orders bright.

Milton, P. L.

2. The chief of any establishment.

The politic learning of accommodating hierarchs, or statesmen. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

HIERARCHAL.* adj. [from hierarch.] Belonging to sacred government.

The great hierarchal standard was to move. Milton, P. L.

HIERARCHICAL.† adj. [hierarchique, Fr.] Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

This epistle [of St. Paul to Titus] is one of the three, not unjustly styled the hierarchical epistles, "de statu ecclesiastico composita," as Tertullian speaks; being so many rescripts apostolical to Timothy, and Titus; (the one, directed by St. Paul to stay at Ephesus, primate of Asia; the other, left in Crete, metropolitan of that and the neighbour islands;) directing them, how they ought to behave themselves in the house of God, &c.

Abp. Sancroft, Sermon, p. 1.

Bishop Hall was the defender of our hierarchical establishment.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iv. 2.

HIERARCHY. n. s. [hierarchie, French.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.

Out of the hierarchies of angels shewn,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest.

Fairfax.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heaven's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy.

Donne.

Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarchy,
The world survey'd.

Sandys.

These thy supreme king
Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright.

Milton, P. L.

The blesseddest of mortal wights, now questionless the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so importuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her.

Howell, Voc. Forest.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England.

Bacon.

While the whole Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices.

South.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops.

Swift.

HIEROGLYPH. } n. s. [hieroglyphe, French;
HIEROGLYPHICK. } ιερός, sacred, and γλύφω, to carve.]

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphick the adjective.

He gave her a kind expression, by a quaint device sent unto her in a rich jewel, fashioned much after the manner of the trivial hieroglyphs used in France, called "Rebus de Picardy."

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646.) p. 115.

- This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life.

Wilkins, Dædalus.

Herodotus, holding the very same hieroglyph, speaks much plainer.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 3.

- The first writing men used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick.

Woodward.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd.

Pope.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of punch.

Swift.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. } adj. [hieroglyphique, French, HIEROGLYPHICK. } from the noun.] Emblematical;
expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble.

Sandys, Travels.

The Egyptian serpent figures time,
And, stripp'd, returns into his prime;
If my affection thou would'st win,
First cast thy hieroglyphick skin.

Cleveland.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical.]
Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HIEROGRAM.* n. s. [hierogramme, Fr. ιερός, sacred, and γράμμα, letter.] A kind of sacred writing.

HIEROGRAMMATICK.* adj. [hierogrammatique, Fr.
from hierogram.] Expressive of holy writing.

Clement adds to epistolic [writing] the hierogrammatic, which was alphabetic; but, being confined to the use of the priests, was not so well known.

Astle, Orig. and Progr. of Writing, ch. 3.

HIEROGRAMMATIST.* n. s. [Gr. ιερογραμματιστής.] A writer of hieroglyphicks.

There were two sorts of languages and characters among the Egyptians; one common, and used by all, constituted for their trade and commerce with mankind, and which was that tongue or idiom called the Coptic or Pharonic; and the other used only by priests, prophets, hierogrammatists, or holy writers, and the like persons in sacerdotal orders.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 291.

HIEROGRAPHICAL.* } adj. [from hierography.] De-HIEROGRAPHICK. } noting sacred-writing.

Apuleius describes the sacred book or ritual, of the Egypt-tians, as partly written in symbolic, and partly in these hierographic characters of arbitrary institution.

Astle, Orig. and Progr. of Writing, ch. 3.

These [characters] were properly what the ancients call hierographical.

Ibid.

HIEROGRAPHY. n. s. [ιερός and γράφω.] Holy writing.

HIEROLOGY.* n. s. [hierologie, Fr. ιερός, and λόγος,
Gr.] Discourse on sacred things.

HIEROMANCY.* n. s. [hieromancie, Fr. ιερομαντεία,
Gr.] Divination by sacrifices.

HIEROPHANT.* n. s. [ιεροφάνης.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To come at the truth of his character, he was severely interrogated by the priest or hierophant.

Warburton, Div. Leg. of Moses, ii. § 4.

To HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology; probably corrupted from haggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.

In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends.

Hale.

Base thou art!

To higgle thus for a few blows,

To gain thy knight an op'lent spouse.

Audibras.

Why all this higgling with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?

Ardennot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER.* n. s. [from higgle.] One who sells provisions by retail.

The temple itself was profaned into a den of thieves, a rendezvous of higglers and drovers.

South, Sermon, iii. 311.

HIGH.* adj. [Goth. hauh; Sax. heah, hry, huh, superl. hægt; Dutch, hoog; whence the old Fr.
* hogue, height.]

1. Long upwards; rising above from the surface, or from the centre: opposed to deep or long downward.

Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved. Becon.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality. Burnet, Theory.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft: opposed to low.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them, And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,

That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast. Dryden.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabrick; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal beings. Locke.

3. Exalted in nature.

The highest faculty of the soul.

Baxter.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest; high sheriff; high steward; high bailiff; high constable.

Herod on his birth-day made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee. St. Mark, vi. 21.

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor.

Shakspeare.

O mortals! blind in fate, who never know

To bear high fortune, or endure the low.

Dryden.

5. Exalted in sentiment.

Solomon — aim'd not beyond

Higher design than to enjoy his state.

Milton, P. R.

6. Difficult; abstruse.

They meet to hear, and answer such high things. Shakspeare.

7. Boastful; ostentatious.

His forces, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred foot. Clarendon.

8. Arrogant; proud; lofty.

Him that hath an high look, and a proud heart, I will not suffer. Psalm ci. 5.

The governor made himself merry with his high and threatening language, and sent him word he would neither give nor receive quarter. Clarendon.

9. Severe; oppressive.

When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen. Bacon.

10. Noble; illustrious.

Trust me I am exceeding weary.

— I had thought, weariness durst not have attacked so high blood. — It doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Shakspeare.

11. Strong; powerful.

The children of Israel went out with an high hand.

Exod. xiv. 8.

Thou hast a mighty arm; strong is Thy hand, and high is Thy right hand. Psalm lxxxix. 13.

With an high arm brought He them out. Acts, xiii. 17.

12. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind.

More ships in calms on a deceitful coast, Or mœn rocks, than in high storms are lost. Denham.

Spiders cannot weave their nets in a high wind, Duppa.

At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;

Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up

In its full fury. Addison, Cato.

13. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.

Nor only tears

Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within

Began to rise; high passions, anger, hate,

Mistrust, suspicion, discord; and shook sore

Their inward state of mind. Milton, P. L.

Canst heavenly minds such high resentment shag,

Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

She had from her infancy discovered so imperious a temper, usually called a high spirit. Tatler, No. 231.

14. Full: complete: applied to time; now used only in cursory speech.

High time now ran it wax for Una fair, To think of those her captive parents dear. Spenser, P. Q.

Sweet warrior, when shall I have peace with you?

High time it is this war now ended were. Spenser.

It was high time to do so; for it was now certain, that forces were already upon their march towards the West. Clarendon.

It was high time for the lords to look about them. Clarendon.

15. Raised to any great degree; as, high pleasure;

high luxury; a high performance; a high colour.

For Solomon, he liv'd at ease, and full

Of honour, wealth, high fare. Milton, P. R.

High sauces and spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker.

16. Advancing in latitude from the line.

They are forced to take their course either high to the North, or low to the South. Abbot, Descript. of the World.

17. At the most perfect state; in the meridian: as,

by the sun it is high noon: whence probably the foregoing expression, high time.

It is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered. Gen. xxix. 7.

18. Far advanced into antiquity.

The nominal observation of the several days of the week, is very high, and as old as the ancient Egyptians, who divided the same according to the seven planets. Brown.

19. Dear; exorbitant in price.

If they must be good at so high a rate, they know they may be so at a cheaper. South.

20. Capital; great; opposed to little: as, high treason, in opposition to petty.

21. Solemn; eminently observable.

That sabbath day was an high day. St. John, xix. 31.

What hath this day deserved? what hath it done,

That it in golden letters should be set,

Among the high tides, in the kalendar? Shakspeare, K. John.

22. Loud; full; a musical term: "an high or shrill sound." Barret. See also the adverb, and On HIGH.

There let the pealing organ blow,

To the full-voic'd quire below,

In service high, and anthems clear. Milton, Il Pens.

23. Zealous in the cause of others; as, he was high in the praise of him; he was a high man for the king.

24. A term applied, some time after the revolution, to the church; which was raised by the dissenters;

in order to break the church party, by dividing the members into high and low; and the opinion raised, that the high joined with the papists, inclined the low to fall in with the dissenters.

Swift, Exam. No. 43.

The terms high church, and low church, as commonly used,

do not so much denote a principle, as they distinguish a party.

They are like words of battle, that have nothing to do with their original signification, but are only given out to keep a body of men together, and to let them know friends from enemies.

Addison, Tatter, No. 220.

He is said, by the author of the Biographia, to have declared himself of the party who had the honourable distinction of high churchmen. Johnson, Life of Yalden.

HIGH * adv.

1. Aloft.

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars

Up to the fiery concave, towering high. Milton, P. L.

2. Aloud.

Praise him upon the high sounding cymbals. Psalm cl. 5.

3. Powerfully.

Had not the Eternal King Omnipotent,

From his strong hold of heaven, high over-ruled

And limited their might. Milton, P. L.

4. In a great or high degree.

My revenges were high bent upon him.

Shakspeare, All's Well.

5. Profoundly; with great degrees of knowledge.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milton, P. L.
On HIGH. † adv.

1. Above; aloft. Dr. Johnson gives high as a substantive, with the following example from Dryden; observing that the substantive, which he defines high place, elevation, is used only with from or on. It is evidently, however, only an adverb; and Dryden's from high merely an elliptical expression of from on high.

The windows from on high are open. Isaiah, xxiv. 18.
The day spring from on high hath visited us. St. Luke, i. 78.
When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive.

Ephes. iv. 8.

The loud
Ethereal trumpet from on high gan blow. Milton, P. L.
Which when the king of gods beheld from high,
He sigh'd. Dryden.

2. Aloud. See the adjective and adverb HIGH.
"Loud, on high, out aloud." Huloet.

Fiercely that stranger forward came, and nigh
Approaching, with bold words and bitter threat
Bad that same boaster, as he mote on high,
To leave to him that lady. Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 16.

To HIGH. * To hasten. See To HIE.

HIGH. † Is much used in composition, with variety of meaning. Dr. Johnson says; but, as Mr. Mason has observed, the number of these compositions would be much diminished, if high were considered as an adverb, which it really is, and were for that reason printed as a separate word. Our poets, however, abundantly use it in composition, as the additions to such words, already given by Dr. Johnson, will show.

HIGH-AIMED. * Having lofty or grand designs.
Thou, — for all
Thy high-aim'd hopes, gain'st but a flaming fall. Crashaw; Transl. of Marino.

HIGH-ARCHED. * Having lofty arches.
The high arch'd roofs were fill'd
With wealth. May, Lucan, B. 10.
Over the foaming deep high-arch'd, a bridge
Of length prodigious. Milton, P. L.

HIGH-ASPIRING. * Having great views.
Some uprear'd, high-aspiring swain. Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 3.
She cheek'd again
The high-aspiring thought. May, Reign of Hen. II. B. 5.

HIGH-BLEST. adj. Supremely happy.
The good which we enjoy from heaven descends
But that from us aught should ascend to heav'n
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem. Milton, P. L.

HIGH-BLOWN. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers on a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
At length broke under me, and now has left me,
Wearied, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me. Shakespeare.

HIGH-BORN. Of noble extraction.
Cast round your eyes
Upon the high-born beauties of the court;
There chuse some worthy partner of your heart. Rowe.

HIGH-BUILT. adj.
1. Of lofty structure.
I know him by his stride,
The giant Harapha of Gath; his look Haughty as is his pile, high-built and proud. Milton, S. A.

2. Covered with lofty buildings.

In dreadful wars
The high-built elephant his castle rears,
Looks down on man below, and strikes the stars. Cresch.

HIGH-CLIMBING. * Difficult to ascend; high to climb.
As when a scout,
Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
All night at last by break of cheerful dawn
Obtains the blow of some high-climbing hill. Milton, P. L.

HIGH-COLOURED. Having a deep or glaring colour.
A fever in a rancid oily blood produces a scorbutick fever, with high-coloured urine, and spots in the skin. Floyer.

HIGH-DAY. * n. s. Fine; befitting an holiday.
Thou spend'st such high-day wit in praising him.
Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

HIGH-DESIGNING. Having great schemes.
His warlike mind, his soul devoid of fear,
His high-designing thoughts were figur'd there. Dryden.

HIGH-EMBOVED. * Highly vaulted; having lofty arches.
But let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloysters pale,
And love the high-embowed roof. Milton, H. Pen.

HIGH-ENGENDERED. * Formed aloft; engendered in the air.
I tax not you, ye elements, with unkindness; —
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HIGH-FED. Pampered.
A favourite mule, high-fed, and in the pride of flesh and mettle, would still be bragging of his family. L'Estrange.

HIGH-FLAMING. Throwing the flame to a great height.
Hecatombs of bulls to Neptune slain,
High-flaming, please the monarch of the main. Pope.

HIGH-FLYER. n. s. One that carries his opinions to extravagance.
She openly professeth herself to be a high-flyer; and it is not improbable she may also be a Papist at heart. Swift.

HIGH-FLOWN. adj. [high and flown, from fly.]
1. Elevated; proud.
This stiff-neck'd pride nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to Reason's lure descend. Denham.

2. Turgid; extravagant.
This fable is a high-flown hyperbole upon the miseries of marriage. L'Estrange.

HIGH-FLUSHED. * Elevated; elated.
That man greatly lives,
Whate'er his fate, or fame, who greatly dies,
High-flush'd with hope, where heroes shall despair. Young, Night, Th. 8.

HIGH-FLYING. Extravagant in claims or opinions.
Clip the wings
Of their high-flying arbitrary kings. Dryden, Virg.

HIGH-GAZING. * Looking upwards.
Don Paillaco cast up his eyes,
Brinsful of thoughts to solve this knot of mine;
But in the fall of his high-gazing sight
He spied two on the road. More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 74.

HIGH-GOING. * Going or moving at a great rate.
How can she brook the rough high-going sea,
Over whose foamy back our ship, well rigg'd
With hope and strong assurance, must transport us. Massinger, Renegado.

HIGH-GROWN. * Having the crop grown to considerable height.
Search every acre in the high-grown field. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HIGH-HEAPED. adj.

1. Covered with high piles.

H I G

- The plenteous board high-heap'd with cates divine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine. Pope.
2. Raised into high piles.
I saw myself the vast unnumber'd store
Of brass, high-heap'd amidst the regal dome. Pope.
- HIGH-HEARTED. Full of heart or courage.
Come, be high-hearted all! Beaum. and Fl. Island Princess.
- HIGH-HEEL'D. Having the heel of the shoe much raised.
By these embroider'd high-heel'd shoes,
She shall be caught as in a noose. Swift.
- HIGH-HUNG. Hung aloft.
By the high-hung taper's light,
I could discern his cheeks were glowing red. Dryden.
- HIGH-METTLED. Proud or ardent of spirit.
He fails not in these to keep a stiff reign on a high-mettled
Pegasus; and takes care not to surfeit here, as he had done on other heads, by an erroneous abundance. Garth.
- HIGH-MINDED. Proud; arrogant.
My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Shakespeare.
Because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith: be not high-minded, but fear. Rom. xi. 20.
- HIGH-PLACED. Elevated in situation or rank.
High-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakespeare.
- HIGH-PRINCIPLED. Extravagant in notions of politics.
This seems to be the political creed of all the high-principled men I have met with. Swift.
- HIGH-RAISED.
1. Raised aloft.
On high-rai'd decks the haughty Belgians ride. Dryden, Ann. Mir.
2. Raised with great conceptions.
To our high-rai'd phantasy present
That undisturbed song of pure conceit,
Aye sung before the sapphire-colour'd throne
To Him that sits thereon. Milton, Ode Sol. Musick.
- HIGH-REACHING.
1. Reaching upwards.
At last appears
Hell bounds, high-reaching to the horrid roof. Milton, P. L.
2. Ambitious; aspiring.
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
- HIGH-REARED. Of lofty structure.
The prayers of holy saints, and wronged souls,
Like high-rear'd bulwarks, stand before our faces. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
- HIGH-RED. Deeply red.
Oil of turpentine, though clear as water, being digested upon the purely white sugar of lead, has in a short time afforded a high-red tincture. Boyle on Colours.
- HIGH-REPENTED. Repented of to the utmost.
My high-repented blames,
Dear sovereign, pardon to me. Shakespeare, All's Well.
- HIGH-RESOLV'D. Resolute.
With a power
Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil,
They hither march amain. Titus Andronicus.
- HIGH-ROOFED. Having a lofty roof.
The shade
High-roof'd, and walks beneath, and alleys brown. Milton, P. R.
- HIGH-SEASONED. Piquant to the palate.
Be sparing also of salt in the seasoning of all his victuals, and use him not to high-seasoned meats. Locke.
- HIGH-SEATED. Fixed above.
Heaven's high-seated top. Milton, P. L.
- HIGH-SIGHTED. Always looking upwards.
Let high-sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. Shakespeare.
- HIGH-SPIRITED. Bold; daring; insolent.

H I G

- HIGH-STOMACHED. Obstinate; lofty.
High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire;
In rage, deaf as the sea, hasty as fire. Shakespeare.
- HIGH-SWELLING. Swelling to a great height.
Desire, like stormy wind,
Stirs up high-swelling waves of hope and fear,
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. iii. 9.
- HIGH-SWOLN. Swoln to the utmost.
The broken rancour of your high-swoln hearts. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
O, let my high-swoln grief distil on you
The saddest drops of a parental dew. Dr. King's Poem, p. 60.
- HIGH-TASTED. Gustful; piquant.
Flatt'ry still in sugar'd words betrays,
And poison in high-tasted meats conveys. Denham.
- HIGH-TOWERED. Having lofty towers.
Huge cities and high-tower'd. Milton, P. R.
- HIGH-VICED. Enormously wicked.
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakespeare.
- HIGH-WROUGHT.
1. Agitated to the utmost.
It is a high-wrought flood;
I cannot, 'twixt the heaven and the main,
Descry a sail. Shakespeare, Othello.
2. Accurately finished; nobly laboured.
'Thou triumph'st, victor of the high-wrought day,
And the pleas'd dame, soft smiling, lead'st away. Pope.
- HIGHLAND. n. s. [high and land.] Mountainous region.
By their actions we might rather judge them to be a generation of highland thieves and redshanks.
Milton, Observ. on the Art. of Peace.
The wondering moon
Beholds her brother's steeds beneath her own;
The highlands smok'd, cleft by the piercing rays. Addison.
Ladies in the highlands of Scotland use this discipline to their children in the midst of Winter, and find that cold water does them no harm. Locke.
- HIGHLANDER. n. s. [from highland.] An inhabitant of mountains; a mountaineer.
His cabinet council of highlanders. Addison.
- HIGHLANDISH. adj. [from highland.] Denoting a mountainous country.
The country round is altogether so highlandish, that sometimes, when I waked from my little reveries, I really thought myself at home. Drummond, Trav. p. 10.
- HIGHLY. adv. [from high.]
1. With elevation as to place and situation; aloft.
2. In a great degree.
Whatever expedients can allay those heats, which break us into different factions, cannot but be useful to the publick, and highly tend to its safety. Addison.
It cannot but be highly requisite for us to enliven our faith,
by dwelling often on the same considerations. Atterbury.
3. Proudly; arrogantly; ambitiously.
What thou wouldst highly
That thou wouldst holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongly win. Shakespeare.
4. With esteem; with estimation.
Every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think. Rom. xii. 3.
- HIGHMOST. adj. [An irregular word.] Highest;
topmost.
Now is the sun upon the highmost hill
Of this day's journey. Shakespeare.
- HIGHNESS. n. s. [from high.]
1. Elevation above the surface; altitude; loftiness.
2. The title of princes, anciently of kings.
Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than that your highness offer'd. Shakespeare.

How long in vain had nature striv'd to frame
A perfect princess, ere her highness came?

Beauty and greatness are eminently joined in your royal highness.

3. Dignity of nature; supremacy.

Destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure.

4. Excellence; value.

The park for a cheerful rising ground, for groves and brow-ings for the deer, for rivulets of water, may compare with any for its highness in the whole land.

HIGH. † [This is an imperfect verb, used only in the preterite tense with a passive signification:
hagan, to call, Saxon; heissen, German. Dr.
Johnson. — This is not accurate. For, that it is not confined to the past tense, the laughable prologue alone in the Midsummer Night's Dream might prove; but it was formerly not uncommon in other forms of passive signification.]

1. Is called; is named; am named.

Now hight I Philostrate. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Bright is her hew, and Geraldine she hight.

Id. Surrey, Songs, &c. (1587,) fol. 5. b.

This grisly beast, which by name lion hight,
The trusty Thisby, coming first by night,
Did scare away, or rather did affright,

2. To be called.

I dare not beknowe min own name;
But there as I was wont to hight Arcite,
Now hight I Philostrate. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

3. Was named; was called.

The city of the great king hight it well,
Wherein eternal peace and happiness doth dwell.

Within this homestead liv'd, without a peer
For crowing loud, the noble Chanticleer,
So hight her cock. Dryden, Nut's Priest.

4. It is sometimes used as a participle passive: called; named. It is now obsolete, except in burlesque writings, Dr. Johnson says; but Crose notices it as used in the North for called.

Amongst the rest a good old woman was,
Hight mother Hubbard. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

On parchment scraps used, and Wormius hight.

To HIGHT. * v. a. [hagan, Sax. heta, Su. Goth. haitan, gahaitan, M. Goth. to promise, and to command. At first, this word was written hete.]

1: To promise. Still used in Cumberland, according to Pegge.

He had hold his way, as he had hight.

2. To entrust.

The gates stood open wide,
Yet charge of them was to a porter hight. Spenser, F. Q. l. iv. 6.

3. To command; to direct.

But the sad steele seiz'd not where it was hight
Upon the child, but somewhat short did fall.

On HIGHT. * adv. Aloud. See on HIGH.

He spake these same words all on hight. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

HIGHT. * n. s. [Sax. hih8.] Height. See HEIGHT.

That to the hight of this great argument,
I may assert Eternal Providence,
And say the hight of the old building, which Wykeham made use of, was about sixteen feet in hight.

HIGHWAY. * n. s. [high and way.] The utmost flow of the tide.

They have a way of draining lands that lie below the high-water, and are something above the low-water mark. Spenser.
HIGHWAY. † n. s. [high and way.] "As the Romans always elevated their publick roads above the circumjacent country, by a causeway of stone, or else by earth thrown up, such roads came to be called by the name, which they have retained, of the highway." Blakeway's Hist. of Shrewsbury.]

1. Great road; publick path.

So few there be
That chuse the narrow path or seek the right:
All keep the broad highway, and take delight
With many rather for to go astray.

Two inscriptions give a great light to the histories of Appian, who made the highway, and of Fabius the dictator.

Entering on a broad highway,
Where power and titles scatter'd lay,
He strove to pick up all he found.

2. Figuratively, a train of action with apparent consequence.

I could mention more trades we have lost, and are in the highway to lose.

HIGHWAYMAN. n. s. [highway and man.] A robber that plunders on the publick roads.

'Tis like the friendship of pickpockets and highwaymen, that observe strict justice among themselves.

A remedy like that of giving my money to an highwayman, before he attempts to take it by force, to prevent the sin of robbery.

HIGHLAND. n. s. An herb.

To HILARATE. * v. a. [Lat. hilaro. We now use exhilarate.] To make merry.

HILARITY. † n. s. [hilaritas, Latin. Merriment; gayety.
Cheer up the countenance, expel austerity, bring in hilarity.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is,
a sober incalescence and regulated estimation from wine.

HILARY Term. * [In law.] The term which begins on the twenty-third of January: Terminus Sancti Hilarii.

HILD. in Elrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady: so Hildbert is a noble lord; Muthild, an heroick lady.

HILDING. † n. s. [hild, Saxon, signifies a lord; perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from hinderling, degenerate, Hughes's
Spenser. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke and Mr.
Malone concur in deducing this word from the Sax.
hylban, to crouch, to bend down; and the former assimilates this derivation to that which he gives of coward, viz. the English cower. But that word of shame is the ancient French couard, which took its origin from cow, the tail, as the Italian codardo has from cauda, the same; and as the low Latin caudatus has been applied to the timid and pusillanimous. V. Du Cange.]

1. A sorry, paltry, cowardly fellow.

He was some hilding fellow, that had stolen
The horse he rode on.
If your lordship had him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.

A base slave;
A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth.

2. It is used likewise for a quantity of money.

Laura, to his lady, was born a hilding.
Helen and Hero, hildings and hildings.
This hilding toy, this hilding scorn,
And sets us all at naught.

HIM

HILL.† n. s. [hil, Sax. from the verb hulan, or hejan, to cover. "Any heap of earth, or stone, &c. by which the plain or level surface of the earth is covered." Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 382.]

An elevation of ground less than a mountain.

My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;
Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love. Sidney.

Jerusalem is seated on two hills,
Of height unlike, and turned side to side. Fairfax.

Three sides are sure imbar'd with crags and hills,
The rest is easy, scant to rise espy'd;
But mighty bulwarks fence the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art. Fairfax.

When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill, looks round to view. Granville.

A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral, which, by a plastic virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow. Chycne.

To HILL. v. a. [Sax. hulan; Goth. huljan, to cover.
See To HELE.] To cover. "A bed-hilling is a quilt or coverlet, in the north of England, according to Grose.

With the clothes of hir love
She hilled all hir bedde aboute. Gower, Conf. Am. R. v.

Ye shall enquire yf there be any house in the wardle, that is hyllid with any other thyng than tyle, or slat, or lede, for peryl of fire. Arnold's Chron. sign. F. 5. b.

Those mountains
Hill'd with snow. Carew, Poems, p. 145.

HILLED.* adj. [from hill.] Having hills.

The power, thus stigmatized, is a power seated in the seven-hilled city. Bp. Hurd on the Proph. Sermon. li.

HILLING.* n. s. [from To Hill.]

1. A covering; as, "the hylling of a house." Prompt.
Parv. A bed-hilling. See To HILL.

2. An accumulation.
Cease then, all you that aim at the hilling up of fatal gold, and employ your hours in a more noble traffick. Hewyt, Sermon. p. 41.

HILLOCK. n. s. [from hill.] A little hill.

Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:
what, judge you, doth a hillock show by the lofty Olympus! Sidney.

Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row belts, on hillocks green. Milton, l' All.

This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions. Addison on Italy.

HILLY.† adj. [from hill.]

1. Full of hills; unequal in the surface.

Towards the hilly corners of Druma remain yet her very Aborigines, thrust amongst an assembly of mountains. Howell.
Climbing to a hilly steep,

He views his herds in vales afar. Dryden.

Lo! how the Norick plains
Rise hilly, with large piles of slaughter'd knights. Philips.

Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chuse to travel through a plain one. Addison.

2. Like a hill; lofty.

Better to have liv'd
Poor and obscure, and never seal'd the top
Of hilly empire, than to die with fear
To be thrown headlong down almost as soon
As we have reach'd it. Beaumont and Fl. Prophets.

HILT. n. s. [hilt, Saxon, from healban, to hold.]

The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.

Now sits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns, and coronets. Shakespeare.

Take thou the hilt,

And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays

A ruddy gleam; whose hilt, a silver blaze. Pope, Odyssey.

HIN

HILTED.* adj. [from hilt.] Having a hilt; as, a silver-hilted sword.

HIM.† [him, Saxon; imma, Goth.]

1. The oblique case of he.

Me he restored unto my office, and him he hanged. Gen. xli.

2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.

The subjunctive mood hath evermore some conjunction joined with him. Accidence.

3. Sometimes used for himself.

Sweet touch, the engine that Love's bow doth bend,
The sense wherewith he feels him deified.

Chapman, Ovid's Banquet, &c. (1595).

The hungry Tantal might have fill'd him now.

P. Fletcher, Purp. Id. v. 64.

4. HIM thought. An ancient form of speech of the same construction as methought; meaning, he thought.

When he [St. George] sawe the arrayes of that danyssel, him thought that it shold be a woman of grette worth.

Lib. Restiv. sign. k. ij.

Him thought he heard the softly whistling wind.

Peirce, Tass. xliii. 40.

Him thought he by the brook of Cherith stood. Milton, P. H.

HIMSELF. pron. [him and self.]

1. In the nominative the same as he, only more empha-tical, and more expressive of individual personality.

'T was a sparing speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than himself.

Bacon.

With shame remembers, while himself was one

Of the same herd, himself the same had done. Denham.

2. It is added to a personal pronoun or noun by way of emphatical discrimination.

He himself returned again. Judges, iii. 19.

God himself is with us for our captain. 2 Chron. xiii. 12.

3. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.

She is advanc'd
Above the clouds, as high as heaven himself. Shakespeare.

4. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signifi-

cation

David hid himself in the field. 1 Sam. xx. 24.

5. It is sometimes not reciprocal.

I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit set awork by a reproveable badness in himself. Shakespeare.

Nothing in nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and grieve his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy. South.

By HIMSELF. Alone; unaccompanied.

Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself. 1 Kings, xviii. 6.

HIN. n. s. [hin, Saxon.] A measure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints.

With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil. Exod. xxix. 40.

HIND. adj. compar. hinder; superl. hindmost.

[hynan, Saxon.] Backward; contrary in position to the face; as, hind legs. See HINDER and HIND-

MOST.

Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back so far till its head comes to touch its hind part, and so with its armour gathers itself into a ball. Ray.

The stag

Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,

And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore. Pope.

HIND. n. s. [hinde, Saxon, from hinnus, Latin.]

1. The she to a stag; the female of red deer,

How he slew, with glancing dart amiss,

A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy

Did love as life. Spenser, F. Q.

Canst thou mark when the hinds do calve?

Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,

Not though the brazen-footed hind he slew. Dryden.

2. [hine, Sax.] A servant.

A couple of Ford's knaves, his hind, were called for by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul cloaths, to Datchet-lane. Shakespeare.

3. [hinsman, Saxon.] A peasant; a boor; a mean rustick.

The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before,
To reap the harvest their ripe ears did yield
Now look like those, when rolling thunders roar,
And sheets of lightning blast the standing field. Dryden.

He cloth'd himself in coarse array,
A labouring hind in shew. Dryden, Fob.

HINDBERRIES. † n. s. [Sax. hinsberflan.] The same as raspberries, according to Ainsworth; rather, perhaps, bramble-berries.

To HINDER. †, v. a. [hinsman, Sax. hinderen, Dutch; probably from the Goth. hindar, behind.] To obstruct; to stop; to let; to impede.

Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way. Gen. xiv. 56.

The whole world shined with clear light, and none were hindered in their labour. Wisd. xvii. 20.

If the hins were hindered only by entreaty, the hinderer is not tied to restitution, because entreaty took not liberty away from the giver. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Softude damps thought and wit; too much company dissipates and hinders it from fixing. Temple.

What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the same right. Locke.

To HINDER. v. n. To raise hinderances; to cause impediment.

You minims of *hinder*ing knot-grass made. Shakespeare.

This objection hinders not but that the heroick action of same commander, enterprised for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be written. Dryden.

HINDER. adj. [from hind.] That is in a position contrary to that of the face: opposed to fore.

Bears, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet, and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement. Sidney.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back. Addison.

HINDERANCE. n. s. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction: with of, sometimes with to before the thing hindered; with to before the person.

False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices against the hinderances of them, and those practices new opinions more pernicious than the first; yea, most extremely sometimes opposite to the first. Hooker.

They must be in every Christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance. Hooker.

What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done? Dryden.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hind'rance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hinderances out of the way that leads to justice. Atterbury.

HINDERER. † n. s. [from hinder.] He or that which hinders or obstructs.

Not enterprising to run afore, and so by their rashness become the greatest hinderers of such things, as they more arrogantly than godly would seem, by their own private authority, most hotly to set forward.

K. Edward VI. Prov. before the Order of Communion, (1547.)

A gaduator commonly proves an hinderer; and, by his covinous clashing, cloth often dig his partner's grave. Fuller, Holy State, p. 273.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow. May.

HINDERLING. † n. s. [from hind or hinder.] Dr. Johnson gives no example of the word; and Mr. H. Tooke, in his remarks on hidding, (Div. Purl. ii. 315.)

doubts the existence of hinderling.] A paltry, worthless, degenerate animal.

[From this root [hind] comes the Anglo-Sax. hinsberflin, properly one who comes far behind his ancestors, familie sua opprobrium. In Legibus Edw. Confess. c. 35. "Occidentales Saxonici habent in proverbio summi despectus hinderling, i. e. omni honestate dejecta et recedens imago;" the scandal of his family. Callander's Two Anc. Scot. Poems, p. 56.

HINDERMOST. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost. Genesis.

Like to an enter'd tide, they all rush by,
And leave you hindermost. Shakespeare.

HINDMOST. adj. [hind and most.] The last; the lag; that which comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man, Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind. Deut. xxv. 18.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages east,
The first of this, and hindmost of the last,
A losing gamester. Dryden.

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmost, hell he said, and run. Pope.

HINDOO. † n. s. [Persian. "Hindoo for the people, and Hindustan for the country, now generally used by natives and foreigners, were probably given them by their neighbours the Persians. The river improperly called the Indus is quite out of the question, either as giving a name to the country, as many have imagined, or borrowing one from it, according to the opinion of the late Alexander Dow, Esq. in the dissertation prefixed to his Hist. of Indostan, p. xxxi. l. 12.; who in the same page asserts, that 'the Hindoos are so called from Indoo or Hindoo, which in the Shanscrita language signifies the Moon.' It is true, that cendoo is one of the names of the moon, but not hindoo. Let it suffice, that there are such words as Hindoo, or Hindustan, in the Sanskreet language. In Persian we find hind for the country, and hindoo for the people." Wilkins's Heetopades, 1787. p. 332.] An aboriginal inhabitant of Hindostan.

The British laws may, in some degree, be softened and tempered by a moderate attention to the peculiar and national prejudices of the Hindoo. Hathed, Code of Gentoo Laws, Pref.

HINDERANCE. † See HINDERANCE.

HINGE. † n. s. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.

Dr. Johnson. — I believe no one ever before saw or heard of hingle and hangle. All the three words, however, are merely the past participle of the verb hangan, to hang. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 358. — Mr. Tooke might have found "hinge or hingell" in Barret's Alveary, 1580. Skinner and others have also deduced this word from the verb hang. In Scotland hing is still used for hang; and Pegge says, in the north of England also.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

At the gate
Of heaven arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning. Milton, P. L.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divorce,
And where the way they cannot find, they force. Donham.

Heaven's imperious queen shot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd. Dryden.

H I P

2. The cardinal points of the world, East, West, North, and South.

Nor slept the winds
Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world.

Milton, P. R.

If when the moon is in the hinge at East,
The birth breaks forward from its native rest;
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This station gives.

Creech, Manilius.

3. A governing rule or principle.

The other hinge of punishment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of five and twenty, should pay the third part of their revenue.

Temple.

4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a state of irregularity and disorder.

The man's spirit is out of order and off the hinges; and till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually disquieted.

Tillotson.

Metlinks we stand on ruins, Nature shakes
About us, and this universal frame
So loose, that it but wants another push
To leap from off its hinges.

Dryden.

To HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with hinges.

2. To bend as an hinge.

Be thou a flatterer now, and hinge thy knee;
And let his very breath, whom thou dost observe,
Blow off thy cap.

Shakespeare.

To HINGE. * v. n. To turn as upon a hinge; to hang: as, the settlement of the matter hinges upon this point.

To HINNATE. * v. n. [Latin, hinnio.] To neigh.
To HINNY. } Cockeram.

He neigheth and hinneth; all is but hinnying sophistry.

B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.

To HINT. † v. a. [enter, to implant, French. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson. — From the hand. Sere-nius. — From the Norm. Sax. henda, to take hold on any thing. Rev. Mr. Lemon. — From hentan, to take hold of; hint being something taken. Mr.
H. Tooke.] To bring to mind by a slight mention or remote allusion: to mention imperfectly.

For examples out of other histories, to hint a few of them.

South, Sermon. i. 289.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike.

Pope.

In waking whispers, and repeated dreams,
To hint pure thought, and warn the favour'd soul.

Thomson.

To HINT at. To allude to; to touch slightly upon.

Speaking of Augustus's actions, he still remembers that agriculture ought to be some way hinted at throughout the whole poem.

Addison on the Georgicks.

HINT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Faint notice given to the mind; remote allusion; distant insinuation.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart.

South, Sermon.

2. Suggestion; intimation.

Upon this hint I spake;

She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd. Shakespeare, Othello.

Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them.

Addison.

HIP. † n. s. [Goth. hup; Dutch, huppe; Sax. hipe.
pipe-baner-ee, the sciatica; or hip gout.]

1. The joint of the thigh.

How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

Shakespeare.

Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The haunch; the flesh of the thigh.

H I P

So shepherds use

To set the same mark on the hip

Both of their sound and rotten sheep.

Hudibras.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,

And ranch'd his hips with one continu'd wound.

Dryden.

3. To have on the HIP. [A low phrase.] To have an advantage over another. It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or haunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.

If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cherish

For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,

I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip.

Shakespeare, Othello.

4. Hip and Thigh. A phrase used in our present version of the Bible, and sometimes in conversation, denoting perhaps complete overthrow.

He smote them hip and thigh with a great slaughter.

Judges, xv. 8.

Sampson hip and thigh, pell-mell, haphy with his leg and foot only, slew the Philistines with a great slaughter.

Ep. Richardson on the Q. Test. p. 66.

HIP. n. s. [from heopa, Saxon.] The fruit of the briar or the dogrose.

Eating hips and drinking watery foam. Spenser, Hobb. Tale.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;

The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips.

Shakespeare.

Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold winters.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To HIP. v. a. [from the noun.] To sprain or shoot the hip.

His horse was hipp'd.

Shakespeare.

HIP. interject. An exclamation, or calling to one;
the same as the Latin eho, heus!

Ainsworth.

HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

Your different tastes divide our poets cares;

One foot the sock, t' other the buskin wears:

Thus while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do't,

Like Volcuis hip-hop in a single boot.

Congreve.

HIP. } adj. A corruption of hypochondriack.

HIPPESH. } Ainsworth.

HIPPED. * adj. [from the corrupt word hip.] Melancholy.

To some coffee-house I stray

For news, the mauna of a day;

And from the hipp'd discourses gather,

That politicks go by the weather.

Green's Spleen, p. 10.

HIPHALT. * adj. [hip and halt.] Lame. See HIP-SHOT.

Vulcans of whom, I spake,

He had a courbe upon the back,

And thereto he was hippe-halte.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

HIPPOLAMP. * n. s. [ἵππολαμπος, Gr. hippocampe,
Fr.] A sea-horse.

Jove's bright lamps

Guiding from rocks her chariot's hippocampe.

Browne.

HIPPOCENTAUR. n. s. [ἵπποκένταυρος; hippocentaure, French.] A fabulous monster, half horse and half man.

How are poetical fictions, how are hippocentaurs and chimeras to be imaged, which are things quite out of nature, and whereof we can have no notion?

Dryden.

HIPPOCRASS. n. s. [hypocras, French; quasi vinum
Hippocratis.] A medicated wine.

Sack and the well-spiced hippocrass, the wine,

Wassail the bowl, with ancient ribbons fine.

King.

HIPPOCRATES'S SLEWE. n. s. A woollen bag made by joining the two opposite angles of a square piece of flannel, used to strain syrups and decoctions for clarification.

Quincy.

HIPPOCRATISM. * n. s. [from Hippocrates.] The philosophy of Hippocrates, applied to the science of medicine; or the doctrine of Hippocrates, considered with regard to the means of prolonging life.

Chambers.

HIPPOTAME.* n. s. [ἵπποταμος, Gr. hippopotame, Fr. Spenser has departed from analogy in writing hippodame.] A sea-horse.

Infernal hugs, centaurs, fiends, hippodames.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. 15. 50.

That his swift chariot might have passage wyde,
Which foure great hippodames did draw, in teme-wise tyde.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 40.

HIPPOTRONE.* n. s. [ἵππος, a horse, and τρέμας, a course, Gr. hippodrome, Fr.] A course for chariot and horse races, or exercises.

Within the hippodrome many of the cavalry use to ride.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 162.

Stukeley supposes these two banks to have formed the ground for a British hippodrome, or horse-race.

Warton, Hist. of Kidding-ton, p. 70.

HIPPOTRIFF.* n. s. [ἵππος and τρέμας; hippotriff, French.] A winged horse; a being imagined by Ariosto.

He caught him up, and without wing
Of hippotriff bore through the air sublime.

Milton, P. R.

A centaur, hippotriff, and a flying dragon, are things that were never seen.

Fleetwood, Ess. on Miracles, p. 185.

HIPPOUTAMUS. n. s. [ἵππος and τάμας.] The river horse. An animal found in the Nile.

HIPSHOT. adj. [hip and shot.] Sprained or dislocated in the hip.

Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hip-shot? says the goose to the gosling. L' Etrange.

HIPWORT. n. s. [hip and wort.] A plant.

Ainsworth.

HIR.* [Sax. hýra, of them.] In our old language is their.

To HIRE. v. a. [hýran, Saxon; from the Cymr. hur, merces. Serenius.]

1. To procure any thing for temporary use at a certain price.

His sordid avarice rakes

In excrements, and hires the jakes.

Dryden, Juv.

2. To engage a man to temporary service for wages.

They weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith, and he maketh it a god.

Isaiah, xlv. 6.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms

Are hir'd to bear their staves.

Shakspeare.

3. To bribe.

Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,

Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,

Mov'd that the ramparts might be broken down.

Dryden.

4. To engage for pay: with the reciprocal word.

They that were full, hired out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceased.

1 Sam. ii. 5.

5. To let; to set for a time at a certain price. This, to prevent ambiguity, has sometimes the particle out; as, he hired out his house to strangers. Dr. Johnson. — This sense seems to be the primary one; at least, it is very ancient.

A man plant'd a vineyard, and set an hedge about it, and dais'd a lake, and biddid a tour, and hired it to tilleris, [in the present version, let it out.]

Wickiffe, St. Mark, xii. 1.

HIRE. n. s. [hýre, Saxon.]

1. Reward or recompence paid for the use of any thing.

2. Wages paid for service.

Great thanks and goodly meed to that good sire,

He, thence departing, gave for his pains hire.

Spenser, F. Q.

I have five hundred crowns,

The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father.

Shakspeare.

Though little was their hire, and light their gain,
Yet somewhat to their share he threw.

Dryden.

All arts and artists Theseus could command,
Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame.

Dryden.

HIRELESS.* adj. [hire and less.] Without hire: not rewarded; not recompensed; not expecting hire.

Your misbelief my hireless value scorns.

Davequant, Gondibert, i. 3.

Poetry,

Oh hireless science, and of all alone

The liberal; meanly the rest each state

In pension treats; but this depends on none.

Davenant, Gondibert, ii. 5.

HIRELING. n. s. [from hire.]

1. One who serves for wages.

The hireling longs to see the shades descend,

That with the tedious day his toil might end,

And he his pay receive.

Sandys.

In the framing of Hiero's ship there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year, besides many other hirelings for carriages.

Wilkins, Dædalus.

'Tis frequent here to see a freeborn son

On the left hand of a rich hireling run.

Dryden, Juv.

2. A mercenary; a prostitute.

Now she shades thy evening walk with bays,

No hireling she, no prostitute to praise.

Pope.

HIRELING. adj. Serving for hire; venal; mercenary; doing what is done for money.

Then trumpets, torches, and a tedious crew

Of hireling mourners for his funeral due.

Dryden.

HIRER. n. s. [from hire.]

1. One who uses any thing, paying a recompence; one who employs others, paying wages.

2. In Scotland it denotes one who keeps small horses to let.

HIRST.* See HURST.

HIRSUTE.* adj. [hirsutus, Lat.]

1. Rough; rugged; shaggy.

There are bulbous, fibrous, and hirsute roots: the hirsute is a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

An hirsute beggar's brat, that lately fed on scraps.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

Their bodies, that are affected with this universal melancholy, are most part black; — hirsute they are and lean.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 201.

2. Of coarse manners; of rough behaviour.

He looked elderly, and was cynical and hirsute in his behaviour.

Life of A. Wood, p. 109.

HIRSUTENESS.* n. s. [from hirsute.] Hairiness.

Leanness, hirsuteness, broad veins, much hair on the browe, &c. shew melancholy.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 58.

HIS. pronoun possessive. [hýr, Saxon; i. e. his.]

1. The masculine possessive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.

England his approaches makes us fierce

As waters to the sucking of a gulph.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

If much you note him,

You shall offend him, and extend his passion.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Heav'n and yourself

Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,

And all the better is it for the maid:

Your part in her you could not keep from death;

But heav'n keeps his part in eternal life.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

If our Father carry authority with such disposition as he bears this last surrender of his, it will but offend us.

Shakspeare.

He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself; nobody can deny but the nourishment is his.

Locke.

HIS

HIS

When'er I stoop, he offers at a kiss;
And when my arms I stretch, he stretches his. Addison.
2. It was anciently used in a neutral sense, where we now say its.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Not the dreadful spout,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear,
In his descent. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

There's not the smallest orb, which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims. Shakespeare.

This rule is not so general, but that it admitteth his exceptions.
Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Opium loseth some of his poisonous quality, if it be vapoured out, mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.

3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case: as the man his ground, for the man's ground. It is now rarely thus used, as its use proceeded probably from a false opinion that the s formative of the genitive was his contracted. Dr. Johnson. — "Christ his sake," in our liturgy, is a mistake either of the printers, or of the compilers. "My paper is the Ulysses his bow, in which every man of wit or learning may try his strength." Addison, Guard. No. 98. This is no slip of Mr. Addison's pen: he gives us his opinion upon this point very explicitly in another place. "The same single letter [s] on many occasions," says Addison, "does the office of a whole word, and represents the his and her of our forefathers." Spect. No. 135. "The latter instance," Lowth observes, "might have shewn him, how groundless this notion is: for it is not easy to conceive, how the letter s added to a feminine noun should represent the word her, any more than it should the word their added to a plural noun; as, the children's bread. But the direct derivation of this case from the Saxon genitive case is sufficient of itself to decide this matter." Lowth, Introduct. to Eng. Grammar.

Where is this man, and now? who lives to age
Fit to be made Methusalem his page? Donne.

By thy fond consort, by thy father's cares,
By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope.

4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man's.

Were I king,
I should cut off the noblest of their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shakespeare.

5. Angently before self.
Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.

HISPID.* adj. [old Fr. hispid; Lat. hispidus.] Rough.

John of the wilderness? the hairy child?
The hispid Thibide? or what Satyr wild?

Merr, Verses pref. to Hall's Poems, 1646.

7. To HISS. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.]

1. To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames, and cool'd glowing hot, in that surge, like a horse-shoe; think of that; hissing hot. Shakespeare.

The merchants shall hiss at thee. Ezek. xxvii. 36.

See the furies arise:
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair. Dryden, Alexander's Feast.

Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

2. To condemn at a public exhibition; which is sometimes done by hissing.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace;
Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chase. Sandys.
To HISS. v. a. [hiscan, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing, to explode.

Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace. Ecclus. xxii. 1.

She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage. More.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hissed out of all the courts as ridiculous? Collier on Duelling.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I
Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my grave. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

What's the newest grief?
— That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Each minute teems a new one. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

HISS. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.

He would have spoke,
But hiss for hiss return'd with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton, P. L.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard
On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss, the sound
Of public scorn! Milton, P. L.

Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears
Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope.

HISSING.* n. s. [from hiss.]

1. The noise of a serpent, and of some other animals.

Being scared with beasts that passed by, and hissing of serpents, they died for fear. Wisdom, xvii. 9.

2. An object of hisses or disgrace.

To make their land desolate, and a perpetual hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head. Jerem. xviii. 16.

HISSINGLY.* adv. [from hissing.] With whistling sound. Sherwood.

HIST.* interj. [Of this word I know not, the original: some have thought it a corruption of hush, hush it, hush; but I have heard that it is an Irish verb commanding silence. Dr. Johnson. — Others suppose it to be the Latin interjection of silence, st; considered as an abbreviation of sta, stand, or of siste, stop. But it is most probably from our own word whist, be silent; whist, huist, hist. See To WHIST.] An exclamation commanding silence.

The mute Silence hist along,
'Less Philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton, Il Pens.

Hist, hist, says another that stood by, away, doctor; for here's a whole pack of dismsals coming. Swift.

HISTORIAL.* adj. [historial, Fr.] Our elder word for historical.

An historia' thing notable. Chaucer, Doct. of Phys. Tale.

HISTORIAN. n. s. [historicus, Latin; historien, French.]

A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompense
Equal, have I to render thee, divine Historian! Milton, P. L.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison.

Not added years on years my task ould close,
The long historian of my country's woes.

Pope.

HISTORICAL. } adj. [historique, Fr. historicus,
HISTORICK. } Lat.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer.

Spenser.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known.

Burnet, Theory.

Here rising bold, the patriot's honest face;
There warriors frowning in historick brass.

Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare.

Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.] In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person.

Hooker.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God?

Hooker.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him.

Pope, Essay on Homer.

HISTORIED. * adj. [from history.] Recorded in history; containing history. See STORIED.

HISTORIER. * n. s. [from history.] An old word for an historian.

Huntingdoniensis, doctor Poynet's historier, reporteth of priests' marriages.

Martin on the Marr. of Privats, (1554) M. ii.

To HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.] To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, historify

Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me.

Sidney.

The third age they term historicon; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

HISTORIOGRAPHER. n. s. [ιστορια and γραφω; historiographie, Fr.] An historian; a writer of history.

The method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer.

Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of persons famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers?

Addison.

I put the journals into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. s. [ιστορια and γραφω.] The art or employment of an historian.

HISTORIOLOGY. * n. s. [ιστορια, and λογος, description, discourse.] Knowledge of history; explanation of history.

Cockeram.

HISTORY. * n. s. [ιστορια, Gr. historia, Lat. historia, French; from ισω, skilful, knowing; whence ισογειω, to inquire, to explore, to know by examination, and to relate.]

1. A narration of events and facts delivered with dignity.

Justly Caesar scorns the poet's lays;
It is to history he trusts for praise.

Pope.

2. Narration & relation.

The history part lay within a little room.
What historian of toil could I declare?

Wiseman.

But still long-wetted nature wants repair.

Pope.

3. The knowledge of facts and events.

History, so far as it relates to the affairs of the Bible, is necessary to divines.

Watts.

HISTORY PIECE. n. s. A picture representing some memorable event.

His works resemble a large history piece, where even the less important figures have some convenient place.

Pope.

HISTRION. * n. s. [Fr. histrion; Lat. histrion.] A player.

Cockeram.

HISTORICAL. * adj. [Fr. histrionique, from the HISTRIONICK. } Lat. histrion.] Befitting the stage; suitable to a player; becoming a buffoon; theatrical.

A histrionical contempt

Of what a man fears most.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

Histrionical gestures, representing unto us Apollo's solemnities in his temple at Delos.

Peter Smart, Serm. at Durham, (1628), p. 24.

Such naked and forlorn Quakers act a part much more cunning, false, and histrionical, than those that least affect such pitiful simplicities.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 164.

Nor may this be called an histrionike parade, or stately visard and hypocrisy.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 168.

Though the world be histrionical, and most men live ironically, yet be thou what thou singly art, and personate only thyself.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 20.

In consequence of his love and his knowledge of the histrionic art, he taught the characters over which he presided to act plays.

Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 285.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from histrionical.] Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

HISTRIONISM. * n. s. [from histrion.] Theatrical or feigned representation.

When personations shall cease, and histrionism of happiness be over; when reality shall rule.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 24.

To HIT. * v. a. [from ictus, Latin, Minsheu; from hitte, Danish, to throw at random, Junius. From the Su. Goth. hitta, invenire, pertingere. Serenius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken; and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived.

Sidney.

His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly.

South.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?

Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?

If he be blind, how hitteth he so right?

Sidney.

So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand.

South.

3. To attain; to reach; not to fail; used of tentative experiments.

Were I but twenty-one,

Your father's image is so hit in you,

His very air, that I should call you brother,

As I did him.

Shakespeare.

Search every comment that your care can find,

Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind.

Roscommon.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns.

Locke.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features.

Atterbury.

4. To suit; to be conformable to.

Hail, divinest melancholy!

Whose saintly visage is too bright

To hit the sense of human sight.

Milton Il Pens.

5. To strike; to catch by the right bait; to touch properly.

There you hit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly; that argument never fails with him.

Dryden.

6. To HIT off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

HIT

What prince soever can hit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Temple.

7. To HIT out. To perform by good luck.
Having the sound of ancient poets ringing in his ears, he mought needs in singing hit out some of their tunes. Spenser.

To HIT. † v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another; or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension? Locke.

Bones, teeth, and shells being sustained in the water with metallick corpuacles, and the said corpuacles meeting with and hitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Woodward.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.

Off expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest, and despair most sits. Shakspeare.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

But thou bring'st valour too and wit,
Two things that seldom fail to hit. Hudibras.

This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible. Dryden.

All human race would fain be wits,
And millions miss for one that hits. Swift.

4. To light on.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon.

You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd,
Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;
There lies my grief. Dryden, Span. Friar.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing sooner: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it. Tillotson.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estrange.

- None of them hit upon the art. Addison.
There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

5. To agree; to suit.

Pray you, let us hit together. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
The number so exactly hits. Waterland, Script. Vind. iii. 6.

HIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

So be the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd,
And at each hit with wonder seem amaz'd. Dryden.

2. A chance; a fortuitous event.

To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Glanville.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgement, but a lucky hit. South.

But with more lucky hit than those
That use to make the stars depose. Hudibras.

The 6-berman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estrange.

If casual concourse did the world compose,
And things and hits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.

3. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shakspeare.

HIT

These hits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking. Dryden, Duffessay.

If at first he minds his hits,
And drinks champagne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the throwing lasses. Prior.

To HITCH. † v. n. [Skinner derives this word from the Sax. hægan, hægan, which means to strive, or from the French hacher, to move quickly; to which Dr. Johnson assents, defining our word accordingly "to catch, to move by jerks;" but, at the same time, observing that he knows not where it is used but in the following passage from Pope, nor well knows what it there means. The word, however, is used by South; as more than one literary friend has remarked to me, and as I had noted several years since. Dr. Jamieson, illustrating the Scottish verb hatch, (to move quickly up and down, or backwards and forwards in a clumsy manner,) says, that our hitch is used in the same way; although it is a word occurring so rarely, that Johnson could find but one example. To Skinner's etymous he adds the Icel. hika, cedo, recedo, retrocedo, which he considers as the radical word; and Serenius had proposed hagga, to move, to shake; hik, a small motion. — But hitch, in the passage from South, seems to mean to become "entangled or hooked together;" and, in that from Pope, "to be hooked in, to fall into, to be caught, and exposed as it were;" and so may be deduced from the same root as to hook, Teut. haecken. Hichel, (or hitchel.) a hook. Barret's Alv. 1580. To hitch, to catch hold of any thing with a rope or hook. Coles, Diet. edit. 1685. This is still a sea term; "hitch the fish-hook to the fluke of the anchor." In Gloucestershire, Mr Malone says, to hitch is used actively in the sense of to make fast; and, as a neutral verb, to stick fast. Thus, after a swing-gate has vibrated backwards and forwards for some time, when the latch drops into the groove made to receive it, the gate is said to hitch. The word has other provincial meanings. Nor is hitch, in the sense of to hook on, or to fasten as with a hook, uncommon in many places. And from the active sense, thus implying holds, has arisen probably the use of the substantive for an impediment.]

1. To become entangled, or hooked together. ["Elementa hamata, et perplicata." Lucet.]

But if this will not do, we are told, that there was an infinite innumerable company of little bodies, called atoms, from all eternity, flying and roving about in a void space, which at length hitched together and united; by which union and connection they grew at length into this beautiful, curious, and most exact structure of the universe. A conceit fitter for Bedlam than a school, or an academy. South, Seren. iii. 90.

2. To be caught; to fall into; to be hooked in.

Whoe'er offends, at some unlucky time
Slides into verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope, Imit. of Hor. B. 2. Sat. 1.

3. [Spoken of horses.] To hit the legs together in going. Scott.

4. To hop on one leg. Yorkshire. Grose. And so Dr. Johnson defines "to hobble" to hitch. See To HOBBLE.

5. To move, or walk. Norfolk. Grose.

HITCH. * n. s. [from the verb.] A catch; any thing that holds; an impediment: as, there is a hitch in the business; the man has a hitch in his gait.

I am credibly informed, that there is still a considerable hitch or hobble in your enunciation; and that when you speak fast, you speak unintelligibly. Id. Chesterfield.

To HITCH. v. a. [See HATCH.] To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCH. n. s. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

HITHE. n. s. [hyðe, Saxon.] A small haven to land wares out of vessels or boats: as Queenhithe, and Lambhithe, now Lambeth.

HYTHER. † adv. [hidre, Goth. hiben, hiden, Sax.]

1. To this place from some other.

Cæsar tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island, never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous lump of dominion, hither came. Spenser, F. Q.
Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither. Shakespeare.
Who brought me hither,
Will bring me hence; no other guide I seek. Milton, P. R.

2. It is used in opposition: hither and thither, to this place and that.

3. To this end; to this design; to this topick of argument: [huc, Lat. Huc refer exitum.] Not much used.

Hereupon dependeth whatsoever difference there is between the states of saints in glory; hither we refer whatsoever belongeth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of service towards God. Hooker.

Hither belong all those texts, which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit. Tillotson.

HITHER. adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer; towards this part.

After these,
But on the hither side, a different sort,
From the high neighbouring hills descended. Milton, P. L.
An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end, namely, that extreme wherein it is finite. Hale.

HITHERMOST. adj. [of hither, adv.] Nearest on this side.

That which is eternal can be extended to a greater extent at the hithermost extreme. Hale.

HITHERTO. adv. [from hither.]

1. To this time; yet.

Hitherto I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem. Dryden.

2. In any time till now.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, whiles the famous ancestries
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Spenser, F. Q.

3. At every time till now.

In this we are not their adversaries, though they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hooker.

Hitherto, lords, what your commands impos'd
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying. Milton, S. A.

Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd,
And with those graces every day beheld
The graceful youth. Dryden.

He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good: this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryden.

To correct them, is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift.

HITHERWARD. † adv. [hyðerpeapð, Saxon.] This hitherwards, way; towards this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

VOL. II.

A puissant and mighty power
Is marching hitherward in proud array.

Shakespeare.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honied words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward.

Milton, S. A.

HIVE. † n. s. [hype Saxon; either from the Su. Goth. hof, a house; or the M. Goth. haban, Icel. hefu, to contain; or the Sax. hipe, Icel. hiu, a house; a family. Serenius.]

1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away. Shakespeare.

So wandering bees would perish in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appease their rage, invite them to the hive. Waller.

Bees have each of them a hole in their hives: their honey is their own, and every bee minds her own concerns. Addison.

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.

The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down. Shakespeare.

3. A company being together.

What modern masons call a lodge, was by antiquity called a hive of free masons; and therefore, when a dissension happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift.

To HIVE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiring. Dryden.
When bees are fully settled, and the cluster at the biggest, hive them. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To contain, as in hives; to receive, as to an habitation.

Ambitious now to take excise

Of a more fragrant paradise,
He at Fuscara's sleeve arriv'd,
Where all delicious sweets are hiv'd. Cleaveland.

To HIVE. v. n. To take shelter together; to reside collectively.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat, drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shakespeare.

In summer we wander in a paradisaical scene, among groves and gardens; but at this season we get into warmer houses, and hive together in cities. Pope, Left.

HIVER. n. s. [from hive.] One who puts bees in hives.

Let the hiver drink a cup of good beer, and wash his hands and face therewith. Mortimer.

To HIZZ. * v. n. To hiss. See To HISS.

To have a thousand with red burning spits
Come hizzing in upon them. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HIZZING. * n. s. An hissing or hiss. See HISsing.

Lest, by the sun the organs parch'd and spill'd,
The dismal ghost uncertain hizzings yield. May, Lucan, B. 6.

HO. † interj. [cho, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Ho, old French; stop, cease; the word made use of for combatants to leave off fighting. Kelliam, Norm.

Diet. Ho, Welsh, an exclamation, a call.] A call; a sudden exclamation to give notice of approach, or any thing else; a command to stop; cease; give over; enough.

The Duke of Norfolk was not fullie set forward, when the king cast down his warder, and the heralds cried ho, ho.

Holmes, Chron.

The sacke without botome, which never can say ho.

Myrrour of Good Manners, tr. by A. Barclay, s. d.
There be three things never satisfied, and the fourth never saith ho. Florio's Dialog. Ital. & Eng. (1578.)

Behold, the kinsman of whom Iouz spake came by; unto whom he said, Ho, such a one, turn aside, sit down here.

Ruth, iv. 1.

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters. Isaiah, lv. 1.

H O A

Ho, ho, come forth and flee from the land of the north.

Zech. ii. 6.

What noise there, ho?

Shakspeare.

Ho, swain, what shepherd owns these ragged sheep? Dryden.

HÓ.* n. s. [from the interjection.] Stop; bound; limit. Formerly the word was common in this country. Mr. Malone says, it is yet common in Ireland: as, there is no ho with him, i. e. he knows no bounds, he never has enough; he is intemperate. "Out of all ho." Immodice. Litt. Dict. 1715.

Heer was no ho in devout drinkyng.

Langham's Lett. of Q. Eliz. Enterf. at Killingworth, (1575.)

To rule unruly people, with whom otherwise there were no ho.

Harvey, Pierce's Supplication. (1592.)

He once loved the fair maid of Fressingfield out of all ho.

Greene's Friar Bacon.

To Ho.* v. n. To call out. An old sea-term, "Howen, or cryen, as shipmen." Pr. Parv. "Clamor nauticus vel cantus, ut, heve & howe, rombylow." Ort. Vocab. [Teut. hou.] See HOV. HOA.† interj. [from ho.] A sudden exclamation to give notice of approach, or any thing else.

Here dwells my father Jew: hoa, who's within? Shakspeare!
When I cried hoa!

Like boys, kings would start forth, and cry,

Your will.

Shakspeare.

HÓANE.* n. s. [Sax. hæn; Icel. hein. See HONN.] A fine kind of whetstone.

Cockram.

HOAR.† adj. [hap, Sax. from hapian, canescere. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. White.

The hoare waters from his frigot ran. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 10.

A people,

Whom Ireland sent from loughs and forrests hore

Fairfax.

Island of bliss, all assaults

Baffling, like thy hoar cliffs the loud sea-wave. Thomson.

2. Gray with age.

It govern'd was, and guided evermore

Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoar. Spenser, F. Q.

Let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace.

Kings, ii. 6.

Now swarms the populace, a countless throng;

Youth and hoar age, and man drives man along. Pope.

3. White with frost.

Low the woods

Bow their hoar heads. Thomson, Winter.

4. Mouldy; musty. [hopuz, Sax. mucidus, hapian, mucescere; hor, Icel. mucor.]

Guyon finds Mammon in a delve

Sunning his treasure hore. Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. Arg.

A hare, sir, in a lence pie, that is something stale and hoar.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

HOAR.* n. s. [from the adjective.] Antiquity.

His grants are engrafted on the publick law of Europe, covered with the awful hoar of innumerable ages. Burke.

To HOAR.* v. n. [Sax. hapian, mucescere.] To become mouldy or musty.

A hare that is hoar,

Is too much for a score,

When it hoars ere it be spent. Old Song in Romeo and Juliet.

HOAR-FROST. n. s. [hoar and frost.] The congelations of dew in frosty mornings on the grass.

When the dew was gone up, behold upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar-frost on the ground. Exod. xvi. 14.

In Fahrenheit's thermometer, at thirty-two degrees, the water in the air begins to freeze, which is hoar-frosts. Arbuthnot.

HOARD.† n. s. [hauru, Goth. hopu, Sax. from hyrda, Icel. to keep, to guard. Serenius. And Mr. H. Tooke states it to be the past participle of the Sax. hýpan, custodire. It may be added, that in the Persones Tale of Chaucer, horde (as hoard was formerly written) is used for the place to keep treasure in. "Glotonic — is the devil's horde; ther he hideth him and resteth." Chaucer, C. T. edit. Tyrwhitt, ii. 359.] A store laid up in secret; a hidden stock; a treasure.

H O A

I have a venturous fairy, that shall seek

The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts.

Shakspeare.

They might have even starved, had it not been for this providential reserve, this hoard, that was stowed in the strata underneath, and now seasonably disclosed. Woodward.

To HOARD.† v. n. [Sax. hopan.] To make hoards; to lay up store.

He fear'd not once himself to be in need,

Nor ear'd to hoard for those whom he did breed. Spenser, F. Q.

Happy always was it for that son,

Whose father for his hoarding went to hell. Shakspeare.

To HOARD. v. a.

1. To lay in hoards; to husband privily; to store secretly.

The hoarded plague of the gods requite your love! Shakspeare.

You hoard not health for your own private use,

But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryden.

You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money; but you may safely relate that he hoards it. Arbuthnot, Art of Politic. Iying.

A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget God, when it is hoarded in our treasures, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years. Rogers.

2. It is sometimes enforced by the particle up.

I have just occasion to complain of them, who because they understand Chaucer, would hoard him up as misers do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and kinder others from making use of it. Dryden.

The base wretch who hoards up all he can,

Is prais'd, and call'd a careful thrifty man. Dryden.

HO'ARDER.† n. s. [Sax. hopdepe.] One that stores up in secret.

The horders of provision were constrained to open their garners, and the prices of grain abated.

Watson, Panegy. to K. Charles I.

Since commodities will be raised, this alteration will be an advantage to nobody but hoarders of money. Locke.

HO'ARED.* adj. [from hoar.] Mouldy; musty.

All the bread of their provision was dry and hoared, [in the present version, mouldy.]

Josh. ix. 5. Matthew's, Cranmer's, and the Bishops' Transl.

HO'AROUND.† n. s. [murrubium, Lat.] A plant.

Hoarhound has its leaves and flower-cup covered very thick with a white hoariness: it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthmas, of which a thick and viscous matter is the cause; but it is now little used. Hill.

Pale hoarhound, which he holds of most especial use.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

HO'ARINESS.† n. s. [from hoary.]

1. The state of being whitish; the colour of old men's hair.

He grows a wolf, his hoariness remains,

And the same rage in other members reigns. Dryden.

2. Mouldiness.

Barret, and Sherwood.

Hoariness, or vinevndness, such as is on bread or meat long kept; or mouldiness from moisture or lack of cleansing.

Barret.

HOARSE. adj. [hap, Sax. heersche, Dutch.] Having the voice rough, as with a cold; having a rough sound.

Come, sit, sit, and a song.

— Clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
He sped his steps along the hoarse resounding shore. Dryden.
The stock-dove only through the forest cooed, Mournfully hoarse. Thomson.

HOARSELY. † adv. [from hoarse.] With a rough harsh voice.

Hard at my feet ran down a crystal spring,
Which did the cumbrous pebbles hoarsely chide
For standing in the way, More, Cupid's Conflict, (1647.)
The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

HOARSENESS. n. s. [from hoarse.] Roughness of voice.

The voice is sometimes intercluded by an hoarseness or viscous phlegm. Holder.

I had a voice in heav'n, ere sulph'rous steams
Had damp'd it to a hoarseness. Dryden, K. Arthur.

The want of it in the wind-pipe occasions hoarseness in the gullet, and difficulty of swallowing. Southcot on Disorders.

HOARY. † adj. [hap, hapung, Saxon. See HOAR.]

1. White; whitish.

One would think the deep to be hoary. Job, xli. 32.
The secrets of the hoary deep. Milton, P. L.

Thus she rested on her arm reclin'd
The hoary willows waving with the wind. Addison.

2. White or grey with age.

A comely palmer clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary grey. Spenser, F. Q.

Solyman, marvelling at the courage and majesty of the hoary old prince in his so great extremity, dismissed him, and sent him again into the city. Knolles, Hist.

Has then my hoary head deserv'd no better? Rome.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness,

Retire, great preacher, to thy promis'd bliss. Prior.

3. White with frost.

The seasons alter; hoary headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose. Shakespeare.

4. Mouldy; mossy; rusty. [hopuz, Sax. See the fourth sense of HOAR.]

There was brought out of the city into the camp very coarse, hoary, moulded bread. Knolles, Hist.

HOAST. * n. s. A cough. See HAUST.

HOAX. * n. s. [Such is the Sax. huepe, or huec, derision, mockery, irony; though Mr. Malone considers it as derived from the cant word hocus, a cheat. Lambard calls the Sax. huecetyde, a time of scorning and mocking. From the Lambeth book, cited by Mr. Brand, under the years 1556-1557, there appear receipts for hoaxe-money. The

Sax. hoccp, hiecop, al-o signified scorn, laughing to scorn, or contumely; and Chaucer's "wife of Simkin" is described "ful of hoker and bismare," (i. e. insolence or mockery, and of abuse,) Reve's Tale.] An imposition; a deception; as, the hoax was credited beyond expectation.

To Hoax. * v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive; to impose upon.

HOB. * n. s.

1. A clown. [German, hube, formerly hobe, a country-farm; hubner, a country fellow. Serenius.]

Sherwood.

2. A fairy; a spirit. See HOBGOBLIN.

HOB or Nob. * See HOBNOB.

HOBBOARD-DE-HOY. * n. s. [in some places called hobbedchoy, and also hobbety-hoy.] A stripling; a young lad between fourteen and twenty-one; neither man nor boy.

Man's age divided here ye have
By prentisships from birth to grave.

The first seven years bring up as a childe:
The next to learning, for waxing too wilde:
The next keepe under Sir Hubbard-de-hoy:
The next a man, no longer a boy, &c.

Tusser, Husbandrie, &c. (1580,) p. 57.

HOBBISM. * n. s. The opinions of Thomas Hobbes of Malmesbury, in this country, who was born towards the close of the sixteenth century. He "made no scruple to speak of the light and law of nature as a chimera; and as little, to mould Christianity to a system of his own, directly repugnant to the nature and end of all religion; for he establishes it as a fundamental point, that the subjects of every community ought to conform, in all religious matters, to the commands of the civil magistrate. To this he added a frightful picture of human nature, representing mankind as altogether selfish and savage." Skelton, Deism Revealed, Dial. viii. "His ethics have a strong tendency to corrupt our morals, and his politics to destroy that liberty which is the birthright of every human creature. He is commonly represented as a sceptic in religion, and a dogmatist in philosophy; but he was a dogmatist in both." Granger, Biog. Hist. Charles II. Cl. ix.

The abettors of Hobbsism could not stand up for it, without allowing themselves to be actuated only by base and narrow principles. Skelton, Deism Revealed.

HOBBIST. * n. s. A follower of the opinions of Hobbes.

That Rochester should write a satire on man, I am not surprized. It is the business of the libertine to degrade his species, and debase the dignity of human nature, and thereby destroy the most efficacious incitements to lovely and laudable actions. But, that a writer of Boileau's purity of manners should represent his kind in the dark and disagreeable colours he has done, with all the malignity of a discontented Hobbsist, is a lamentable perversion of fine talents, and is a real injury to society. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

To HOBBLE. † v. n. [to hop, to hopp, to hobble.

Dr. Johnson.—The diminutive of the Su. Goth. hoppa, to hop, to leap; so hopp, hobben, Teut. hobbelu, Cym. the same. Serenius.]

1. To walk lamely or awkwardly upon one leg more than the other; to hitch; to walk with unequal and encumbered steps.

The friar was hobbling the same way too. Dryden.

Some persons continued a kind of hobbling march on the broken arches, but fell through. Addison.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, without being discovered by his hobbling? Swift.

2. To move roughly or unevenly. Feet being ascribed to verses, whatever is done with feet is likewise ascribed to them.

Those ancient Romans—had a custom of reproaching each other in a sort of extempore poetry, or rather tunable hobbling verse. Dryden, Orig. and Pr. of Satire.

While you Pindarick truths rehearse,
She hobbles in alternate verse. Prior.

To HOBBLE. * v. a. [perhaps from hobbel, a knot, Fland. hobbelen, to complicate in a knot.] To perplex; to embarrass; as, he is greatly hobbled.

HOBBLE. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Uneven awkward gait.

One of his heels is higher than the other, which gives him a hobble in his gait. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. A difficulty. [hobbel, Fland. a knot.] To get into a hobble.

HO'BBLER.† n. s. [old French, hobeler; "cavalier qui monte un cheval Escossois, qu'on nommoit anciennement hobin." Lacombe, and Roquetfort.] A kind of horse-soldier.

For twenty hobblers armed, Irishmen so called, because they served on hobbies, he paid six-pence a-piece per diem. Davies.

HO'BBLINGLY. adv. [from hobble.] Clumsily; awkwardly; with a halting gait.

HO'BBY.† n. s. [hobbije, Fland. hobereau, French; hebog, Welsh.]

1. A species of hawk.

They have such a hovering possession of the Valtoline, as an hobby hath over a lark. Bacon.

The people will chop like trouts at an artificial fly, and dare like larks under the awe of a painted hobby. L'Estrange.
Larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight. Dryden.

2. An Irish or Scottish horse; a pacing horse; a nag. [Goth. hoppe, a horse; hobin, Fr. a pacing horse. Dr. Johnson. — 'Hobin, Irish, a horse whose motion is easy. Bullet. This, Dr. Jamieson thinks, may be from obann, Ir. quick, nimble. Nevertheless he reverts also to the northern language, to which Serenius likewise refers hobby, viz. Icel. hoppa, a mare; as Johnson has to the Goth. hoppe, a horse. This, I may add, carries us to the Greek ἵππος.]

Hobblers armed, Irishmen, so called, because they served on hobbies. Davies on Ireland.

3. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.

As young children, who are ty'd in Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding, When members knit, and legs grow stronger, Make use of such machine no longer; But leap pro libitu, and scout On horse call'd hobby, or without. Prior.

4. In colloquial language, that which is the favourite object of pursuit of a person. See HOBBY-HORSE.

HO'BBY-HORSE.* n. s.

1. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.

Those grave contenders about opinionative trifles look like aged Socrates upon his boy's hobby-horse. Glanville.

2. A character in the old May-games. The hobby-horse was represented by a man equipped with as much pasteboard as was sufficient to form the head and hinder parts of a horse, the quadrupedal defects being concealed by a long mantle or foot-cloth that nearly touched the ground. The performer on this occasion exerted all his skill in burlesque horsemanship. Douce.

But see the hobby-horse is forgot:

Fool! it must be your lot,
To supply his want with faces

And some other buffoon graces. D. Jonson, Masque at Althorpe.

The word politician is not usual to his maw, and thereupon he plays the most notorious hobby-horse, jesting and frisking in the luxury of his nonsense. Milton, Colasterion.

3. A stupid or foolish person. [from the preceding sense.]

I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not bear. Shakespeare.

4. The favourite object or pursuit of a person.

What the last age denominated follies, or hobby-horses, we style collections: Uncle Toby's library would have required no apology among the hunters of old ballads, and churchwardens' bills of our day! Farriar, Illust. of Sterne, ch. 5.

HOBGOBLIN.† n. s. [according to Skinner, for hobgoblins, from Robin Goodfellow, Hob being the nickname of Robin: but more probably, according to Wallis and Junius, hobgoblins, empusa, because they do not move their feet: whence, says Wallis, came the boys' play of fox in the hole, the fox always hopping on one leg. Dr. Johnson. — Wallis maintains his opinion, in his Correction of Hobbes, with much stoutness: "This derivation you did, at first, cry out upon as very absurd; and you meant to pay me for it; till you were informed, as I hear, by some of your friends, that the scholiast of Aristophanes had the same, (viz. empusa from ἐν and πῦς), and so have Eustathius, Erasmus, Caelius Rhodoginus, Stephanus, Scapula, Calepine, and others; and therefore you were advised not to quarrel with it! Whereupon, waving your main charge, you only tell me, that it doth not become my gravity to tell you, that empusa, your dæmonium Atheniense, was a kind of hobgoblin, that hopped upon one leg; and that thence a boys' play, now in use, comes to be called ludus empusæ; and withal pray me to tell you, where it was that I read the word empusa for the boys' play I spake of? To the question I answer, that I read it so used in Junius's Nomenclator, Rider's, and Thomas's Dictionary; sufficient authors for such a business." "Due Correction for Mr. Hobbes, Oxf. 1656. p. 24. Notwithstanding this learned etymology, it is, I think, plain that our ancestors considered the hobgoblin as no other than a Robin Goodfellow; and that, therefore, we may consider hob as the true etymon; hob, the goblin, i. e. Robin Goodfellow. See the example from Shakspeare's Mids. N. Dream. "A bigger kind there is of them [fairies] called with us hobgoblins, and Robin Goodfellows, that would in those superstitious times, grind corn for a mess of milk, &c." Barton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47. Hence hob was also a general name for a fairy or spirit. "The hobs of night." Morall Plot of C. Wase's Electra of Sophocles, 1649. "Hobthrust, or rather hob o' th' hurst, a spirit supposed to haunt woods only." North. Grose's Prov. Gloss. Hob Howlard, the name of a spirit. Brand, Popular Antiq. ii. 359.] A fairy; vulgarly, a frightful one.

You are that shrewd and knavish sprite,

Call'd Robin Goodfellow:

Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
You do their work. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,

Attend your office and your quality:

Crier hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes.

Shakspeare.

HO'BIT. n. s. A small mortar to shoot little bombs.

HO'BLAKE.* adj. [from hob.] Clownish; boorish.
Cotgrave in V. Rude, and Sherwood.

HO'BNAIL.† n. s. [from hobby and nail.]

1. A nail used in shoeing a hobby or little horse; a nail with a thick strong head.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, I beseech Jove on my knees thou may'st be turn'd into hobnails. Shakspeare.

We shall buy maidens as they buy hobnails, by the hundred. Shakspeare.

2. A clownish person, in contempt.

No antick hobnail at a morris, but is more handsomely
f facetious, Milton, Colasterion.

HO'BNAIL'D. adj. [from hobnail.] Set with hobnails.

Would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,

Would'st thou, to run the gantlet, these expose

To a whole company of hobnail'd shoes? Dryden, Juv.

HO'BNOB.† This is probably corrupted from habnab by a coarse pronunciation. See HABNAB. Dr. Johnson. — Grose, in like manner, explains hobnob “at a venture, rashly,” as a northern expression, and sometimes pronounced habnab. From him we learn also, that hob or hub is our northern name for the back of the chimney; and that the drinking phrase to hob or nob with a person, arose from beer being placed on the hob to warm, and cold beer being set on a small table called the nob; so that the original question, will you have hob or nob meant, will you have warm or cold beer? This very improbable account has been somewhat refined in a work of great erudition. “It was customary for persons to pledge each other by taking their cups from the hobs or hubs and nobs, on which they were placed on each side of the fire-place.” Whiter's Etymolog. Magnum, p. 122. Mr. Brand's etymology and explanation are much more satisfactory; habban, Sax. to have, and næbban, to want. May it not therefore be explained in this sense, “Do you choose a glass of wine, or would you rather let it alone?”

His incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be not e but by pangs of death, and sepulchre; hob, nob, is his word; give't or take't. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

HO'BOY.* n. s. A wind instrument. See HAUTBOY. It is written hoboy, as if it were from the Italian oboe, which, as Pegge has observed, is exactly the pronunciation an Italian would give the French word hautbois; and has no meaning, as the French name has.

HO'BNON'S CHOICE.* An expression often used, denoting that kind of choice in which there is no alternative. The caprice of Hobson, the Cambridge carrier, who died in 1630, is said to have given rise to it.

Hobson kept a stable of forty good cattle, always ready and fit for travelling; but when a man came for a horse, he was led into the stable, where there was great choice, but he obliged him to take the horse next to the stable-door; so that every customer was alike well-served according to his chance, and every horse ridden with the same justice: From whence it became a proverb, when what ought to be your election was forced upon you, to say, Hobson's choice.

Spectator, No. 509.

HOCK. n. s. [hox, hoh, Saxon.] The joint between the knee and the fetlock. See HOUGH.

To HOCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To disable in the hock.

HOCK. } n. s. [from Hockheim on the Maine.]

HO'CKAMORE. } Old strong Rhenish wine.

Restor'd the fainting high and mighty,

With brandy, wine, and aqua vite;

And made 'em stoutly overcome

With bachtrach, hockamore and murr.

Hudibras.

Wine becomes sharp, as hock, like vitriolick acidity. Floyer.

If cyder royal should become unpleasant, and as unfit to bottle as old hockamore, mix one hoghead of that and one of tart new cyder together.

Mortimer.

HO'CKEY, or HA'WKEY.* n. s. [hoch, German, heach, Saxn high, i. e. festival.] A name for harvest-home, used in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridge-shire, according to Pegge; and certainly in other places. Hockey cake is that which is distributed to the people at harvest-home. The hockey cart is that which brings the last corn and the children rejoicing with boughs in their hands, with which the horses are also attired. Salmon's Survey, Hertfordshire, cited in Brand's Popular Antiquities.

Hoackey, is brought Home with hallowin.

Poor Robin's Alm. 1676.

In the town of Cambridge, and centre of our University, such curious remains of ancient customs may be noticed, in different seasons of the year, which pass without observation. The custom of blowing horns on the first of May (old stile) is derived from a festival in honour of Diana. At the hawkie, as it is called, I have seen a clown dressed in woman's clothes, having his face painted, his head decorated with ears of corn, and bearing about him other symbols of Ceres, carried in a waggon, with great pomp and loud shouts through the streets, the horses being covered with white sheets; and when I enquired the meaning of the ceremony, was answered by the people that they were drawing the harvest-queen.

Dr. Clarke's Travels.

HO'CKHERR. n. s. [hock and herb.] A plant; the same with mallows. Ainsworth.

To HO'CKLE.† v. a. [from hock.]

1. To hamstring; to cut the sinews about the ham or hough. Hammer.

2. To mow. Applied only to stubble. Mason.

HOCUS POCUS.† [The original of this word is referred by Tillotson to a form of the Romish church. Junius derives it from hoced, Welsh, a cheat, and poke or pocus, a bag, jugglers using a bag for conveyance. It is corrupted from some words that had once a meaning, and which perhaps cannot be discovered. Dr. Johnson. — Archbishop Tillotson's remark is, that “in all probability those common juggling words of hocus pocus are nothing else but a corruption of hoc est corpus, by way of ridiculous imitation of the priests of the church of Rome in their trick of transubstantiation.” Serm. xxvi. Pegge notices the corruption arising from the illiteracy of some Romish priests, who themselves pronounced, in a gabbling manner, the proper words as if they were hocus pocus. Anecd. of the Eng. Language. — I subscribe neither to this, nor to the archbishop's observation; and have often wondered that such a man as Tillotson should have given publicity to his opinion. Mr. Turner, in his History of the Anglo-Saxons, considers it as descended from Ochus Bochus, a magician and demon of the northern mythology; and refers us to the authority of Verelius. From Verelius we derive further information, that this personage's name was in use among the Italian conjurers, “histrionibus Italis hodieque notum; Ocus Bochus, carmina præsto!” Verelii Epitome Hist. Suo-Goth. 4to. 1730. p. 13. This was unknown to Dr. Johnson; and, had it been known to Tillotson, would have saved his remark, which has been repeated in abundance of books.]

1. A juggler.

I will speak of one man more excelling in that craft than others, that went about in king James his time, and long since, who called himself “the king's majesty's most excellent hocus pocus,” and so was he called, because that, at the playing of every trick, he used to say, “hocus pocus, totus, talotus, velle celeriter jubeo,” a darke compature of words to blinde the eyes of beholders.

Ady's Candle in the Dark, Treat. of Witches, &c. p. 19.

Boy. Do they think this pen can juggle? I would we had Hokus pokus for 'em then, your people; or Traviano Tudeko.

H O E

Dam. Who's that, boy?

Boy. Another juggler with a long name. B. Jonson, Magna Lady.
Dancing-witches, hocus-pocus's, and other anticks past my remembrance. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 154.

2. A juggle; a cheat; the words formerly used by conjurers in practising their tricks.

Right and wrong
Could never hold it out so long,
And, like blind fortune, with a sleight
Convey men's interest and right
From Stiles's pocket into Nokes's,
As easily as hocus pocus.

Mudibras, iii. iii.

If thou hast any hocus pocus-tricks to play, why can'st not do them here? Addison, Drummer.

To HOCUS, or To HOCUS-POCUS.* To cheat. A low expression.

This gift of hocus-pocussing, and of disguising matters, is surprising. L'Estrange.

One of the greatest pieces of legerdemain, with which these jugglers hocus the vulgar and incautious of the present age. Nelson.

HOD.† n. s. [corrupted perhaps in contempt from hood, a hod being carried on the head. Dr. Johnson.

— Rather perhaps a corruption of hoved or heaved, that which is carried: the trough is carried on the shoulders, not on the head.] A kind of trough in which a labourer carries mortar to the masons.

A fork and a hook to be tampering in clay,
A bath, hammer, trowel, a hod or a tray. Tusser.

HO'DDY-DO'DDY.* n. s. A word of contempt, denoting an awkward, foolish, or ridiculous person.

Cob's wife, and you,
That make your husband such a hoddly-doddy.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

He has more goodness in his little finger, than you have in your whole body:

My master is a personable man, and not a spindle-shank'd hoddly-doddy. Swift, Cookmaid's Lett. to Dr. Sheridan.

HO'DMAN.† n. s. [hod and man.] A labourer that carries mortar.

HO'DMANDOD.† n. s.

1. A fish.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, and the hodmandod or dodman. Bacon.

2. A shell-snail. See DODMAN.

HODGE-PODGE.† n. s. [hochepot, quasi hachis en pot, French. Our word is also written hodgepot, hotchpot, and hotchpotch. Teut. hulspot. See HOTCHPOT.]

1. A medley of ingredients boiled together.

They have made our English tongue a gallimaufrey, or hodge-podge of all other speeches. Ep. Pref. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

As for mercury water, and other poisons, they might be fit for farts, which is a kind of hodgepot.

Bacon, Speech against the Countess of Somerset.

It produces excellent corn, whereof the Turks make their trachana and hodhourt, a certain hodge-podge of sundry ingredients. Sandys, Trav.

2. A commixture of lands. See HOTCHPOTCH.

HODIERNAL. adj. [hodiernus, Latin.] Of to-day.

HOE.† n. s. [houe, French; houwe, Dutch; hoha, Gothick; old Fr. hou, mod. houe; Dutch, houwe; which some derive from the Lat. upupa, a similar instrument.] An instrument to cut up the earth, of which the blade is at right angles with the handle.

They should be thinned with a hoe. Mortimer.

To HOE. v. a. [houer, French; houwen, Dutch.] To cut or dig with a hoe.

They must be continually kept with weeding and hoeing. Mortimer.

H O G

HOFUL.* adj. [Saxon, hofull, full of care, perhaps from hoga, prudent.] Careful. Not now in use.

S. Gregory, ever hofull of his doings and behaviour, directed especial letters unto him.

Stapleton, Fortr. of the Faith, (1565) fol. 97. b.

HO'FULLY.* adv. [from hoful.] Carefully; prudently.

Women serving God hofully and chastely.

Stapleton, Fortr. &c. fol. 119. b.

HOG.† n. s. [hwch, Welsh; hoch, Cornish.]

1. The general name of swine.

This will raise the price of hogs, if we grow all to be pork-eaters. Shakespeare.

The hog, that plows not, nor obeys thy call,
Lives on the labours of this Lord of all. Pope.

2. A castrated boar.

3. To bring Hogs to a fine market. To fail of one's design.

You have brought your hogs to a fine market. Spectator.

The western hough, besprinkl'd with the gore
Of mighty Goëmot. Spenser, F. Q.

HO'GHERD.† n. s. [hog and hynd, a keeper.] A keeper of hogs.

No lusty northern thither drove his kine,
Nor boorish hog-herd led his rooting swine.

Bronie, Brit. Past. (1616.) B. ii. S. 1.

The terms hogherd and cowkeeper are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek.

Broom, Notes on the Odyssey.

Ho'GO.* n. s. [corrupted from haut gout. See HAUT GOUT.] High flavour; strong scent.
Belshazzar's sumptuous feast was heightened by the hogo of his delicious meats and drinks.

Dr. Mal. Griffith, Fear of God and the Kings (1660), p. 76.

Ho'GRINGER.* n. s. [hog and ring.] One whose business it is to fasten rings in the snout of a hog.
• A colloquial expression.

Ho'GSBEANS.

Ho'GSBREAD.

Ho'GSFENNEL.

Ho'GSMUSHROOMS.

n. s. Plants. Ainsworth.

Ho'GSHEAD.† n. s. [supposed to be so called, says Minshew, from the form or shape; but more probably from the Dutch ockshood, and ogshood, from ocks, the name of a certain measure in Brabant, and houden, to contain. See Minshew in V. HOGGESHEAD.]

1. A measure of liquids containing sixty-three gallons. Varro tells, that every jugerum of vines yielded six hundred urns of wine: according to this proportion, our acre should yield fifty-five hogsheds, and a little more. Arbutnot.

2. Apy large barrel.

Blow strongly with a pair of bellows into a hogshhead, putting into it before that which you would have preserved; and in the instant that you withdraw the bellows, stop the hole.

Bacon.

They slung up one of their largest hogshheads: I drank it off; for it did not hold half a pint. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

Ho'GSHEARING.* n. s. [hog and shear.] A ludicrous term, denoting much ado about nothing.

Why do I hold you thus long in these his noisome exhalations, and hideous cry of hogshearing, where, as we use to say in England, we have a great deal of noise, and no wool.

Dean Martin, Lett. (1662), p. 95.

Ho'GSTEEER.* n. s. [hog and steer, Sax. pteop, a young bullock.] A wild boar of three years old.

Cockeram.

Ho'GSTY. n. s. [hog and sty.] The place in which swine are shut to be fed.

Ho'GWASH. n. s. [hog and wash.] The draff which is given to swine.

Your butler purloins your liquor, and the brewer sells you hogwash. Arbutnot. Hist. of John Bull.

HO'IDEN.† n. s. [hoiden, Welsh; fæmina levioris fæmæ, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Skinner derives it from the Teut. heyde, a country place, q. d. a rustick; and, with probability, as hoiden is not confined to the female sex. Cotgrave and Sherwood give us the male hoiden. "Badault, a fool, dolt, fop, ass, coxcomb, gaping hoydon." Again, Sherwood translates his "rude hoidon" into the Fr. salourdin, which Cotgrave converts into "a lubberly sloven, a heavy sot, a lumpish hoydon." This sense was not known to Dr. Johnson, though Milton also uses it; and indeed of the female hoiden he has given no example. The word, in my opinion, was first applied to men. It occurs repeatedly in Cotgrave with such application, but not to women.]

1. An awkward, rude, ill-behaved man.

Shall I argue of conversation with this hoyden, to go and practise at his opportunities in the larder? Milton, Colasterion.

2. An ill-taught, awkward, country girl.

All those [women] we saw, were the ugliest awkward hoydens in nature. Swainburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 44.

HO'IDEN.* adj. Rustick; inelegant; untaught.

They throw their persons, with a hoiden air, Across the room, and toss into the chair. Young, Sat. 5.

Give us nature wild,

Delighted with a hoyden soul,

Which truth and innocence controul. Green's Spleen, ver. 250.

To HO'IDEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To romp indecently.

Some of them would get a scratch; but we always discovered, upon examining, that they had been hoidening with the young apprentices. Swift.

To HOISE.† v. a. [hausser, French.] To raise up within them, though they be dry substances Burket.

2. Deceit; insincerity; treachery.
Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose low sound
Reverbs no hollowness. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
People, young and raw, and soft natured, think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of any man's: but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the base-ness and ingratitude of almost all, they will then find that a friend is the gift of God, and that he only who made hearts can unite them. South.

may signify hilly; the Saxon word, according to Camden, meaning also a hill or mountain.

A little higher up the river was a holm, which divided it into two branches. Vaillant, Trav. iii. 295.

2. The ilex; the evergreen oak. [Sax. hollen, holly;
the leaves of one sort of the evergreen oak are called holly-leaved.]

Under what tree did'st thou take them companying together?
who answered, under a holm tree. Hist. of Sus. ver. 58.
The carver holme, the maple seldom inward sound.

Spenser, F. Q.

HO'LOCAUST. n. s. [ἅλω and καίω.] A burnt sacrifice; a sacrifice of which the whole was consumed by fire, and nothing retained by the offerer.

Isaac carried the wood for the sacrifice, which being an holocaust, or burnt offering, to be consumed unto ashes, we cannot well conceive a burthen for a boy. Broym.

Let the eye behold no evil thing, and it is made a sacrifice;
let the tongue speak no filthy word, and it becomes an oblation; let the hand do no unlawful action, and you render it a holocaust. Ray on the Creation.

Eumenes cut a piece from every part of the victim, and by this he made it an holocaust, or an entire sacrifice. Broome.

HO'LOGRAPH. n. s. [ἁλω and γραφω.] This word is used in the Scottish law to denote a deed written altogether, by the granter's own hand.

HOLP. The old preterite and participle passive of help.

His great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp him
To's home before us. Shakespeare.

HO'LPEN. n. s. The old preterite and participle passive of help.

He hath holpen his servant Israel. St. Luke, i. 54.

In a long trunk the sound is holpen, though both the mouth and the ear be a handful from the trunk; and somewhat more holpen when the hearer is near, than when the speaker. Bacon.

HO'LSTER. n. s. [heolster, Saxon, a hiding place.]

A case for a horseman's pistol.

In's rusty holsters put what meat
Into his hose he cou'd not get. Butler.

HOLT. n. s. [at the beginning or ending of the name of any place, holt signifies that it is or hath been woody, from the Saxon holt, a wood; or sometimes possibly from the Saxon hol, i. e. hollow, especially when the name ends in tun or dun.

Gibson. — Mr. H. Tooke deduces this word from the Sax. helan, to cover; holed, hol'd, holt; a rising ground or knoll covered with trees. Div. of Purl. ii. 383. Serenius, long before, had made a similar deduction from the Goth. and Icel. hulja, hoelia, to cover. We also use this word, however, simply for a hill, without any reference to its covering, but rather with the meaning of bleak or barren. In this case, perhaps, the Icel. holt, a rough and barren place, is the etymon.]

1. A wood; a grove; a forest. The word is still thus used in many parts of England. Cherry-holt, a plantation of cherry-trees. Norfolk.

These holtes, and these hayis,
That ban in winter dead yben and drie,
Revestin hem in grene, when that May is.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. iii. 352.

The wilde forest, the clothed holtes with green.

Ld. Surry, Songs, &c. p. 10.

2. A hill.

Yee that frequent the hilles,
And highest holtes of all. Turberville, Songs and Sonn. (1569.)
O'er holt and heath
We went, through deserts waste, and forests wild.

Fairfax, Tass. viii. 19.

H O L

Underneath the holies so hoar.

Old Poem cited by Percy, Rel. Anc. Poet. vol. i. Gloss.
He, whose rustick mule

O'er heath and craggy hilt her wing display'd. Dyer.

HOLY.† adj. [haliz, Saxon; heyligh, Dutch, from hal, healthy, or in a state of salvation.]

1. Good; pious; religious.

See where his grace stands 'twixen two clergymen!
And see a book of prayer in his hand,
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

With joy he will embrace you; for he's honourable,
And, doubling that, most holy. Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. Hallowed; consecrated to divine use. [Sax. halga; Icel. heilagn, from hala, to praise. Serenius.]

State, holy or unhallow'd, what of that?
Bare was his hoary head; one holy hand
Held forth his laurel crown, and one his sceptre. Dryden.

3. Pure; immaculate.

Common sense could tell them, that the good God could not be pleased with any thing cruel; nor the most holy God with any thing filthy and unclean. South.

4. Sacred.

An evil soul producing holy witness,
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek.
Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

He has deserv'd it, were it carbuncled
Like holy Phœbus' ear. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

HOLY-CROSS Day.* n. s. The fourteenth of September. See HOLY-ROOD.

HOLY-GHOST. n. s. [haliz and gæst, Saxon.] The third person of the adorable Trinity.

If strength of persuasion be the light which must guide us,
I ask, how shall any one distinguish the inspirations of the Holy-Ghost? Locke.

HOLY-ONE.* n. s. [holy and one.]

1. One of the appellations of the Supreme Being, by way of emphasis; applied also to God the Son.

I am the Lord, your Holy-One, the Creator of Israel, your King. Isaiah, xliii. 15.

I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God. St. Luke, iv. 34.

Nor from the Holy-One of Heaven
Refrained his tongue blasphemous. Milton, P. L.

2. One separated to the service of God.

And of Levi he said, Let thy Thummin and thy Urim be with thy holy-one. Deut. xxxiii. 8.

Though by holy-one be principally meant the high priest,— yet it comprehends all the rest of the priests and Levites in conjunction with him. Patrick.

HOLY-ROOD Day.* n. s. The old festival, called also Holy-Cross day; instituted on account of the recovery of a large piece of the Cross, by the emperor Heraclius, after it had been taken away, on the plundering of Jerusalem by Cosroes, king of Persia, about the year of Christ 615; the fourteenth day of September. Brand.

This day, they say, is called holy-rood day,
And all the youth are now a nutting gone.

Com. of Grim the Collier of Croydon.

HOLY-THURSDAY. n. s. The day on which the ascension of our Saviour is commemorated, ten days before Whitsuntide.

HOLY-WEEK. n. s. The week before Easter, in which the passion of our Redeemer is commemorated.

HOLYDAY.† n. s. [holy and day.]

1. The day of some ecclesiastical festival.

The histories, which were writ before the reformation, do frequently speak of transactions happening upon such a holy-day, or about such a time, without mentioning the month; relating one thing to be done at Lammas-tide, and another about

H O M

Marbletops, &c. so that were these names quite left out of the calendar, we might be at a loss to know, when several of these transactions happened. Wheatly on the Comm. Prayer.

2. Anniversary feast.

This victory was so welcome unto the Persians, that in memorial thereof they kept that day as one of their solemn holidays for many years after. Knolles, Hist.

Rome's holidays you tell, as if a guest
With the old Romans you were wont to feast. Waller.

3. A day of gayety and joy.

My approach has made a little holy-day,
And every face was dress'd in smiles to meet me. Rowe, Jane Shore.

4. A day of rest from ordinary occupation.

Suppose you had a mind to persuade Mr. Maittaire to give you a holy-day, would you bluntly say to him, give me a holy-day? Ld. Chesterfield.

HOLYDAY.* adj.

1. Befitting a holiday; gay; cheerful.

Headbands, holyday clothes, and vells, glasses, and scarfs.
Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580,) fol. 7.

What, have I 'scaped love-letters in the holydy time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them?
Shakespeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

2. Occurring seldom.

Courage is but a holyday kind of virtue, to be seldom exercised. Dryden.

HOMAGE. n. s. [homage, French; homagium, low Latin.]

1. Service paid and fealty professed to a sovereign or superior lord.

Call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects. Shakespeare.

The chiefs, in a solemn manner, did their homages and made their oaths of fidelity to the earl marshal. Davies.

2. Obedience; respect paid by external action.

The gods great mother, when her heav'nly race
Do homage to her. Denham.

A tuft of daisies on a flowery lay
They saw, and thitherward they bent their way;
To this both knights and dames their homage made,
And due obedience to the daisy paid. Dryden.

Go, go, with homage you proud victors meet!
Go, lie like dogs beneath your masters' feet. Dryden.

TO HOMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To reverence by external action; to pay honour to; to profess fealty.

HOMAGEABLE.* adj. [from homage.] Subject to homage.

Of them two he of Holland, being homageable to none,— was the more potent. Howell, Lett. i. ii. 15.

For which he is homageable to the crown of France. Howell, Lett. i. vi. 12.

HOMAGER. n. s. [homager, Fr. from homage.] One who holds by homage of a superiour lord.

Thou bluest, Antony; and that blood of thine
Is Caesar's homager. Shakespeare.

His subjects, traitors, are received by the duke of Bretagne, his homager. Bacon, Hen. VII.

HOME.† n. s. [ham, Sax. The past participle of heman, coire. Mr. H. Took, Div. of Purl. ii. 347.]

A word, however, as Serenius has observed of the highest antiquity; haim, M. Goth. a village, a town; heim, Su. Goth. a house, a mansion; and probably primitive. Wachter views it as derived from heima, to cover, to shield.]

1. His own house; the private dwelling.

I'm now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment. Shakespeare.

Something like home that is not home is to be desired; it is found in the house of a friend. Temple.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife. Dryden.

H O M

When Hector went to see
His virtuous wife, the fair Andromache,
He found her not at home; for she was gone. Dryden.
Those who have homes, when home they do repair,
To a fast lodging call their wand'ring friends. Dryden.

2. His own country.

How can tyrants safely govern home,
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance? Shakespeare.
Their determination is to return to their homes, and to trouble you no more. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
With honour to his home let Theseus ride,
With love to friend. Dryden.
At home the hateful names of parties cease,
And factious souls are weary'd into peace. Dryden.
They who pass through a foreign country, towards their native home, do not usually give up themselves to the pleasures of the place. Atterbury.

3. The place of constant residence.

Flandria, by plenty made the home of war,
Shall weep her crime, and bow to Charles restor'd. Prior.
4. Home, united to a substantive, signifies domestick, or of the same country.
Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign. Bacon.

HOME.† adv. [from the noun.]

1. To one's own habitation.

One of Adam's children in the mountains lights on a glittering substance; home he carries it to Adam, who finds it to be hard, to have a bright yellow colour, and exceeding great weight. Locke.

2. To one's own country.

Men in distant regions roam,
To bring politer manners home. Gay, Fab. 14.

3. Close to one's own breast or affairs.

He that encourages treason lays the foundation of a doctrine, that will come home to himself. L'Estrange.
This is a consideration that comes home to our interest.
Addison.

These considerations, proposed in general terms, you will,
by particular application, bring home to your own concern.
Wake, Prep. for Death.

4. To the point designed; to the utmost; closely; fully.

Crafty enough either to hide his faults, or never to shew them, but when they might pay home. Sidney.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

A loyal sir
To him thou follow'st: I will pay thy graces
Home both in word and deed. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Accuse him home and home. Shakespeare.
Men of age object too much, adventure too little, and seldom drive business home to the full period; but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.

That cometh up home to the business, and taketh off the objection clearly. Sanderson.

Break through the thick array
Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon him. Addison.

He makes choice of some piece of morality; and, in order to press this home, he makes less use of reasoning. Broome.

I can only refer the reader to the authors themselves, who speak very home to the point. Atterbury.

5. United to a substantive, it implies force and efficacy.

Poison may be false;
The home thrust of a friendly sword is sure. Dryden.
I am sorry to give him such home thrusts; for he lays himself so open, and uses so little art to avoid them, that I must either do nothing, or expose his weakness. Stillingfleet.

HO'MEBORN. adj. [home and born.]

1. Native; natural.

Though to be thus elemented, arm
These creatures from homeborn intrinseick harm. Donne.

2. Domestick; not foreign.

Num'rous bands
With homeborn lyes, or tales from foreign lands. Pope.

H O M

HO'MEBRED. adj. [home and bred.]

1. Native; natural.

God hath taken care to anticipate every man, to draw him early into his church, before other competitors, homebred lusts, or vicious customs of the world, should be able to pretend to him. Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. Not polished by travel; plain; rude; artless; uncultivated.

Only to me two homebred youths belong. Dryden.

3. Domestick; not foreign.

But if of danger, which hereby doth dwell,
And homebred evil, ye desire to hear,
I can you tydings tell. Spenser, F. Q.

This once happy land,
By homebred fury rent, long groan'd. Philips.

HO'MEFELT. adj. [home and felt.] Inward; private.

Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;
But such a sacred and homefelt delight,
Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard till now. Milton, Comus.

Happy next him, who to these shades retires,
Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires,
Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,
Successive study, exercise, and ease. Pope.

HO'MEKEEPING.* adj. [home and keep.] Staying at home.

Homekeeping youth have ever homely wits.
Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

HO'MELESS.* adj. [home and less.] Wanting a home; having no home.

HO'MELILY. adv. [from homely.] Rudely; inelegantly.

HO'MELINESS.† n. s. [from homely.] Plainness; rudeness; coarseness. Originally, management; care of home. So "Grisild's wifely homeliness." Chaucer, Cl. Tale.

Coarse tapestry may, afar off, show welly which, when it comes to be close viewed, discovers an homeliness in texture and faults enough, both in shapes and colours. D. Hall, Rem. p. 51.

Homer has opened a great field of railery to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homeliness of some of his sentiments. Addison.

HO'MELY.† adj. [from home. And at first this adjective signified what related to home or household.

"The enemyes of a man ben they that ben homely with hym." Wicliffe, St. Matt. x. 36. "They of his own household. Pres. Version.] Plain; homespun; not elegant; not beautiful; not fine; coarse; rude.
It is used both of persons and things.

Each place handsome without curiosity, and homely without loathsomeness. Sidney.

Within this wood, out of a rock did rise
A spring of water mildly tumbling down;
Whereto approached not in any wise
The homely shepherd nor the ruder clown. Spenser.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakespeare.

Be plain good son, and homely in thy drift:
Riddling confession finds but riddling drift. Shakespeare.

Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Shakespeare.
Our stomachs will make what's homely savoury. Shakespeare.

It is for homely features to keep home;
They had their name thence. Milton, Comus.

It is observed by some, that there is none so homely but loves a looking-glass. South.

Their homely fare dispatch'd, the hungry band
Invade their trenchers next. Dryden.

Now Strephon daily entertains
His Chloe in the homeliest strains. Swift.

*Homely persons, the more they endeavour to adorn themselves, the more they expose the defects they want to hide.
Clarendon.

H O M

HOMELY.† adv. Plainly; coarsely; rudely.

It is a bashful child; homely brought up,
In a rude hostility. B. Jonson, New Inn.

Thus like the god his father, homely drest,
He strides into the hall a horrid guest. Dryden.

HOMELYN. n. s. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

Our homespun authors must forsake the field,
And Shakspeare to the soft Scarlati yield. Addison.

HOMESPUN. n. s. A coarse, inelegant, rude, untaught, rustick man. Not in use.

What hempen, homespun have we swaggering here,
So near the cradle of the fairy queen? Shakspeare.

HOMESTEAD.* n. s. [ham and stede, Saxon.] The place of the house; including sometimes a small portion of land adjoining the house.

I do not see thee led into the market-place, or any other part of the city, or thy homestead of Nazareth, but into the vast wilderness. Bp. Hall, Contempl. Christ tempted.

Both house and homestead into seas are borne,
And rocks are from their old foundations torn. Dryden.

Through every homestead and through every yard
(His midnight walks) panting, forlorn he flies. Somerville.

HOMeward.† adv. [ham and peapd, Saxon.] Towards home; towards the place of residence.

Then Urania homeward did arise,
Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.

My affairs
Do even drag me homeward. Shakspeare.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

Looke homeward, angel, now, and melt with ruth;
And O ye dolphins, wait the hapless youth! Milton, Lycidas.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures borne,
They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return. Dryden.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And, wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence. Dryden.

HOMICIDE. n. s. [homicide, Fr. homicidium, Lat.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood: construe this

H O M

according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker.

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is less than lives. Dryden.

3. [Homicide, Fr. homicida, Lat.] A murderer; a manslayer.

I'd undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.

—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakspeare.

Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His cop'ring arms, with corps to strew the field. Dryden.

HOMICIDAL. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.

The troop forth issuing from the dark recess,
With homicidal rage the king oppress. Pope.

HOMILETICAL. adj. [ὁμιλητικός.] Social; conversable.

His life was holy; and when he had leisure for retirement, severe: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy sullen ones of the cloyster. Atterbury, Charact. of Luther.

HOMILIST.* n. s. [from homily.] One who preaches to a congregation.

To this good homilist I have ever been stubborn. Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.

HOMILY. n. s. [homilie, Fr. ὁμιλία.] A discourse read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times; a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons. Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried, Have patience, good people. Shakspeare, As you like it.

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church, we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day. Hammond, Flandam.

HOMOGENEAL.† adj. [homogene, Fr. ὁμογενής.]

HOMOGENEOUS.† adj. Having the same nature or principles; suitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneous parts. Bacon.

Ice is a similiary body, and homogeneous concretion, whose material is properly water. Brown, Vulg. Err.

An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from alum, and so of the rest. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton.

HOMOGENEALNESS.† n. s. [from homogeneous or homogeneous.] Participation of the same principles, or nature; similitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity or homogeneity of parts. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Upon this supposition of only different diameters, it is impossible to account for the homogeneity or similarity of the discerned liquors. Cheyne.

HOMOGENY. n. s. [ὁμογενία.] Joint nature. Not used.

By the driving back of the principal spirits, which preserve the consistence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeny. Bacon.

HOMOLOGOUS.† adj. [homologue, Fr. ὁμόλογος.]

Having the same manner or proportions.

Comparing the homologous or corresponding members on both sides. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 291.

HOMONYMOUS.† adj. [homonyme, Fr. ὁμόνυμος.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous; having a common name for several things, but having a different definition of each by the explanation of that name for each.

It is a rule in art, that words which are homonymous, of various and ambiguous significations, ought ever in the first place to be distinguished. Up. Bramhall against Hobbes, p. 19.

As words signifying the same thing are called synonymous, so equivocal words, or those which signify several things, are called homonymous, or ambiguous; and when persons use such ambiguous words, with a design to deceive, it is called equivocation. Watts, Logick.

HOMO'NYMY. † n. s. [homonymie, Fr. homonymie.] Equivocation; ambiguity.

Shun homonymy, and — state the question.

Shelford, Learned Discourses, (1635,) p. 121.

The devil eartheth himself in an homonymy, as a fox in the ground; if he be stopped at one hole, he will get out at another. Fuller, Holy War, p. 272.

HOMOTANOUS. adj. [homotónos.] Equable; said of such distempers as keep a constant tenour of rise, state, and declension. Quincy.

HONE. † n. s. [This word M. Casaubon derives from ἀκονί; Junius from hogsæn, Welsh; Skinner, who is always rational, from hæn, Saxon, a stone; hænan, to stone; Serenius, from the Icel. hein, a whetstone.] A whetstone.

A hone and a parer, to pare away grass. Tusser.

These snakes they made stiff changelings

Of all the folks they hist on;

They turned barbers into hones,

And masons into free-stone. Ballad of St. George for Engl.

TO HONE. † v. n. [hongian, Saxon.] To pine; to long for any thing.

His heart is still with her, to talk of her, admiring, and commending her, lamenting, honing, wishing himself any thing for her sake. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 533.

HONEST. † adj. [honeste, Fr. honestus, Lat.]

1. Upright; true; sincere.

What art thou?

— A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as the king. Shakespeare.

An honest physician leaves his patient, when he can contribute no further to his health. Temple.

The way to relieve ourselves from those sophisms, is an honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of things. Watts, Logick.

2. Chaste.

Wives may be merry, and yet honest too. Shakespeare.

3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.

Tate will subscribe, but fix no certain day,

He's honest, and as wit comes in, will pay. Tate.

4. Creditable; honourable.

It is not honest, it may not advance. Chaucer, C. T. Prof.

No manner of art that was honest. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 49. b.

— Let ours also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, [in the margin, profess honest trades]. Titus, iii. 14.

5. Well-looking; jolly; open. [Lat. honestus.]

Bacchus, ever fair and young; —

Flush'd with a purple grace,

He shews his honest face. Dryden, Alex. Feast.

The strong laborious ox, of honest front. Thomson, Summer.

6. HONEST Fellow. An ironical expression, as good-fellow is sometimes used; denoting a jovial companion.

I was five hours with three merry, and two honest, fellows.

The former sang catches; and the latter even died with laughing at the noise they made. — Says one of the honest fellows, — let us drink about. We did so from seven of the clock until eleven! Taller, No. 45.

TO HO'NEST. † v. a. [Lat. honesto.] To adorn; to grace; to credit.

He also did honest and honour the same with his presence.

Abp. Sandys, Sermon, fol. 139.

You have very much honested my lodging with your presence.

B. Jonson, Epicoene.

TO HO'NESTATE. † v. a. [Lat. honestatus.] To honour. Cockeram.

Not in use.

HONESTA'TION. † n. s. [Lat. honestatio.] Adornment; grace.

Many courtiers have brought out with them much of this precious metal of human prudence and sagacity, by which virtuous qualities and honestations they have been more happy than others in their applications to move the minds of men.

W. Montague, Dev. Ess. P. I. (1648,) p. 118.

HO'NESTLY. adv. [from honest.]

1. Uprightly; justly.

It doth make me tremble,

There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot live honestly, would rather perish basely. B. Jonson.

For some time past all proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift.

2. With chastity; modestly.

HO'NESTY. † n. s. [honesteté, Fr. honestas, Lat.]

1. Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

— Why, then mine honesty shall be my dowry. Shakespeare.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.

2. Honour; credit.

For the honesty of your shooting. Ascham, Turph. B. r.

You looked some time to have had honesty, pleasures, and commodities. Bp. Ridley, Farewell to his Friends.

3. Frankness; liberality.

A noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. — Every man has his fault, and honesty is his.

Shakespeare, Tim. of Ath.

HONEY. n. s. [hunig, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honey, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Of honey, the first and finest kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb, is destined for the young offspring; but in hard seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves. Hill, Mat. Med.

So work the honey bees,

Creatures that by a ruling nature teach

The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Touching his education and first fostering, some affirm, that, he was fed by honey bees. Raleigh, Hist.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot. L'Esturgeon.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sopo, resolvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbutnot.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

3. Sweet; sweetness; a name of tenderness. [Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. "Oh, my sweet,
I prattle out of fashion, and I dote. Shakespeare, Othello.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee. Dryden.

To HO'NEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty sty. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

HO'NEY-BAG. n. s. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which bees always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter.

Grew, Museum.

HO'NEY-COMB. n. s. [honey and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

HO'NEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun, which was honeycombed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire.

Wiseman.

HO'NEY-DEW. n. s. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Mortimer.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

HO'NEY-FLOWER. n. s. [melanthus, Lat.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name.

Miller.

HO'NEY-GNAT. n. s. [mellio, Latin; honey and gnat.]

An insect. Ainsworth.

HO'NEY-HARVEST. n. s. [honey and harvest.] Honey collected.

Bees — haunt the fields, and bring Their honey-harvest home. Dryden, Ovid.

HO'NEY-MOON. n. s. [honey and moon.] The first month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

And now their honey-moon, that late was clear,

Doth pale, obscure, and tenebrous appear. Cornucopia, (1612).

A man should keep his finery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the honey-moon is over. Addison.

HO'NEY-MONTH. n. s. [honey and month.] The honey moon.

Sometimes the parties fly asunder even in the midst of courtship, and sometimes grow cool in the very honey-month.

Tatler, No. 192.

HO'NEY-MOUTHED. adj. [honey and mouth.] Flattering; using honied words.

He must be told on't, and he shall: the office
Becomes a woman best; I'll take't upon me:

If I rove honey-mouth'd, let my tongue blister.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

HO'NEY-STALK. n. s. Clover-flower. Johnson.

With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous,
Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep. Titus Andronicus.

HO'NEY-SUCKLE. n. s. [caprifolium, Lat.]

1. Woodbine; the plant.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tu-bulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips;
the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a hunter's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shakespeare.

A bank

With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton, Comus.

2. The flower or blossom of the woodbine.

Woodbine that beareth the honeysuckle. Barret, Alt. (1580).

So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle
Gently entwist. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

A honey-suckle,

The amorous woodbine's offspring.
Siricy and Naples, or The Fatal Union, (1640.)

Then melfoil bent, and honeysuckles pound;
With these alluring savours strew the ground. Dryden.

HO'NEY-SWEET. n. s. Sweet as honey.

The virtuous quiete,

That is in marriage honey-sweet. Chaucer, March. Tale.

Pr'ythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Stains.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

HO'NEY-TONGUED. n. s. [honey and tongue.] Using soft speech.

This is the flower that smiles on every one,
To show his teeth as white as whale's bone;
And consciences, that will not die in debt,
Pay him the due of honey-tongu'd Boyet. —
A blister on his sweet tongue, with my heart!

Shakespeare, Love's L. Lost.

HO'NEY-WORT. n. s. [ecrinthe, Lat.] A plant.

HO'NEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Being without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless. Shakespeare.

HO'NEYED. adj. [from honey.] This is an adjective of frequent occurrence in our old poets; but it is not confined to them; for the admirable author of the Christian Life has also adopted it.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flowery work doth sing. Milton, Il Pens.

2. Sweet; luscious.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honied words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton, S. A.

The Grecian sophists, as Plutarch tells us, by their singing tones, and honied words, and effeminate phrases and accents, did very often transport their auditors into a kind of bacchical enthusiasm. Scott, Works, ii. 129.

HO'NIEDNESS. n. s. [from honied.] Sweetness; allurement. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HO'NORARY. adj. [honorarius, Lat.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison on Italy.

This monument is only honorary; for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addison.

HONOUR. n. s. [honneur, French; honor, old French and Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

I will promote thee unto very great honour. Num. xxii. 17.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not now used, Dr. Johnson says. It was applied, however, in his time, as it is now, to the Master of the Rolls; and now also to the great law-officer, of modern appointment, called the Vice-Chancellor.

Return unto thy lord,

Bid him not fear the separated counsils:

His honour and myself are at the one;

And at the other is my good friend Catesby. Shakespeare.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours
Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee. Shakespeare.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may
Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
— That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shakespeare.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from conscience, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honour is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakespeare.

His Grace of Canterbury,

Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants.

— Ha! 'tis he, indeed!

Is this the honour they do one another? Shakespeare.

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it, implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers.

7. Chastity.

Be she honour-flaw'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven:
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Shakespeare.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton, P. L.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burnes, Theory.

10. Publick mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden, Æn.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that at best, can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wake, Prep. for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shakespeare.

Honours were conferred upon Antonine by Hadrian in his infancy. Wotton, Rom. Hist.

12. Civilities, paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The sire then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryden.

14. Seignior; lordship.

Being his majesty's steward of his majesty's honour and manor of Woodstock. 14. Clarendon, Life Contin. iii. 949.

15. Honour, or on my honour, is a form of protestation used by the lords in judicial decisions.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise. Shakespeare.

TO HONOUR. v. a. [honnorer, French; honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Esth. xvi. 11.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Isai. x. 30.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? Eccles. x. 31.
How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

We nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shakespeare.

3. To glorify.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, that the Egyptians may know that I am the lord. Ex. xiv.

HONOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth? Isa. xxiii. 8.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shakespeare.

3. Conferring honour.

Think'st thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Shakespeare.

Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought. Dryden.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable task on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Sith this wretched woman overcame,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Spenser, F. Q.

5. Not to be disgraced.

'Here's a Bohemian Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman? — let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shakespeare.

6. Free from taint; free from reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Joppe for an haven. 1 Mac. xiv. 5.

"Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable." Shakespeare.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The earl sent again to know if they would entreat their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself they would most thankfully embrace it. Hayward.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,

Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow. Shakespeare.

8. Equitable.

HO'NOURABLENESS.† n. s. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity; dignity; honesty.

My next place, of the honourableness of marriage amongst all, he smoothes over with a pretended concession.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 108.

Peter, moved with the patriarch's persuasions, the equity and honourableness of the cause, — took the whole business upon him. Fuller, Holy War, p. 11.

To spread the fame of the Gospel in the world; to make it appear lovely in the eyes of all beholders; and to allure them to submit to the honourableness, the gentleness, the easiness of its yoke. Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 366.

The dignity of the office, and honourableness of the employment. Echard, Gr. of Cont. of the Clergy, p. 126.

HO'NOURABLY. adv. [from honourable.]

1. With tokens of honour.

The rev'rend abbot,

With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him. Shakespeare.

2. Magnanimously; generously.

After some six weeks, which the king did honourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason, and condemned. Bacon.

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.

'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve:

Why did I not more honourably starve! Dryden.

HO'NOURER.† n. s. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not omit Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

First, for what concerns our own church: He was a sincere honourer and approver of it.

Ward, Life of Dr. Henry More, p. 165.

HO'NOURLESS.* adj. [from honour and less.] Without honour; not honoured.

That religion, which renders void the first precept of my text, by taking away the "fear of God," will always be for introducing a form of government which renders void the second; by taking away all "honour from the king." And so, reciprocally, will an honourless king promote the worship of a fearless God. Warburton, Sermon, xiv.

HOOD.† n. s. [Sax. hab; German heit; Dutch heid.]

Quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

Thou ken'st little good

So vainly to advance thy heedlesse hood.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

HOOD.† n. s. [Hob, Saxon, probably from hefod, head. Dr. Johnson. — Chaucer writes it hovec, and Mr. Tyrwhitt derives it from the Teut. hoofd, the head. Mr. H. Tooke views it as the participle of the Sax. heapan, to heave or lift up. Ruddiman, as the Dutch huyve, huyf, a coif, huyven, to cover the head. And thus also Serenius refers to the Aleth. khuten, huoden, to cover, to protect.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

The glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils.

Isaiah, iii. 23.

In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd;

Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

All hoods make not monks.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VIII.

He undertook so to muffle up himself in his hood, that none should discern him.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree. It is so named from the hood or cowl of the monks; the cut or fashion of which was so contrived, that in cold or wet weather it might be a covering to the head; or, at other times, might be thrown back, hanging upon the neck by the lower end, after the same manner as the academical hood is now worn.

Such ministers, as are graduates, shall wear upon their surplices such hoods as are agreeable to their degrees; which no minister shall wear, being no graduate, under pain of suspension. Constit. and Canons Eccl. 58.

To HOOD.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in a hood.

Holcroft.

To converse veiled and hooded, and sing like a devout nun.

Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, (1674,) p. 316.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd.

Pope.

2. To disguise, as in a hood.

But hooded with the shew of outward love,

Beguiling my simplicity of mind,

He in the end a deadly foe did prove. Mir. for Mag. p. 648.

3. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes

Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, Amen. Shakespeare.

4. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,

In firmamental waters dipt above;

Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,

And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryden.

5. To put the covering on the head of a hawk. A term of falconry, applied to a hawk when he is not to fly. See the third sense of Hood.

See him laugh'd at! See him baffled!

As a hooded hawk, or owl

With light blinded, when the fowl

With their armies flock about her,

Some to beat, and some to flout her. Fanshawe, Pastor Fido.

HO'ODMAN Blind. n. s. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name! blindman's buff.

What devil was't,

That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind? Shakespeare.

To HO'ODWINK. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hoodwinking themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries. Shakespeare.

Then she who hath been hoodwink'd from her birth,

Doth first herself within death's mirror see. Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one lost,

And, hoodwink'd, for a man embrace a post. B. Jonson.

Satan is fain to hoodwink those that start. Dec. of Piety.

Prejudice so dexterously hoodwinks men's minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?

Fantastick cruelty of hoodwink'd chance!

Racine.

On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds resort,

The hoodwink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Garth.

2. To cover; to hide.

Be patient, for the prize, I'll bring thee to,
Shall hoodwink this mischance.

Shakespeare.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all men's ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hoodwinked with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him.

Sidney.

HOOE. n. s. [hoef, Saxon; hoef, Dutch.] The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets.

Ezek. xxvi. 11.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoofs.

Metc.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the fore-feet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, insomuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent.

Farrier's Dict.

TO HOOF. * v. n. [from the noun.] To walk; to move by leisurely steps: applied to cattle.

To hoof it o'er as many weary miles,—
As e'er the bravest antler of the woods.

Ethiwall, W. Scott's Lady of the Lake, Notes.HOOFED. adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest.

Grew.

HOOK. † n. s. [hoce, hooce, Saxon; hoock, Dutch; hake, Icel. hokni, crooked, and Teut. haeck, the same.]1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot-hooks.

This falling not, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they assayed with great hooks and strong ropes to have pulled it down.

Knolles.

2. The curvated wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hooks,
That from the foolish fish their baits do hide.

Spenser.

My bended hook shall pierce

Their slimy jaws.

Shakespeare.

Though divine Plato thus of pleasures thought,

They us with hooks and baits, like fishes, caught.

Denham.

3. A snare; a trap.

A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for, besides that hook of wiving,
Fairness, which strikes the eye.

Shakespeare.

4. An iron to seize the meat in the caldron.

About the caldron many cooks accoil'd,
With hooks and ladles, as need did require;
The while the vinds in the vessel boil'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

5. A sickle to reap corn.

Pease are commonly reaped with a hook at the end of a long stick.

Mortimer.

6. Any instrument to cut or lop with.

Nos that I'd lop the beauties from his hook,
Like slashing Bentley with his desperate hook.

Pope.

7. The part of the hinge fixed to the post: whence the proverb, off the hooks, for in disorder.

My doublet looks,

Like him that wears it, quite off o' the hooks.

Cleveland.

She was horribly bold, meddling, and expensive, easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again.

L'Esrange.

While Sheridan is off the hooks,
And friend Delany at his books.

Swift.

8. HOOK. [In husbandry.] A field sown two years running.

Ainsworth.

9. HOOK or CROOK. One way or other; by any expedient; by any means direct or oblique. Ludicrous, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the two examples from Hudibras and Dryden. The phrase is very ancient in our language, although ascribed to the names of two learned judges, in the time of Charles the First, Hooke and Crooke; implying, that a difficult cause was to be gotten either by Hooke or Crooke. See observations on Spenser by Warton, who says that the phrase occurs in Skelton; and that the form was not then invented as a proverb, but applied as a pun. The fact is, that hook is the same as crook; our old dictionaries, under hook, say, "a hook or crook;" Huloet, Barret, &c. The original meaning therefore was, either in one form or the other.

For all your braggies, hookes and crookes, you have such a fall, as you shall never be able to stande upright again.

Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, fol. 347.

That which her size had scrap't by hook and crooke.

Spenser, F. Q. v. li. 27.

Master of almost two millions yearly, what by hook or crook.

Milton, Eiconocl. ch. xi.

Which he by hook or crook had gather'd,

And for his own inventions father'd.

Hudibras.

He would bring him by hook or crook into his quarrel.

Dryden.

TO HOOK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To catch with a hook.

The huge jack he had caught was served up for the first dish: upon our sitting down to it, he gave us a long account how he had hooked it, played with it, foiled it, and at length drew it out upon the bank.

Addison.

2. To entrap; to ensnare.

3. To draw as with a hook.

But she

I can hook to me.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

4. To fasten as with a hook.

5. To draw by force or artifice.

There are many branches of the natural law no way reducible to the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences.

Morrison.

HOOKED. † adj. [from hook.]

1. Bent; curvated.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet grypus, for an hooked or aquiline nose.

Brown.

Now thou threaten'st, with unjust decree,

To seize the prize which I so dearly bought:

Mean match to thine; for still above the rest,

Thy hook'd rapacious hands usurp the beat.

Dryden.

Caterpillars have claws and feet: the flaws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the backsides of leaves.

Grew.

2. Furnished with hooks, or any instrument to cut with. [falcatus, Lat.]

The hooked chariot stood,

Unstain'd with hostile blood.

Milton, *Ode Nativ.HOOKEDNESS. n. s. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.HOOKER. * n. s. [from hook.]

1. That which catches as with a hook.

H O O

2. A vessel built like a pirk, but rigged and masted like a hoy; much used by the Dutch. Chambers.

HOOKNOSED. adj. [hook, and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome there, Caesar, I came, saw, and overcame. Shakespeare, Men. IV.

HO'OKY.* adj. [from hook.]

1. Full of hooks. [hamosus, Lat.] Huloet.

2. Pertaining to a hook. [hamatilis.] Huloet.

HOOP. n. s. [hoep, Dutch; hop, Sax. hapt, Icel. a hand, from hypia, to draw in, to contract. Serenius.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,

A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,

That the united vessel of their blood

Shall never leak.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

If I knew

What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' th' world I would pursue it. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?

—About a hoop of gold, a pultry ring.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

To view so lewd a town, and to refrain,

What hoops of iron could my spleen contain. Dryden, Juv.

And learned Athens to our art must stoop,

Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop.

Pope.

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

At coming in you saw her stoop:

The entry brush'd against her hoop.

Swift.

All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at distance.

Richardson, Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addison, on Italy.

To HOOP. v. a. [from the noun.].

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer.

Shakespeare.

The cask for his majesty's shipping were hooped as a wine-cask, or hooped with iron.

Raleigh.

2. To encircle; to clasp; to surround.

If ever henceforth thou

*Shalt hoop his body more with thy embraces,

I will devise a death.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

I hoop the firmament, and make

This my embrace the zodiac.

Cleaveland.

That shelly guard, which hoops in the eye, and hides the greater part of it, might occasion his mistake.

Grew.

To HOOP. v. n. [from wopgan or wopyan, Goth. or Souper, French, derived from the Gothick.

This word is generally written whoop, which is more proper, if we deduce it from the Gothick; and hoop, if we derive it from the French. Chaucer adopts the French form.] To shout; to make an outcry by way of call or pursuit.

They shrieked and they hooped. Chaucer, Nun's Pr. Tale.

To HOOP. v. a.

1. To drive with a shout.

Dastard nobles,

Suffer'd me, by the voice of slaves, to be hoop'd out of Rome.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. To call by a shout.

HOOP.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A shout. See WHOOP.

You have run them all down with hoops and holla's, i. e. with noise and confidence.

Sp. Parker, Repr. Rehears. Transpr. p. 26.

H O P

2. A measure, containing a^o peck, or a quarter of a strike. North. Grose.

3. The bird, called hoopoo. Ray, Dict. Tril.

HO'OPER. n. s. [from hoop, to enclose with hoops.]

A cooper; one that hoops tubs.

Every tinker, tailor, hooper, hostler, cardmaker, and horse-keeper, might as they did compare in learning, and all other offices, above a doctor of divinity.

Martin, Murr. of Priests, (1554.) Ll. ii. b.

HO'OPING-COUGH. n. s. [or whooping-cough, from hoop, to shout.] A convulsive cough, so called from its noise; the chincough.

HO'OPON.* n. s. [Lat. upupa; Gr. εὐψ. Linnæus says the name is from the note of the bird, which resembles it. Others deduce it from the Fr. huppé, crested.] A bird, called also the hoop, of the class of picæ; not a lapwing, as some have asserted.

"Vannellus" (the lapwing) is a new-made name of the French "vanneau;" which bird, by a great mistake, hath been generally taken to be the upupa of the ancients, which is now by all acknowledged to be the hoopon.

Ray, Dict. Tril. p. 22.

To HOOT. v. n. [hwt, Welsh; huer, French.]

1. To shout in contempt.

A number of country folks happened to pass thereby, who hollowed and hooted after me as at the arrantest coward.

Sidney.

Matrons and girls shall hoot at thee no more.

Dryden.

2. To cry as an owl.

Some keep back

The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots and wonders

At our quaint sports.

Shakespeare.

3. To shout in mirth, in good spirits.

With hooting and shouting we pierce through the sky,

And Echo turns huntress, and doubles the cry.

Dryden.

To HOOT. v. a. To drive with noise and shouts.

We lov'd him; but, like beasts,

Our coward nobles gave way to your clusters,

Who did hoot him out o' th' city.

Shakespeare.

The owl of Rome, whom boys and girls will hoot!

That were I set up for that wooden god

That keeps our gardens, could not fright the crows,

Or the least bird, from muting on my head.

B. Jonson.

Partridge and his clan may hoot me for a cheat and impostor, if I fail in any particular of moment.

Swift.

HOOT. n. s. [huéc, French, from the verb.] Clamour; shout; noise.

Its assertion would be entertained with the hoot of the rabble.

Glanville, Scipius.

HO'OTING.* n. s. [from hoot.] A shout: "Hou hou hou, hootings or whoopings; voices wherewith swine are scared, or infamous old women disgraced!"

Cotgrave.

To HOP. v. n. [hoppan, Saxon; hoppen, Dutch; hoppa, Su. Goth. probably from the M. Goth. hup, the hip.]

1. To dance. This is the primary sense, like that of the Sax. hoppan. It is unnoticed by Dr. Johnson. At every bridal would he singe and hoppe.

Chaucer, Coke's Tale.

What good doth all that dauncing of young women holding upon men's armes, that they may hop the higher?

Northbrooke, Treat. against Dauncing, p. 132.

2. To jump; to skip lightly.

I would have thee gone,

And yet no further than a wanton's bird,

That lets it hop a little from her hand,

And with a silk thread plucks it back again.

Shakespeare.

Go, hop me over every kennel home;

For you shall hop without my custom, sir.

Shakespeare.

Be kind and courteous to this gentleman,

Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes.

Shakespeare.

HOP

The painted birds, companions of the Spring,
Hopping from spray to spray were heard. Dryden.

Your Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,
Did no Volpone, nor no Arbaces write;
But hopp'd about, and short excursions made
From bough to bough, as if they were afraid. Dryden.

Why don't we vindicate ourselves by trial ordeal, and hop over heated ploughshares blindfold? Collier on Duelling.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

3. To leap on one leg.

Men with heads like dogs, and others with one huge foot alone, whereupon they did hop from place to place. Abbot.

I always beat him at three jumps; but he could hop upon one leg further than I. Goldsmith, Vic. of Wakefield.

4. To walk lamely, or with one leg less nimble or strong than the other; to limp; to halt.

The limping smith observ'd the sadden'd feast,
And hopping here and there, himself a jest,
Put in his word. Dryden, Homer.

5. To move; to play.

Softly feel
Her feeble pulse, to prove if any drop
Of living blood yet in her veins did hop. Spenser, F. Q.

HOP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A dance. So a hop is still denominated in many parts of England. Ainsworth calls it a place, where meaner people dance. But it is, assuredly, the dance also itself.

2. A jump; a light leap.

3. A jump on one leg.

When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump. Adams.

HOP. n. s. [hop, Dutch; lupulus, Lat.] A plant.

It has a creeping root: the leaves are rough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them; the flowers are male and female on different plants: the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surrounds the stamina, but has no petals to the flower: the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each leafy scale is produced an horned ovary, which becomes a single roundish seed. Miller.

*If hop yard or orchard ye mind for to have,
For hop poles and crotches in lopping to save. Tusser.

The planting of hop yards is profitable for the planters, and consequently for the kingdom. Bacon.

Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop. Bacon.

Next to thistles are hop strings, cut after the flowers are gathered. Derham.

Have the poles without forks, otherwise it will be troublesome to part the hop vines and the poles. Mortimer.

When you water hops, on the top of every hill put dissolved dung, which will enrich your hop hills. Mortimer.

In Kent they plant their hop gardens with apple-trees and cherry-trees between. Mortimer.

The price of hoeing of hop ground is forty shillings an acre. Mortimer.

Hop poles, the largest sort, should be about twenty foot long, and about nine inches in compass. Mortimer.

HOP-BIND.* n. s. [hop and bind.] The stem of the hop. See BIND.

It is made felony without benefit of clergy, maliciously to cut any hop-bind growing in a plantation of hops. Blackstone.

HOP-GARDEN.* n. s. [hop and garden.] A ground planted with hops; formerly, hop-yard; like vine-yard. See HOP-YARD.

HOP-OAST.* n. s. [hop, and probably oastus, Lat. dried.] In Kent, a kiln for drying hops.

HOP

HOP-PICKER.* n. s. [hop and pick.] A person who carefully gathers the ripe hops.

To the festivities of harvest-home must be referred the popular custom among the hop-pickers in Kent. Brand, Pop. Antiq.

HOP-POLE.† n. s. The pole which supports the hop. See HOP.

HOP-YARD.* n. s. [hop and yard.] Ground in which hops are planted. See HOP.

He's busy at his hop-yards now. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

To HOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To impregnate with hops.

Brew in October, and hop it for long keeping. Mortimer.

To increase the milk, diminished by flesh-meat, take malt-drink not much hopped. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

HOPE. n. s. [hopa, Sax. hope, Dutch.]

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.

Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him. Locke.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again. Job, xiv. 7.

When in heaven she shall his essence see,
This is her sov'reign good, and perfect bliss;
Her longing, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this. Davies.

Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;
But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now. Crashaw.

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair. By. Taylor.

He sought them both, but wish'd his hap might find
Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope

Of what so seldom chanc'd: when to his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton, P. L.

The Trojan dames
To Pallas' fane in long procession go,
In hopes to reconcile their heavenly foe. Dryden, Virg.

Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear on't? L'Estrange.

To encourage our hopes, it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Tillotson.

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for sight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.

Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any person.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. 2 Mac. vii. 14.

Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord. Eccles. xiv. 2.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be affected.

I might see from far some forty trunchions draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Straud, where she was quartered. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shakespeare.

She was his care, his hope, and his delight,
Most in his thought, and over in his sight. Dryden.

HOPE.† n. s. [If we can have any confidence in Bullet, hope was used in this sense, in the language of the ancient Gauls, "petite vallée entre des montagnes." Dr. Jamieson.] Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains. Ainsworth.

Hope signifies a dingle, or little valley; and is retained in Kent, and other parts of England, in the names of places.

Gloss. to Urry's Chaucer.

H O P

To HOPE. † v. n. [Sax. hopian.]

1. To live in expectation of some good.

Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

My muse, by storms long tost,

Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;
And finds more favour by her ill success
Than she could hope for by her happiness. Dryden.

2. To place confidence in another.

He shall strengthen your heart, all ye (that hope in the Lord. Psalms xxxi. 24.

To HOPE. † v. a. To expect with desire.

Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Heb. xi. 1.

The sun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-biting winter mars our hop'd-for hay. Shakspeare.

So stands the Thracian herdsmen with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

HO'PEFUL. adj. [hope and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.

He will advance thee:

I know his noble nature, not to let
Thy hopeful service perish. Shakspeare.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert. Bacon.

What to the old can greater pleasure be,
Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Denham.

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threescore. Addison.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand. Hooker.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.

Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,

Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,
Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain. Pope.

HO'PEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such a manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with carls' sons and heirs. Wotton.

They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish. Clarendon.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare. From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature. Glanville.

HO'PEFULNESS. n. s. [from hopeful.] Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.

Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability. Wotton on Education.

HO'PELESS. adj. [from hope.]

1. Wanting hope; being without pleasing expectation; despairing.

Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead? Hooker.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless!
[He]—watches with greedy hope to find Shakspeare.

His wish, and best advantage, us asunder;
Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
To other speedy aid might lend at need. Milton, P. J.

The fallen archangel, envious of our state,
And hopeless to prevail by open force,
Becks hid advantage. Dryden, State of Innocence.

H O R

Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie

In durance, doom'd a ling'ring death to die. Dryden.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.

'The hopeless word of never to return,
Breathe I against thee upon pain of life. Shakspeare.

HO'PELESSLY. * adv. [from hopeless.] Without hope. Is your last hope past to mollify Morecraft's heart about your mortgage? — Hopelessly past. Beaum. and Fletch. Scornful Lady.

HO'PER. n. s. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hoppers, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad repts. Swift.

HO'PINGLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopingly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin. Hahmmond.

HO'PPER. † n. s. [hoppepe, Sax. a dancer.] One who dances, or hops, or jumps on one leg.

I conceive, a female hopper, or dancer, was called a hopper. Tyrrhitt, Notes on Chaucer.

HO'PPER. n. s. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason, tremie or tremu.]

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.

The salt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes. Sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill. Grew.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Just at the hopper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grist ground,
And mark the clack how justly it will sound. Betterton.

2. A basket for carrying seed. Ainsworth.

HO'PPERS. [commonly called Scotch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

HO'PPING. * n. s. [from hop.] A dance; a meeting of persons intending to dance.

Their dances were spiritual, religious, and godly, not after our hoppings, and leaping, and interminglings, men with women. Northbrooke, Tr against Dauncing, p. 178.

In the north of England, — meetings are still kept up under the name of hoppings. Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 428.

HO'P-SCOTCH. * A game. See HOPPERS.

HO'RAL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.

How'er reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

HO'RALLY. * adv. [from horal.] Hourly. Cockeram.

HO'RARY. adj. [horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to an hour.

I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
What you perhaps forgot befell you,
By way of horary inspection,
Which some account our worst erection. Hudibras.

In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers. Tatler.

2. Continuing for an hour.

When, from a basket of Summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration than these horary or soon decaying fruits of Summer. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HORDE. † n. s. [A Tartarian term, implying multitude.] A clan; a migratory crew of people.

H O R

His [a Tartar duke's] hord, consisted of about a thousand households of a kindred. Purchas, Pilgr. (1617,) p. 478.

Such were the hords among the Goths, the clans in Scotland, and castles in Ireland. Temple, Introd. Hist. of England.

They once return'd the flame
Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial hords on hords with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thomson, Winter.

HORE, or HOORE.* n. s. [Sax. hop; old Fr. hore; Cornish, hora.] Our old and proper word for whore. See WHORE.

HORIZON. † n. s. [ὁρίζων, Gr. that which terminates, from ἵκος, a boundary. Shakspeare has once placed the accent on the first syllable of this word: but it should be always on the second.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakspeare h'izon.

When the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakspeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon.

In his East the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all the horizon round
Invested with bright rays. Milton, P. L.

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
That all the horizon laugh'd to see the joyous sight. Dryden.

When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. Addison.

HORIZO'NTAL. † adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon. Pronounced new and unusual, in 1656, by Heylin.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton, P. L.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus. Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Coins.

HORIZO'NTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.] In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with that prodigious celerity. Bentley, Sermon vii.

HORN. † n. s. [haur, Gothick; hopn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]

1. The hard bodies which grow on the heads of some graminivorous quadrupeds, and serve them for weapons.

No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon.

Zelus rises through the ground,
Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,
That tosses back his horns in vain. Addison.

All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley.

H O R

2. An instrument of wind-musick first made of horns; afterwards of metal. See FRENCH-HORN.

The squire gan higher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Spenser, F. Q.
There's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news. Shakspeare.

The goddess to her crooked horn
Adds all her breath: the rocks and woods around,
And mountains, tremble at th' infernal sound. Dryden.

Fair Ascanius, and his youthful train,
With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden.

3. The extremity of the waxing or waning moon, as mentioned by poets.

She blest the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden.

The moon
Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns. Thomson.

4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakspeare.

Aufidius,
Hearing of our Marcius's banishment,
Thrust forth his horns again into the world,
Which were inshe'd when Marcius stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out. Shakspeare.

5. A drinking cup. [horn, Icel. a cup; or probably from being made of horn, or shaped like a horn.]

They attended the banquet, and served the heroes with horns of mead and ale. Mason's Notes on Gray's Poems.

6. A winding stream. [Lat. cornu.]

With sevenfold horns mysterious Nile
Surrounds the skirts of Egypt's fruitful soil. Dryden, Georg. iv.

7. Antler of a cuckold. See CUCKOLD.

If I have horns to make one mad,
Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn-mad. Shakspeare.

Merchants, venturing through the night,
Slight pirates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras.

8. HORN mad. Perhaps mad as a cuckold; or mad for horns.

I am glad he went not in himself: if he had, he would have been horn-mad. Shakspeare, Mer. IV. of W. Malvol.

Horn-mad, some of them, to let others lie with their wives, and wink at it. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

TO HORN.* v. a. To cornute; to bestow horns upon.

Under your patience, gentle empress,
'Tis thought you have a goodly gift in horning. Titus Andronicus.

I not repent me of my late disguise. —
If you can horn him, sir, you need not. B. Jonson, For.

HORNBE'AK. } n. s. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORNFI'SH. } n. s. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORNBEAM. n. s. [horn and beam, Dutch, for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]

It hath leaves like the elm or beech-tree. The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Miller.

HORNBLOWER.* n. s. [Sax. hornblapepe.] One who blows a horn.

HORNBOOK. n. s. [horn and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.

He teaches boys the hornbook. Shakspeare.

Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the hornbook and primer.

To master John the English maid
A hornbook gives of ginger-bread;
And that the child may learn the better,
As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior.

HORNED. † adj. [from horn.]

1. Furnished with horns.

H O R

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that, with the terror of the shock,
Astonished both stand senseless as a block,
Thither all the horned host resorts,
To graze the ranker mead.

Spenser, J. Q.

Denham.

1. Shaped like a horn or crescent; resembling horns; crooked.

The horned moon three courses did expire.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vi. 43.

Milton, Ps. cxxxvi.

The horned moon to shine by night.
These knights of Malta, but a handful to
Your armies that drink rivers up, have stood
Your fury at the height, and with their crosses
Struck pale your horned moons.
A steep cloud-kissing rock, whose horned crown
With proud imperial look beholds the main.

Mir. for Mag. p. 650.

The horned flood bore to our ile
His head more high.
Push'd by the horned flood.
Thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn
Suffices fatness to the fruitful oorn.

Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 5.

Milton, P. L.

Dryden.

HO'RNEDNESS.* n. s. [from horned.] Appearance resembling a horn.

The hornedness of the new moon is still faintly considered by the vulgar as an omen with regard to the weather. They say, on that occasion, the new moon looks sharp.

Brand, Pop. Antig.

HO'RNER.† n. s. [from horn.]

1. One that works in horn, and sells horns.

The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they shave their horns.

Grew.

2. A winder of a horn.

Sherwood.

HO'RNET. n. s. [hymnette, Saxon, from its horns.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.

Silence, in times of suff'ring, is the best;

'Tis dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest.

Dryden.

Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them.

Mortimer.

I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs.

Derham, Phys. Theology.

HO'RNFOOT. n. s. [horn and foot.] Hoofed.

Mad frantick man, that did not inly quake!

With hornfoot horses, and brass wheels, Jove's storms to emulate.

Hakewill on Providence.

HO'RNAING.* n. s. [from horn.] Appearance of the moon increasing.

It the begira of Mahomet fell out upon Friday the 16th of July, and 622 of the Incarnation, beginning (as their years are lunar) from the new moon of that time, but which they account not as others from the conjunction itself, but from the horning, which is the cause why they set up in their steeples a crescent.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650), p. 168.

To HO'RNIFY.* s. a. [from horn.] To bestow horns upon. Cotgrave, and Sherwood. A ludicrous word.

I proceed now to the second kind of theft, which I kept in store for women; I mean that whereby they hornify their husbands.

World of Wonders, (1608), p. 99.

This versifying my wife has hornified me.

Beaumont and Fl. Four Plays in One.

HO'RNISH.* adj. [from horn.] Somewhat resembling horn; hard.

Temperance, as if it were of a hornish composure, is too hard for the flesh, by keeping under the body with fastings and watchings, till it bring it in obedience.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634), p. 21.

HO'RNLESS.* adj. [horn and less. Sax. hornleas.] Having no horns.

H O R

Creatures, whom our common mother nature with admirable wisdom hath created toothless and hornless, he converteth into ravenous wolves and untamed bulls.

Transl. of Boccalini, (1626), p. 17.

HO'KNOWL. n. s. A kind of horned owl. Ainsworth.

HO'RNPIPE.† n. s. [horn and pipe.]

1. A quick or merry musical movement; a kind of dance: supposed to have been adopted from the dances performed to a Welsh instrument, called the pil-corn, i. e. the horn-pipe. The word has been in use, among us also, for the instrument.

A lusty tablere,

That to thee many a hornpipe play'd,

Wheretof they dauncen each one with his maid.

Spenser.

There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis.

Raleigh.

Let all the quicksilver i' the mine

Run to the feet veins, and refine

Your firklum jerklum to a dance

Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,

To wonder at the hornpipes here

Of Nottingham and Derbyshire.

B. Jonson.

Florinda danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends.

Tatler.

2. A wind-instrument; a kind of pipe.

On the right hand of the hornpipe sat a Welsh harp. — Bass-viol and kit; trumpet and Welsh harp; hunting horn and hornpipe.

Tatler, No. 157.

HO'RNSHAVINGS.* n. s. pl. [horn and shave.] The scrapings or raspings of the horns of deer; what we call hartshorn.

Item. What had she then?

Need. Only a fit o' the mother:

They burnt old shoes, goose-feathers, assa-fetida,

A few horn-shavings, with a bone or two,

And she is well again.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

HO'RN SPOON.* n. s. [horn and spoon.] A spoon made of horn.

I will be your partner,

And give it a horn-spoon, and a treen-dish.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

HO'RNSTONE. n. s. A kind of blue stone. Ainsworth.

HO'RNWORK.† n. s. [Goth. haurn, an angle as well as a horn; Sax. hyrn, the same.] A kind of angular fortification.

View with care the real fortifications of some strong place, and you will get a clearer idea of bastions, half-moons, hornworks, &c. than all the masters in the world could give you upon paper.

Ld. Chesterfield.

HO'RN Y.† adj. [from horn.]

1. Made of horn.

2. Resembling horn.

He thought he by the brook of Cherith stood,

And saw the ravens with their horny beaks

Food to Elijah bringing even and morn.

Milton, P. R.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolical figure.

Ray.

Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet.

Dryden.

The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance.

Addison.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrified, it will no longer concrete.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Hard as horn; callous.

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,

Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist.

Dryden.

4. Consisting of horns.

He leads the staring infant through the hall;

Points out the horny spoils that grac'd the wall;

Tells how this stag through three whole counties fled,

What rivers swam, where bay'd, and where he bled.

Gay, Birth of the Square.

H O R

HOROGRAPHY. n. s. [horographic, Fr. hora and γράφω, Gr.] An account of the hours.

HOROLOGE. † n. s. [horologium, Lat. ὁρολόγιον, Gr.]

HOROLOGY. } from hora, and λέγω. "The abbey horologe," the clock of the abbey. Chaucer.] Any instrument that tells the hour: as a clock; a watch; an hourglass.

He'll watch the horologe a double set,
If drink rock not his cradle. Shakespeare.

Before the days of Jerome there were horologies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsammia. Brown.

HOROLOGIOGRAPHY. * n. s. [horologiographic, Fr. ὁρολόγιον, and γράφω, Gr.] An account of instruments that tell the hours; also, the art of constructing dials.

HOROLOGIOGRAPHICK. * adj. [from horologiography.] Pertaining to the art of dialling.

The gnomonick projection is also called the horologiographick projection, because it is the foundation of dialling. Chambers.

HOROMETRY. n. s. [horometric, Fr. ώρα and μετρέω, Gr.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HOROSCOPE. n. s. [horoscope, Fr. ὁρόσκοπος, Gr.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, of opposite signs every seventh year, oppresseth living creatures. Brown.

Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
His sire, the blear-eyed Vulcan of a shop,
From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school. Dryden.

The Greek names this the horoscope;
This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
Our humours, manners, qualities, and arts. Creech.

They understood the planets and the zodiac by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of. Bentley.

HORRENT. † adj. [horrens, Lat. "Horrentia pilis agmina."] Pointed outwards; bristled with points: a word perhaps introduced by Milton.

Him a globe
Of fiery seraphim encircled round
With bright imblazoury and horrent arms. Milton, P. L.

The cruel winds have hurl'd upon the coast
Some helpless bark; while sacred pity melts
The general eye, or terror's icy hand
Smites their distorted limbs and horrent hair. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

HORRIBLE. adj. [horrible, Fr. horribilis, Lat.]

Dreadful; terrible; shocking; hideous; enormous.
No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be sights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon.

A dangeon horrible on all sides round,
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton, P. L.

O sight
Of terror, foul and ugly to behold,
Horrid to think, how horrible to feel! Milton, P. L.

Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuasion that the soul is immortal, are, of all others, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South.

HORRIBLENESS. † n. s. [from horrible.] Dreadfulness; hideousness; terribleness; fearfulness.

The horribleness of sin, the terror of God's indignation. Abp. Cranmer, Def. of the Sacram. (1550), fol. 7.

H O R

The horribleness of a crime committed.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 10.

HORRIBLY. adv. [from horrible.]

1. Dreadfully; hideously.

What hideous noise was that!
Horribly loud. Milton, S. A.

2. To a dreadful degree.

The contagion of these ill precedents, both in civility and virtue, horribly infects children. Locke.

HORRID. † adj. [horridus, Lat.]

1. Hideous; dreadful; shocking.

Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
That we the horrid may seem to those Which chance to find us. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd,
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakespeare.

Horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton, P. L.

2. Shocking; offensive; unpleasing: in women's cant.

Already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say. Pope.

3. Rough; rugged.

Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn,
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden.

This makes the style look rough and horrid, and breaks the noble periods into little fragments. Blackwall, Sac. Class. ii. 132.

4. Gloomy.

A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades. Milton, P. R.

In shelter thick of horrid shade. Pope, Odys.

HORRIDLY. * adv. [from horrid.] Terrifically;

shockingly.
Making night hideous: and we fools of nature,
So horridly to shake our disposition,
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

These inferences, how horridly soever they sound, yet I see not how they can be disclaimed. Lively Oracles, &c. p. 57.

HORRIDNESS. † n. s. [from horrid.] Hideousness; enormity.

A bloody designer suborns his instrument to take away such a man's life, and the confessor represents the horridness of the fact, and brings him to repentance. Hammond.

The looks of beauty she knew how to wear,
And make her horridness appear so sweet,
That she the wisest and most piercing eyes
Had often blinded by her fallacies. Beaumont's Psyche, (1651), p. 281.

There needs no comment to set forth the horridness of these assertions. Bp. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

HORRIFICK. adj. [horrificus, Latin.] Causing horror.

His jaws horrifick, arm'd with three-fold fate,
Here dwells the direful shark. Thomson.

HORRISONOUS. adj. [horrisonus, Lat.] Sounding dreadfully. Dict.

HORROR. † n. s. [horror, Lat. horreor, Fr. from the Gr. ὁρρώω, to fear, to have fear. The French etymologists refer this word, like coward, to the tail, i. e. the Greek ὄρρος, and for a similar reason, see Coward. "Horreor, derivé du Grec ὁρρώω, dont la racine est ὄρρος, le croupion, parce que certains animaux, quand ils ont peur, serrent leur queue entre les jambes." Morin, Fr. Gr. Dict. Etym.]

1. Terror mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.

The horror of death and everlasting damnation.

Abb. Cränner, Def. of the Sacr. (1556) p. 7.

Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
Dip always sodr, beating his iron wings;
And after him owls and night ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy things. Spenser, F. Q.

Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
A trembling horror in our souls we find. Daniel,

Me damp horror chill'd
At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold. Milton, P. L.
Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
Their pride is humbled, and their fear contest. Dryden.

2. Dreadful thoughts.
I have sapt full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaught'rous thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. Gloom; dreariness.
Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood,
The nodding horror of whose shady brows
Threats the forlorn and wandering passenger. Milton, Comus.
Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
Shades every flower, and darkens every green;
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

4. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shrinking. Quincy.
All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

HORSE. n. s. [Sax. hop; Sueth. hors, *hors*a, ors;
Icel. hross or ross, from ras, a course, reiten, Germ. rida, Sueth. to ride. Wachter, and Sere-nius.]

1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught, and carriage.
Duncan's horses, the minions of the ace,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong ordinarily to horses. Locke.

2. A constellation.
Thy face, bright centaur, Autumn's heats retain,
The softer season suiting to the man;
Whilst Winter's shivering goat afflicts the horse
With frost, and makes him an uneasy course. Greene.

3. To take HORSE; to set out to ride.
I took horse to the lake of Constance, which is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison on Italy.

4. It is used in the plural sense, but with a singular termination; for horses, horsemen, or cavalry.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't came by?
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The armies were appointed, consisting of twenty-five thousand horse and foot, for the repulsing of the enemy at their landing. Bacon, War with Spain.

If they had known that all the king's horse were quartered behind them, their foot might very well have marched away with their horse. Clarendon.

The Arcadian horse
With ill success engage the Latin force. Dryden, Æn.

5. Something on which any thing is supported: as,
a horse to dry linen on.

6. A wooden machine which soldiers ride by way of punishment. It is sometimes called a timber-mare.

7. As fine as a HORSE. A phrase applied to a person tawdrily or gaudily dressed.

It being the custom in this month (May) for the passengers to give the waggoner at every inn a ribbon to adorn his team, she soon discovered the origin of the proverb, as fine as a horse; for, before they got to the end of their journey, the poor beasts were almost blinded by the tawdry, party-coloured showing honours of their heads.

Gent. Mag. (1754) vol. xxiv. p. 354.

8. Joined to another substantive, it signifies something large or coarse; as, a horse-face, a face of which the features are large and indelicate. Dr.
Johnson. — The prepositive horse is applied variously to denote several things large and coarse by contra-distinction. Thus, in the vegetable system, we have the horse-radish, horse-walnut, and horse-chestnut. In the animal world there is the horse-cmmet, (or formica leg,) the horse-muscle, and the horse-crab; not forgetting that a fat, clumsy, vulgar woman is jocularly termed a horse-godmother.
Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Language, p. 24.

To HORSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mount upon a horse; to furnish with a horse.
He came out with all his clowns, horsed upon such cartjades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself, if that were thrift, I wish't none of my friends ever to thrive. Sidney.

After a great fight there came to the camp of Gonsalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horsed and armed: Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who's this? Who answered, It is St. Elmo, who never appears but after the storm. Bacon, Apophthegms.

2. To carry on the back.
That treat of the discomfiting of keepers, horsing the deer on his own back, and making off with equal resolution and success. Butler's Characters.

3. To ride any thing.
Stalls, bulks, windows
Are smother'd, leads are fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shakespeare.

4. To cover a mare.
If you let him out to horse more mares than your own, you must feed him well. Mortimer.

To HORSE. v. n. To get on horseback.

Lapping himself up handsomely in his long cloak, he went to horse; and rode as women use: then mounted the harber likewise on his mule. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, iii. 13.

HORSEBACK. n. s. [horse and back.] Riding posture;
the state of being on a horse.

I've seen the French,
And they can well on horseback. Shakespeare.

I saw them salute on horseback,
Beheld them when they lighted. Shakespeare.

Alexander fought but one remarkable battle wherein there were any elephants, and that was with Porus, king of India;
in which notwithstanding he was on horseback. Brown.

When mannish Mevia, that two-handed whore,
Astride on horseback hunts the Tuscan boar. Dryden, Jun.

If your ramble was on horseback, I am glad of it, on account of your health. Swift to Gay.

HORSEBEAN. n. s. [horse and bean.] A small bean usually given to horses.

Only the small horsebean is propagated by the plough.
Mortimer.

HORSEBLOCK. n. s. [horse and block.] A block on which they climb to a horse.

HORSEBOAT. n. s. [horse and boat.] A bont used in ferrying horses.

HORSEBOY. n. s. [horse and boy.] A boy employed in dressing horses; a stableboy.

Some horseboys, being awake, discovered them by the fire in their matches. Knollys, Hist.

HORSEBREAKER. n. s. [horse and break.] One whose employment it is to tame horses to the saddle.

HOR

Under Sagittarius are born chariot-racers, horsebreakers, and tamers of wild beasts. Creech.

HORSECHESNUT. n. s. [horse and chesnut. Esculus.] A tree.

It hath digitated or fingered leaves: the flowers, which consist of five leaves, are of an anomalous figure, opening with two lips: there are male and female upon the same spike: the female flowers are succeeded by nuts, which grow in green prickly husks. Their whole year's shoot is commonly performed in three weeks' time, after which it does no more than increase in bulk, and become more firm; and all the latter part of the Summer is, occupied in forming and strengthening the buds for the next year's shoots. Miller.

The horsechesnut grows into a goodly standard. Mortimer.

HORSECOURSER. † n. s. [horse and courser.] Junius derives it from horse and cose, an old Scotch word, which signifies to change; and it should therefore, he thinks, be writ horsecoser. The word now used in Scotland is horsecouper, to denote a jockey, seller, or rather changer of horses. It may well be derived from course, as he that sells horses may be supposed to course or exercise them. Dr. Johnson. — Under the word scourse, however, he notices the Italian scorsa, exchange; whence, he adds, a horse-scourser.]

1. One that runs horses, or keeps horses for the race.

2. A dealer in horses.

A servant to a horsecourser was thrown off his horse. Wiseman.

A Florentine bought a horse for so many crowns, upon condition to pay half down: the horsecourser comes to him next morning for the remainder. L'Estrange.

HORSECRAB. n. s. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORSECUCUMBER. n. s. [horse and cucumber.] A plant.

The horsecucumber is the large green cucumber, and the best for the table, green out of the garden. Mortimer.

HORSEDRENCH.* n. s. [horse and drench.] Physick for a horse.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen — of no better report than a horsedrench? Shakespeare, Coriol.

HORSEDUNG. n. s. [horse and dung.] The excrements of horses.

Put it into an ox's horn, and, covered close, let it rot in hot horsedung. Peacham on Drawing.

HORSEEMMET. n. s. [horse and emmet.] Ant of a large kind.

HORSEFACE. n. s. [horse and face.] A face of which the features are large and indelicate.

HORSEFLESH. n. s. [horse and flesh.] The flesh of horses.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have colt's flesh baked. Bacon.

An old hungry lion would fain have been dealing with a good piece of horseflesh; but the nag he thought would be too fleet for him. L'Estrange.

HORSEFLY. n. s. [horse and fly.] A fly that stings horses, and sucks their blood.

HORSEFOOT. n. s. An herb. The same with colts-foot. Ainsworth.

HORSEGUARDS.* n. s. pl. [horse and guard.] Regiments of horse of the King's Guard; as the Life-Guards were formerly called, and as now the Oxford Blues are.

HOR

Twelve gentlemen of the horseguards were impanelled, having unanimously chosen Mr. A. Truncheon, who is their right-hand man in the troop, for their forman in the jury.

Addison, Tatler, No. 253.

HORSEHAIR. n. s. [horse and hair.] The hair of horses.

His glittering helm, which terribly was grac'd With waving horsehair. Dryden.

HORSEHEEL. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

HORSEKEEPER.* n. s. [horse and keep.] One employed to take care of horses; a groom; formerly horseknave.

The spirits of the meaner sort had commonly such offices, as we make horsekeepers, neatherds, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 42.

Your horsekeeper tells ye the surfeits of your horse.

Dr. White, Serm. (1615,) p. 50.

HORSEKNAVE.* n. s. [horse and knave, a servant.]

See KNAVE. A groom. Obsolete.

And am but as her horseknave. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

HORSELAUGH.* n. s. [horse and laugh.] Some etymologists contend, that it is a corruption of hoarse laugh; but in such case it must be confined to those who either naturally have a very rough voice, or have got a violent cold; neither of which circumstances are absolutely necessary; for what we call a horse-laugh depends rather upon loudness, rude vehemence, or vulgarity of manner. It seems to be, in fact, no more than an expression of augmentation, as the prepositive horse is applied variously to denote several things large and coarse by contradistinction. Pegge. See the eighth sense of HORSE.] A loud violent rude laugh.

A horselaugh, if you please, at honesty;

A joke on Jekyl.

Popc.

HORSELEECH. n. s. [horse and leech.]

1. A great leech that bites horses.

The horseleech hath two daughters, crying Give, give.

Prov. xxx. 15.

Let us to France; like horseleeches, my boys,

The very blood to suck.

Shakspeare.

2. [From leech; signifying a physician. See LEECH.]

A farrier.

Ainsworth.

HORSELITTER. n. s. [horse and litter.] A carriage hung upon poles between two horses, in which the person carried lyes along.

He that before thought he might command the waves of the sea, was now cast on the ground, and carried in an horselitter.

2 Mos. ix. 8.

HORSELOAD.* n. s. [horse and load.] As much as a horse can carry.

They have, like good sumpters, laid ye down their horseload of citations and fathers at your door.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

HORSELY.* adj. [from horse.] Applied to a horse, Mr. Tyrwhitt observes, as manly is to a man. Not now in use.

This horse —

So high was, and so broad, and long;

Therewith so horsely, and so quick of eye.

Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

HORSEMAN. n. s. [horse and man.]

1. One skilled in riding.

A skilful horseman, and a huntsman bred.

Dryden.

2. One that serves in wars on horseback.

Encounters between horsemen on the one side, and foot on the other, are seldom with extremity of danger; because as horsemen can hardly break a battle on foot, so men on foot cannot possibly chase horsemen.

Hayward.

In the early times of the Roman commonwealth, a horseman received yearly tria milita æris, and a foot-soldier one mille; that is, more than sixpence a-day to a horseman, and two-pence a day to a foot-soldier. Arbutnot on Coins.

H O R

3. A rider; a man on horseback.

With descending show'rs of brimstone fir'd,
The wild Barbarian in the storm expir'd;
Wrapt in devouring flames the horseman rag'd,
And spur'd the steel in equal flames engag'd.

A horseman's coat shall hide

Thy taper shape, and comeliness of side.

Prior.

HORSEMANSHIP. n. s. [from horseman.] The art of riding; the art of managing a horse.

He vaulted with such ease into his seat,

As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,

To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,

And witch the world with nobler horsemanship. Shakespeare.

They please themselves in terms of hunting or horsemanship. Wotton.

His majesty, to shew his horsemanship, slaughtered two or three of his subjects. Addison.

Peers grew proud, in horsemanship to excel;

Newmarket's glory rose, as British's fell. Popc.

HOSANNA. n. s. [ἱσάννα, Greek.] "The word hosanna is a contraction of Hebrew words, meaning Save, I beseech thee; a form of acclamation which the Jews were wont to use in their feast of tabernacles, in which also they used to carry boughs in their hands, and to sing psalms, as it is in the second book of Maccabees, ch. ii. ver. 7. Both these customs of boughs and hymns were usual among the Grecians; in any time of sacred festivity. Hammond on St. Matt. xxi. 9.] A form of acclamation, of blessing, of wishing well; an exclamation of praise to God.

H O S

Through the vast of heaven
It sounded, and the faithful armies rung
Hosanna to the Highest.

Milton, P. L.

The publick entrance which Christ made into Jerusalem was celebrated with the hosannas and acclamations of the people.

Fiddes, Sermon.

HOSE. † n. s. plur. hosen. [hoj, hoja, Saxon; hosan, Welsh; ossan, Erse, ossanen, plur. chausse, Fr. Dr. Johnson — From huten, to cover. Wächter. The old Fr. heuse, or house, should take the place of chausse. *Serenius notices the ancient Su. husor, femoralia laxiora, which we may render crusiers, especially as Barret speaks of "shipmen's hose, or galkigaskins." Our early usage of the word is in the sense of sandals. "Gird thee, and do on thine hosis." Wicliffe, Acts, xii. 8. Where it also appears that hosen was not always the plural.]

1. Breeches.

Guards on wanton Cupid's hose.

Shakespeare.

Here's an English taylor come hither for stealing out of a French hose.

Shakespeare.

These men were bound in their coats, hosen, hats, and other garments, and cast into the midst of the burning fiery furnace.

Shakespeare.

Wm she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,

And knit thee gloves?

Gay, Pastorals.

HO'SIER. n. s. [from hose.] One who sells stockings. As arrant a cockney as any hosier in Cheapside.

Swift.

HO'SPITABLE. † adj. [hospitable, Fr. Cotgrave; hospitalis, Lat.] Giving entertainment to strangers; kind to strangers.

I'm your host:

With robbers' hands my hospitable favour

You should not ruffle thus.

Shakespeare.

Receive the ship-wreck'd on your friendly shore;

With hospitable rites relieve the poor.

Dryden.

HO'SPITABLENESS. * n. s. [from hospitable.] Disposition to entertain strangers; kindness to strangers.

I have two ways to entertain my Saviour; in his members, and in himself. In his members, by charity and hospitableness; "what I do to one of these little ones, I do to him." In himself, by faith; "if any man open, he will come in and sup with him."

Bp. Hall, Contempl. b. iv.

His [Abraham's] benignity to strangers, and hospitableness, is remarkable among all his deeds of goodness.

Barrow, Works, i. 428.

HO'SPITABLY. adv. [from hospitable.] With kindness to strangers.

Ye thus hospitably live,

And strangers with good cheer receive.

The former liveth as piously and hospitably as the other.

Swift.

HO'SPITAGE. * n. s. [from hospitium, Lat.] Hospitality; the duty of a guest to his host. A word perhaps coined by Spenser.

That his ungentle host n'ote him appeare
Of vile ungentleness or hospitage's breach.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 6.

H O S

HO'SPITAL. n. s. [hospital, Fr. hospitalis, Lat.]

1. A place built for the reception of the sick, or support of the poor.

They who were so careful to bestow them in a college when they were young, would be so good as to provide for them in some hospital when they are old.

Wotton.

I am about to build an hospital, which I will endow handsomely for twelve old husbandmen.

Addison.

2. A place for shelter or entertainment. Obsolete.

They spy'd a goodly castle, plac'd

Foreby a river, in a pleasant dale;

Which choosing for that ev'ning's hospital,

They thither march'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

HO'SPITAL. * adj. [hospitalis, Latin: "If hospital were an adjective," says Mr. Pegge in his Anecdotes of the English Language, "the substantive hospitality would follow: but the adjective is hospitable." Certainly, however, hospital is our old adjective; and literally the Latin hospitalis.] Kind to strangers; hospitable. Obsolete.

I am to be a guest to this hospital maid, a good while.

Howell, Lett. (dat. 1621, i. i. 34;

Sidney.

Here, father, take the shadow of this tree

For your good host.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. The landlord of an inn.

Time's like a fashionable host,

That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand;

But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,

Grasps in the comer.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

3. [From hostis, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Old French, host, or ost, an army.] An army; numbers assembled for war.

Let every soldier hew him down a bough,

And bear't before him; thereby shall we shadow

The numbers of our host.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

H O S

The waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh. Exod. xiv. 28.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
Go! looking forth will trouble all his host,
And craze their chariot-wheels. Milton, P. L.

After these came arm'd, with spear and shield,
An host so great as cover'd all the field. Dryden.

4. Any great number.

Give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell Themselves when they be felt. Shakespeare.

5. [hostia, Lat. hostie, Fr.] The sacrifice of the mass in the Romish church; the consecrated wafer.

The Romanists will have Christ's whole body to be in ten thousand places together, and at once; namely, wheresoever their host is celebrated, and in every particle of that host. South, Sermon. vii. 20.

6. A cough. See HAUST.

To HOST. v. n. [from the noun.]

Tooke. See also the participial adjective HEAT.]

1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name?
— Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
— No, though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the gyre of the world, produce, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing so hot as about nine in the forenoon. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt;
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy commotion of so very small corpuscles. Newton.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakespeare.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa. Shakespeare.

3. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthage, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults, that hath been known. Bacon.

He resolved to storm; but his soldiers declined that hot service, and plied it with artillery. Clarendon.

To court the cry directs us, when we found
The assault so hot, as if 'twere only there. Denham.

Our army
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.

HO'TBED. n. s. A bed of earth made hot by the fermentation of dung.

The bed we call a hotted is this: there was taken horsedung, old and well rotted; this was laid upon a bank half a foot high, and supported round about with planks, and upon the top was cast sifted earth two fingers deep. Bacon.

HOT:

Preserve the hotted as much as possible from rain. Evelyn.

HOTBRAINED. adj. [hot and brain.] Violent; vehement; furious. Cerebrus.

You shall find 'em either hotbrain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts. Dryden, Span. Friar.

HO'TCHPOT. † n. s. [haché en poche, French; or

HO'TCHPOTCH. } hachee en pot, French; as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used. Dr. Johnson.—Mr. Tyrwhitt, and others, consider it as the Teut. hutspon, which Kiliau derives from hutsen, to shake.]

1. A mingled hash; a mixture; a confused mass.

Such patching maketh Littleton's hotchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather to a Babelish confusion than any one entire language. Camden, Rem.

A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture or hotchpotch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcass would remain;
But a mash'd heap, a hotchpotch of the slain. Dryden, Jew.

2. Hotchpot, old French, "rapport entre cohéritiers.

1000." Lacombe.] A commixture, or putting together, of lands of several tenures, for the equal division of them. Littleton in Cowel.

A daughter which hath had given unto her any lands in frank-marriage, claiming to be coheir after her father's death to other lands with some sisters, is constrained to suffer that part of land given her before her father's death, to be put in hotchpot, that is, to be mingled together with the lands whereof her father died seized, so that an equal division may be made of the whole. Bullockar, (edit. 1656.)

HOTCOCKLES. n. s. [hautes coquilles, Fr.] A play in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.

The chytindra is certainly not our hotcockles; for that was by pinching, not by striking. Arbuthnot and Pope.

As at hotcockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and real soft mischief in her eye. Gay.

HOTEL.* n. s. [French.] What was formerly hostel; a lodging-house; particularly a publick house furnished with beds, &c. for the accommodation of occasional lodgers, who are there supplied with apartments hired for the night, or by the week. Of this kind of lodging-house, Mr. Malone says, there was not one till about the year 1760. In 1810 he considered the number of them to be above 100. The designation of coffee-house and hotel, is now very common.

HOTHEAD. adj. [hot and head.] Vehement; violent; passionate.

One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and publick liberty; nor a hultheaded, crackbrained coxcomb forward for a scheme of moderation. Arbuthnot.

HO'THOUSE. † n. s. [hot and house.]

1. A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.

Now she professes a hothouse, which is a very ill house too. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meds.

2. A brothel.

Where lately harbour'd many a famous whore,

A purging bill, now fix'd upon the door,

Tells you it is a hothouse; so it may,

And still be a whorehouse: they are synonyms. B. Jonson.

3. A place enclosed, and covered, and kept hot, for rearing tender plants, and ripening fruits. Mason.

H O V

HO'LY. † adv. [from hol.]

1. With heat; not coldly.

The shadow had forspok them,
And Titan, tired in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did holy overlook them.

Shakespeare, Ven. and Adon.

2. Violently; vehemently.

The stag was in life end so holy pursued, that he was driven to make courage of despair.

Sidney.

I do contest

As holy and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

The enemy, now at hand, began holy to skirmish in divers places with the Christians.

Kestler, Hist.

Though this controversy be revived, and holy agitated, I doubt whether it be not a nominal dispute.

Boyle.

3. Lustfully.

Voracious birds, that holy bill and breed,
And largely drink, because on salt they feed.

Dryden.

HOTMOUTHED. adj. [hot and mouth.] Headstrong;
ungovernable.

I fear my people's faith,
That hotmouth'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

HO'TNESS. n. s. [from hot.] Heat; violence; fury.

HO'TSPUR. n. s. [hot and spur.]

1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate, and heady.

My nephew's trespass may be well forgot;
It bath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
A hairbrain'd hotspur govern'd by a spleen.

Shakespeare.

Wars are begun by hairbrained dissolute captains, parasitical fawners, unquiet hotspurs, and restless innovators,

Burton.

2. A kind of pea of speedy growth.

Of such peas as are planted or sown in gardens, the hotspur is the speediest of any in growth.

Mortimer.

HO'TSPUR.* adj. Violent; impetuous.

The hotspurre youth so scorning to be crost.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 25.

I long to see these hotspur senses at it; they say, they have gallant preparations.

Brewer, Com. of Lingua, ii. i.

Hotspur Julius on his mettled horse.

Fanshawe, Poems, (ed. 1676,) p. 279.

HO'TSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.] Vehement; rash;
heady.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspurred Harpalice in Virgil, this proceedeth from a senseless judgement.

Peacham.

HO'TTENTOT.* n. s. A savage inhabitant of the southern extremity of Africa. The word has been sometimes used generally to denote a rude, uncivilized person.

We have an instance of the same nature [in the love of our country] among the very Hottentots. One of these savages was brought into England, taught our language, and in a great measure polished out of his natural barbarity; but, upon being carried back to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his foreign acquaintance.

Addison, Freeholder.

HOTTENTOT Cherry. [mauroceriu.] A plant.

Its characters are these: The flower has five oval petals, which spread open. It hath five stamina, which are situated between the petals; and in the centre is situated a roundish germen, crowned by a trifid stigma. The germen turns to an oval berry with one or two cells, each containing a single oval seed. There are three species, natives of the Cape of Good Hope, and one discovered at Jamaica.

Chambers.

HOVE. † The proterite of heave. [Sax. hof.]

In sea language; she hove off at the next flood.

Regge, Anecd. Eng. Lang. p. 244.

H O V

To HOVE.* v. n. [Welsh hocio, hocio, to hang over.]

To hover about; to halt; to loiter; to stay; to remain. Not now in use.

This quene unto the pleiffe rode,
Where that the hoved and abode.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.

He walked through Holborne,

Three hours after the sunne was downe;

And walked up towarde saynte Gyles in the felde:

He hoved styll, and there beheld,

But there he could not speede of his preye.

Old Morality of Hycke Scornor.

He far away espide

A couple, seeming well to be his twaine,

Which hoved close under a forest side,

As if they lay in wait, or elsh themselves did hide.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 20.

Somepart of those enormities —

The which in court continually hoved.

Spencer Colin Clout.

No joy of aught that under heaven doth hove,

Can comfort me.

Spenser, Sonnet 88.

HOVEL. † n. s. [diminutive of hope, houst, Saxon;
hoffel, German, from hof; Su. Goth. and Icel. hyfile, a cottage.]

1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.

So, likewise a hovel will serve for a roome,

To stacke on the pease, when harvest shall come.

Tusser.

If you make a hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, pluck the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre.

Bacon.

Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd;

Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd.

Dryden.

2. A mean habitation; a cottage.

The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them; where they feed them and milk them, and do all the dairy work in such sorry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the summer.

Ray on the Creation.

To HO'VEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To shelter in an hovel.

And was't thou fain, poor father,

To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,

In short and musty straw.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HO'VEN. † part. pass. [from heave.] Raised; swelled; tumified. Hence, in some places, the expression of hoven-bread. So the Sæved. "broedet haefver, sig," the bread heaves or swells.

Tom Piper hath hoven and puffed up cheeks;

If cheese be so hoven, make Cisse to seek creeks.

Tusser.

To HO'VER. † v. n. [hocio, to hang over, Welsh.

Dr. Johnson. — Sæth. haefwa, fluctuare; Icel.

hefrig, fluctus, procella. Serenius.]

1. To hang in the air over head, without flying off one way or other.

Some fiery devil hovens in the sky,

And pours down mischief.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!

If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,

And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,

Hover about me with your airy wings,

And hear your mother's lamentation.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,

And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night.

Dryden.

Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it.

Addison.

Till as the earthly part decays and falls,

The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;

Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,

Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,

And thence with liberty unbounded flies,

Impatient to regain her native skies.

Prior.

Some less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light,

Hover, and catch the shooting stars by night.

Pope.

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.

The landlord will no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hovereth in expectation of new worlds.

Spenser on Ireland.

3. To wander about one place.

We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates. Addison.

The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possesses itself of it; in the other, it only hovers about it. Locke.

HOVER.* n. s. [from the verb.] A protection; a shelter by hanging over.

The pond also breedeth crabs, eels, and shrimps; and in the beginning, oysters grew upon the boughs of trees, (an Indian miracle,) which were cast in thither to serve as a hover for the fish. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

HOVER Ground.* Light ground; so called in some counties. Ray, and Grose.

HOUGH.† n. s. [Sax. hōz, hoh; usually written hock; though hough is still our northern word.]

1. The joint of the hinder leg of a beast; sometimes called the pastern.

Blood shall be from the sword unto the belly, and dung of men unto the camel's hough. Esd. xiii. 36.

2. [hōie, Fr. houwe, Dutch.] An adze, or an hoe. See HOE.

Did they really believe that a man, by houghs and an axe, could cut a god out of a tree? Stillingfleet.

TO HOUGH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hamstring; to disable by cutting the sinews of the ham.

Thou shalt hough their horses. Josh. xi. 6.

2. To cut up with an hough or hoe.

3. To hawk. This orthography is uncommon. See TO HAWK.

Neither could we hough or spit from us; much less could we sneeze or cough. Grew.

HOULET.† See HOWLET.

HOULT.† n. s. [holt, Saxon.] A small wood. Obsolete. See HOLT.

Or as the wind, in houlds and shady greaves, A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves. Fairfax.

HOUND.† n. s. [hund, Saxon; hund, Scottish; hunds, Goth. "Vox antiquissima, ac propterea multis linguis et dialect. communis." Serenius.]

A dog used in the chase, Dr. Johnson says. At first it was the generical name for dogs.

Nile ye give hooly thing to houndis, neither caste ye your margaritis before swyne, lest peradventure thei defoule hem with her feet, and the houndis ben turned, and al to tere you. Wicliffe, St. Matt. vii. 6.

Hounds and greyhounds, mungrels, curs, Are cleped all by the name of dogs. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Jason threw, but fail'd to wound

The boar, and slew an undeserving hound, And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground. Dryden.

The kind spaniel and the faithful hound, Liket that fox in shape and species found, Pursues the noted path and covets home. Prior.

TO HOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on the chase.

God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively nor affectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bp. Bramhall.

2. To hunt; to pursue.

If the wolves had been hounded by tigers, they should have worried them. L'Estrange.

HO'UNDFISH.† n. s. A kind of fish. Mustela laevis. Ainsworth.

Hour.† n. s. [urupa, Lat.] The hoopes; not the pewet, as Dr. Johnson says, misled by Ainsworth. See HOOROO.

HOURL.† n. s. [heure, Fr. hora, Lat.]

1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes.

See the minutes how they run:

How many makes the hour full compleat.

How many hours bring about the day,

How many days will finish up the year,

How may years a mortal man may live. Shakespeare.

2. A particular time.

Vexation almost stops my breath,

That summer'd friends greet in the hour of death. Shakespeare.

When we can intreat an hour to serve,

We'll spend it in some words upon that business

If you would grant the time. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,

From the first moment of his vital breath,

To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden, Æn.

3. The time as marked by the clock.

The hour runs through the roughest day. Shakespeare.

Our neighbour let her foot to a genteel man, who kept good hours. Taylor.

They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countryman at midnight. Addison.

4. In the plural, the stated times of devotion in the Romish church. [heures, French; horæ canonice, Lat.]

None end is there of their babbling prayers, their — songs, hours, bells, ymages, &c. Bale on the Revel. (1550.) P. i.

The hermite, which his life here led

In streight observance of religious vow

Was wont his houres and holy things to bed.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. v. 35.

HO'URGLASS. n. s. [hour and glass.]

1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.

Next morning, known to be a morning betwixt by the hour-glass than by the day's clearness. Sidney.

In sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.

Shake not his hourglass, when his hasty sand

Is ebbing to the last. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.

We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field. Bacon.

HO'URHAND.* n. s. [hour and hand.] That which performs the office of a hand in pointing out the hour of the day.

We have no perception of the motion of the index on the hand of a clock: and yet this no perception, so many times repeated, becomes real perception, with respect to the minute-hand. Baxter on the Soul, ii. 303.

HO'URI.* n. s. A Mahometan nymph of paradise.

["They are called horhin, and in the singular number hora; and they are reclused, and well watched and guarded in their palaces, and their garments are wonderful: Thus he [Mahomet] boasts, and says further, that their beauty is as the light." Confut. of the Alcoran, 1652, p. 158.]

Suspend thy passage to the seats of bliss,

Nor wish for houries in Irene's arms. Johnson, Trag. of Irene.

HO'URLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour; frequent; often repeated.

Acyone

Computes how many nights he had been gone,

Observes the waning moon with hourly view,

Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryden.

HOU

We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.
HOURLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.

She deserves a lord,
 That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
 And hourly call her mistress. Shakespeare.

Our estate may not endure
 Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
 Out of his lunacies. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

They with ceaseless cry
 Surround me, as thou saw'st; hourly conceiv'd,
 And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
 To me! Milton, P. L.

Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd
 Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden.

HOURPLATE. n. s. [hour and plate.] The dial; the plate on which the hours pointed by the hand of a clock are inscribed.

If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness. Locke.

HOUUSAGE.* n. s. [from house.] A fee which a carrier, or other person, pays for laying up goods in a house. Chambers.

HOU'US.  adj.* [from house.] Domestick. Not now in use. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HOUSE. † n. s. [huy, Saxon; huys, Dutch; huus, Dan. hus, Su. Icel. and Goth. perhaps from hysa, to receive hospitably, and also to contain. But see also Leigh's Critica Sacra, 1650, p. 25. "A house is named in the Hebrew, of building, beith; in Greek, of dwelling, oikos; in English, of tuition and custody, a house; of the Almain, huis, which is of hu, to defend."]

1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.

Sparrows must not build in his house eaves. Shakespeare.
 Houses are built to live in, not to look on; therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon.

2. Any place of abode.
 The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome stench,
 Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shakespeare.

3. Place in which religious or studious persons live in common; monastery; college.
 Theodosius arrived at a religious house in the city, where now Constantia resided. Addison.

4. The manner of living; the table.
 He kept a miserable house, but the blame was laid wholly upon madam. Swift.

5. Station of a planet in the heavens, astrologically considered.

Pure spiritual substances we cannot converse with, therefore have need of means of communication, which some make to be the celestial houses: those who are for the celestial houses worship the planets, as the habitations of intellectual substances that animate them. Stillingfleet.

6. Family of ancestors; descendants; and kindred; race.

The red rose and the white are on his face,
 The fatal colours of our striving houses. Shakespeare.
 An ignominious ransom and free pardon
 Are of two houses; lawful mercy sure
 Is nothing kin to foul redemption. Shakespeare.

A man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David. St. Luke, i. 27.

By delaying my last fine, upon your grace's accession to the patronies of your house, I may seem to have made a forfeiture. Dryden.

HOU

A poet is not born in every age;
 Two of a house few ages can afford,
 One to perform, another to record. Dryden, Fub.

7. The household; the family dwelling in the house.
 A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house. Acts, x. 2.

They two together enter the house. The house I call here, the man, the woman, their children, their servants. Sir T. Smith, Commonwealth of Eng. ch. 2.

8. A body of the parliament; the lords or commons collectively considered.

Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords, King Charles.

To HOUSE. † v. a. [Sax. hufjan.]

1. To harbour; to admit to residence.

Palladius wished him to house all the Helots. Sidney.
 Upon the North-sea a valley houseth a gentleman, who hath worn out his former name. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Shander lives upon succession,
 For ever housed where it gets possession. Shakespeare.
 Mere cottagers are but housed beggars. Bacon.

Oh, can your counsel his despair defer,
 Who now is housed in his sepulchre? Sandys.
 We find them housing themselves in dens. South.

In expectation of such times as these,
 A chapel hous'd them, truly call'd of ease. Dryden.

2. To shelter; to keep under a roof.
 As we house hot-country plants to save them, so we may house our own to forward them. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

House your choicest carnations, or rather set them under a pent-house, to preserve them in extremity of weather. Evelyn.
 Wit in northern climates, will not blow,
 Except, like orange-trees, 'tis hous'd from snow. Dryden.

A very good housedog, but a dangerous cur to strangers, had a bell about his neck. I. Estrange.

You see the goodness of the master even in the old housedog. Addison.

HOUSEHOLD. n. s. [house and hold.]

HOU

1. A family living together.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny.
A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom.
Shakespeare.
Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

Of God observ'd

The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wonderous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck.
He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men,
A peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith; in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families.
Milton, P. L.
Sprat.

Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,
And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'ertake us all.
Dryden, Fab.

Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark.
In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His household twice a-day to prayers.
Swift.

2. Family life: domestick management.

An inventory, thus importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure,
Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household.
Shakespeare.

3. It is used in the manner of an adjective, to signify domestick; belonging to the family.

Cornelius called two of his household servants.
For nothing lovelier can be found
In woman, than to study household good;
And good works in her husband to promote.
It would be endless to enumerate the oaths among the men, among the women the neglect of household affairs.
Acts, x. 7.
Milton, P. L.
Swift.

HOUSEHOLD-BREAD. * n. s. Bread not of the finest quality. See CHEAT-BREAD.

HOUSEHOLDER. n. s. [from household.] Master of a family.

A certain householder planted a vineyard. St. Matt. xxi. 33.
HOUSEHOLDSTUFF. n. s. [household and stuff.] Furniture of an house; utensils convenient for a family.

In this war that he maketh, he still flieth from his foe, and lurketh in the thick woods, waiting for advantages: his cloke is his bed, yea and his householdstuff.
A great part of the building was consumed with much costly householdstuff.
Spenser on Ireland.
Bacon.

The woman had her jest for her householdstuff. L'Estrange.
HOUSEKEEPER. n. s. [house and keep.]

1. Householder; master of a family.
To be said an honest man and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly as to say a graceful man and a great scholar.
If I may credit housekeepers and substantial tradesmen, all sorts of provisions and commodities are risen excessively.
Shakespeare.
Locke.

2. One who lives in plenty; one that exercises hospitality.
The people are apter to applaud housekeepers than house-raisers.
Wotton.

3. One who lives much at home.
How do you both? You are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here?
Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. A woman servant that has care of a family, and superintends the other maid servants.
Merry folks, who want by chance
A pair to make a country-dance,
Call the old housekeeper, and get her
To fill a place for want of better.
Swift.

5. A housedog. Not in use.
Distinguish the housekeeper, the hunter,
Shakespeare.

HOUSEKEEPING. adj. [house and keep.] Domestick; useful to a family.

HOU

His house, for pleasant prospect, large scope, and other house-keeping commodities, challengeth the pre-eminence. Chaucer.
HOUSEKEEPING. n. s. Hospitality; liberal and plentiful table.

I hear your grace hath sworn out housekeeping. Shakespeare.
His table was one of the last that gave us an example of the old housekeeping of an English nobleman: an abundance reigned, which shewed the master's hospitality. Prior.

HOUSEL. * n. s. [hujl, Saxon, from huns, Gothick, a sacrifice, or hostia, dimin. hostiola, Latin.] The holy eucharist.

Man and wife
Should shew their parish priest their life
Ones a yere, as smit the boke,
Ere any wight his housel toke.
He died within viii daies after without housell or shrift, they say.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 6386.
Bale, Acts of Eng. Vol. (1550) P. i. fol. 60. b.

To HOUSEL. * v. a. [hurlan, Sax.] To give or receive the eucharist. Both the noun and verb are obsolete. Our old lexicography defines it specially, "to minister the communion to one that lieth on his death-bed."
Bullocke, and Cockran.

He shall housel me anon.
Ones a yere at the last it is lawful to be housled.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 6437.
Chaucer, P. vs. Tale.

A priest, a priest, says Aldingar,
While I am a man alive,
A priest, a priest, says Aldingar,
Me for to housle and shrive.

Old Ballad of Sir Aldingar, Perry's Rel.
To shrive, housell, and anointe the sycke; to say dirige and masse, and burye the dead.

Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1543,) sign. G. iii.
The cardinal said mass, and gave the pax; then the king and queen descending were both housled with one host parted between them at the high altar.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 26.

HOUSELAMB. * n. s. [house and lamb.] A lamb kept up, to be fatted in the house.

HOUSELEEK. n. s. [house and leek.] A plant. Miller.

The acerbs supply their quantity of cruder acids; as voices of apples, grapes, the sorrels, and houseleek. Flores.

HOUSELESS. adj. [from house.] Wanting abode; wanting habitation.

Poor naked wretches,
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you?

This hungry, houseless, suffering, dying Jesus, fed many thousands with five loaves and two fishes.
Shakespeare.
Wals.

HOUSEMAID. n. s. [house and maid.] A maid employed to keep the house clean.

The housemaid may put out the candle against the looking-glass. Swift.

HOUSEPIGEON. * n. s. [house and pigeon.] A tame pigeon.

If Semiramis be a wood-pigeon in Greece, it may perchance have been an house-pigeon in the country of Ashur.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 246.

HOUSERAISER. * n. s. [house and raise.] One who builds or raises a house.

The earl I account the more liberal, and the duke the more magnificent; for I do not remember that my lord of Essex in all his life-time did build or adorn any house; the queen perchance spending his time, and himself his means; or otherwise inclining to popular ways; for we know the people are apter to applaud housekeepers than housebuilders. Wotton's Parallel.

HOUSEROOM. n. s. [house and room.] Place in a house.

House-room, that costs him nothing, he bestows;
Yet still we scribble on, though still we lose.

HOUSESNAIL. n. s. A kind of snail. Dryden.

HO'USWIFE. † n. s. [house and wife.] This is now frequently written huswife, or hussy.

1. The mistress of a family.

You will think it unfit for a good housewife to stir in or to busy herself about her housewifery. Spenser on Ireland.
I have room enough, but the kind and hearty housewife is dead. Pope to Swift.

2. A female economist.

Fitting is a mantle for a bad man, and surely for a bad housewife it is no less convenient; for some of them, that be wandering women, it is half a wardrobe. Spenser on Ireland.
Let us sit and mock the good housewife, Fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be disposed equally. Shakespeare.

Farmers in degree,

He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryden.

Early housewives leave the bed,

When living embers on the hearth are spread. Dryden.

The fairest among the daughters of Britain shew themselves good stateswomen as well as good housewives. Addison.

3. One skilled in female business.

He was bred up under the tuition of a tender mother, till she made him as good an housewife as herself: he could preserve arricocks, and make jellies. Addison.

4. A little case or bag, with partitions in it, for articles of female work.

Many women — think it (and no doubt it is) a more rational way of spending their time in knotting, or making an housewife, than in starting difficulties and quirks to puzzle the minds of mankind. Shelton, Deism Revealed, Dial. viii.

HO'USEWIFELY. † adj. [from housewife.] Skilled in the acts becoming a housewife.

When she had learned what food was most agreeable to him, she set herself instantly to prepare it for him with all the housewifely skill of those simpler ages. Delany, Life of David, iii. 66.

HO'USEWIFELY. † adv. [from housewife.] With the economy of a careful woman. Sherwood.

HO'USEWIFERY. n. s. [from housewife.]

1. Domestick or female business; management becoming the mistress of a family.

You will think it unfit for a good housewife to stir in, or to busy herself about, her housewifery. Spenser on Ireland.

He ordain'd a lady for his prize,

Generally praiseful; fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman, Iliad.

Little butter was exported abroad, and that discredited by the housewifery of the Irish in making it up. Temple.

2. Female economy.

Learn good works for necessary uses; for St. Paul expresses the obligation of Christian women to good housewifery, and charitable provisions for their family and neighbourhood. Bp. Taylor.

HO'USEWRIGHT.* n. s. [house and wright.] An architect. Not now in use.

Some, farriers; some, locksmiths; — some, housewrights; some, shipwrights; and some, the joiners of smaller works.

Fotherby, Athcom. (1622), p. 193.

HO'USING. † n. s. [from house.]

1. Quantity of inhabited building.

London is supplied with people to increase its inhabitants, according to the increase of housing. Graunt.

Their lodging was in All Saints' parish, in the back-side housing called Amsterdam. Life of A. Wood, p. 242.

2. Any habitation.

All sorts keep their own way in their housing, journeys, provisions. Bp. Hall, Select Th. § 8.

3. [From houseaux, heuses, or houses, Fr.] Cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental.

Thus fix'd, content he taps his barrel,
Exhorts his neighbours not to quarrel; —
Hides a sleek mare with purple housing,
To share the monthly club's carousing.

Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

HO'USLING. † adj. [from house.] Provided for entertainment at first entrance into a house; housewarming. Dr. Johnson. — Not so; but sacramental; alluding to the marriages of antiquity, as Upton long since observed; which were solemnized sacramento ignis et aquæ; "the housing fire," i. e. sacramental fire, or fire used in that sacrament of marriage. See HOUSSEL.

His owne two hands the holy knots did knitt,
That hope but death for ever can divide;
His owne two hands, for such a turne most fitt,
The housing fire did kindle and provide,
And holy water thereon sprinkled wide;
At which the bushy toade a groome did light,
And sacred lamp in secret chamber hide.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 37.

HOUS. n. s. [from houseaux, or houses, Fr.] Covering of cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental; housings. This word, though used by Dryden, I do not remember in any other place.

Six lions' hides, with thongs together fast,
His upper part defended to his waist;
And where man ended, the continu'd vest,
Spread on his back, the hous and trappings of a beast. Dryden.

HOW. † adv. [hu, Sax. hoe, Dutch; huc, Goth.

How is sometimes an expletive; as in 1 Cor. x. 1.

"I would not that ye should be ignorant how that all our fathers were under the cloud;" where that is sufficient, without how. This redundancy obtains in common conversation.]

1. In what manner; to what degree.

How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me?

Ezod. x. 3.

How much better is it to get wisdom than gold! and to get understanding, rather to be chosen than silver! Prov. xvi. 16.

How oft is the candle of the wicked put out! And how oft cometh their destruction upon them! Job, xxi. 17.

O how love I thy law! it is my meditation. Psal'm cxix. 97.

How many children's plaints, and mother's cries!

How many woful widows left to bow

To sad disgrace!

Daniel, Civ. War.

Consider into how many differing substances it may be analysed by the fire. Boyle.

2. In what manner.

Mark'd you not,

How that the guilty kindred of the queen

Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death?

Shakespeare.

Prosecute the means of thy deliverance

By ransom, or how else.

Milton, S. A.

We examine the why and the how of things.

L'Esrange.

'Tis much in our power how to live; but not at all when or how to die.

L'Esrange.

It is pleasant to see how the small territories of this little republic are cultivated to the best advantage. Addison on Italy.

3. For what reason; from what cause.

How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale?

How chance the roses there do fade so fast?

Shakespeare.

How is it thou hast found it so quickly?

Gen. xxvii. 10.

4. For what price.

How a score of ewes now?

Shakespeare, R. Hen. IV. P. II.

5. By what means.

Men would have the colours of birds' feathers, if they could tell how; or they will have gay skins instead of gay clothes.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

6. In what state.

For how shall I go up to my father?

Gen. xlii. 34.

Whence am I forc'd, and whither am I born?
How, and with what reproach shall I return? Dryden, Æn.

7. It is used in a sense marking proportion or correspondence.

Behold, he put no trust in his servants, how much less in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust? Job, iv. 19.

- A great division fell among the nobility, so much the more dangerous by how much the spirits were more active and high. Hayward.

By how much they would diminish the present extent of the sea, so much they would impair the fertility, and fountains and rivers of the earth. Bentley.

8. It is much used in exclamation.

How are the mighty fallen!
How does the city sit solitary as a widow! 2 Sam. i. 19. Lam. i. 1.

9. In an affirmative sense, not easily explained; that so it is; that.

Thick clouds put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South-sea was utterly unknown; and might have islands or continents. Bacon.

HOWBE'IT. } adv. [how be it.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet; however. Not now in use.

Siker thou speak'st like a lewd lorrel,
Of heaven to deemest so,
Howbe I am but rude and borrel,
Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Things so ordained are to be kept, howbeit not necessarily any longer than till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary. Hooker.

There is a knowledge which God hath always revealed unto them in the works of nature: this they honour and esteem highly as profound wisdom, howbeit this wisdom saveth them not. Hooker.

There was no army transmitted out of England, howbeit the English colonies in Ireland did win ground upon the Irish. Davies on Ireland.

HOW'DY.* n. s. [Ihre has observed, that the Su. Goth. iordgumma, a midwife, is properly iudgumma, from iod, childbirth, and gumma, a woman; as the vulgar in this country [Scotland] often express the name, housy-wife. Dr. Jamieson.] A midwife; so called in the north of England. Grose.

I once heard an etymon of howdy to the following effect: how d'ye; midwives being great gossipers! This is evidently of a piece with Swift's All egg's under the grate!

Brand, Popul. Antiq. ii. 451.

HOW'DYE.† [Contracted from how do ye, and sometimes augmented to how d'ye do.] In what state is your health? A message of civility.

- I now write no letters but of plain business, or plain how'd'ye's, to those few I am forced to correspond with. Pope.

The charge receiv'd, away run I,
And here, and there, and yonder fly,
With services, and how'd'yedoes;
Then home return full fraught with news. Dodsley's Footman.

HOWE'ER. adv. [how and ever.]

1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.

This ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Howe'er repented of. Shakespeare.

To trace the ways
Of highest agents, deem'd howe'er wise. Milton, P. L.

2. At all events; happen what will; at least.
Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, howe'er from the greatest evils; and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, howe'er the chiefest. Tillotson.

3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.
In your excuse your love does little say;
You might howe'er have took a fairer way. Dryden.

Its views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are however at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects.

Addison on Italy.
"I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of persecution, however I do not exclude it. Atterbury.

Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end; which would, however, be a very useful inquiry. Swift.

4. To some of these meanings this word may be commonly reduced, but its power is sometimes almost evanescent.

HO'WITZ, or HO'WITZER.* n. s. A kind of mortar of cannons, of German invention.

HO'WKER, or HO'OKER.* n. s. [hulc, Sax. a galley, a pinnacle.] A vessel so called, much used by the Dutch.

Houkers carry from fifty to two hundred ton; and with a small number of hands will go to the East Indies: they are commonly navigated with two masts, viz. a main-mast and a mizen-mast: they tack soon and short, will sail well, and lie near the wind, and live almost in any sea. Chambers.

TO HOWL.† v. n. [hrglen, Dutch; ululo, Latin.]

Dr. Johnson. — It is a word formed from the sound it expresses, and many languages have a similar term. Fr. huller, to howl or yell. Cotgrave. Su. Goth. and Icel. yla; Sax. gyllan; Gr. ύλαω. See TO YELL.]

1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key. Shakespeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Dan. xxxii. 10.

Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns. Smith.

2. To utter cries in distress.

Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab. Jer. xlviii. 31.

Each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows Strike Heaven on the face. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. To speak with a belluine cry or tone.

Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale
To savages, and howl it out in desert! Philips.

4. It is used poetically of many noises loud and horrid.

HOWL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.

Murder,
Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
These and the like rumours are no more than the last howls of a dog dissected alive. Swift.

2. The cry of a human being in horror.

She raves, she runs with a distracted pace,
And fills with horrid howls the publick place. Dryden, Æn.

HO'WLET.† n. s. [Fr. hulotte.] The vulgar name for an owl, Dr. Johnson says. It is sometimes called Madge-howlet, and Jenny-howlet. Cotgrave defines hulotte, "a Madge-howlet, or a small kind of hairy-legged and rough-footed owl, which hath sticking out on either side of her head a little tuft of feathers."

HOY

Estriches, daunsyng apes, howlettes, meremaydes, and other odible monsters. Bale on the Rovel. (1550.) P. iii. A a. iii.
Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting.
Lizard's leg, and howlet's wing. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Out thou howlet,
Thou should'st ha' given her a madge-owl, and then
Th' hadst made a present o' thyself. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

HOWLING.* n. s. [from howl.]

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.
As when a sort of wolves infest the night
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light. Waller.

2. The cry of one in distress.
The songs of the temple shall be howlings in that day. Mos, viii. 3.
The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

3. Any loud or horrid noise.
With hollow howlings they did chant
That hellish ode. Morse, Poems, (1647.) p. 327.
A peal of thunder immediately follows, with dreadful howlings. Dryden, K. Arthur.

HOWSO.* adv. [abbreviation of howsoever.] Although.
Obsolete.

Let greatness go, so it go without thee;
And welcome come, howso unfortunate;
I will applaud what others do despise;
I love thee for thyself, not for thy state. Daniel, Civ. War, B. 2.

HOWSOEVER.* adv. [how and soever. "This is a word, which nobody would now use in verse; and not many, in good prose." Bp. Hurd on Addison's using it in an Epilogue.]

1. In what manner soever. See HOWEVER.
Berosus, who, after Moses, was one of the most ancient, howsoever he hath been since corrupted, doth in the substance of all agree. Raleigh, Hist.

2. Although.
The man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him. Shakespeare.

HOWVE.* The old word for a hood. See HOOD.

TO HOX. v. a. [from holt, Sax.] To hough; to ham-string.

Thou art a coward,
Which hoxes honesty behind, restraining
From course required. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Lodronius, perceiving the old soldier's meaning, alighted, and with his sword hoxed his horse, saying aloud, This day, valiant soldiers, shall you have me both your general and fellow-soldier, fighting on foot as one of yourselves. Ku Hs, Hist. of the Turks.

HOY.* n. s. [heu, Fr. a Dutch hoy. Cotgrave.]

Junius derives hoy from the French word; but it is, according to Skinner, probably from the Dutch hoogh, or Teut. hoch, hoy, q. d. a ship made high, considering her burthen. Mr. Pegge thinks that the vessel may have received its original name from stopping [i. e. from the naval term hoy, or ho, in the sense of stop] at different small places in its voyage, to take in goods or passengers, when called to or hailed from the shore.—A learned writer on naval subjects calls this kind of vessel a huy: "The huyes, and lighters, hired for carrying of balast." Maydman's Maritime Politicks, 1691, p. 83.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.

He sent to Germany, strange aid to rear;
From whence effoons arrived here three hoyes.
Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs. Spenser, F. Q.
To define a barge and hoy, which are between a boat and a ship, is hard. Watts, Logick.

HUC

HOY.* interj. [old Fr. hu, huye, a term of the chase; huer, to shout, to cry out; Teut. hou; Lat. heus.] An exclamation sometimes used, like the old French term, to encourage dogs; sometimes, in the sense of driving away, i. e. be gone; and sometimes, like holla, for stop, halt. See TO HO.

Away, nasty C. E. transformed by Circe! Hoy! back to her styes! Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Married Clergy, p. 164.
When one ship hails another, the words are, What ship? hoy! that is, stop, and tell the name of your ship.

Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Lang. p. 16.

HU'BAUB.* n. s. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up, up, or hubnob. Dr. Johnson.—It may seem akin to the Teut. hobben tobben, to be in a bustle or hurry, to make a stir. But I rather consider it as a corruption of whoop and up; especially as the early use of the word is in the sense of a cry, a shout; though Dr. Johnson notices only that of a tumult, a riot; and yet his examples from Butler and Milton shew the word in the former meaning. Hubbub was also formerly written whooobub, and seems clearly to have implied, "the whoop is up," the hūc and cry is making. See WHOOBUB, and WHOOB.]

1. A shout; a shriek; a loud or shrill noise.
They heard a noyse of many bagpipes shrill,
And shrieking hubbubs them approaching nere,
Which all the forest did with horrou fill. Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 43.

Within this hour the whoobub
Will be all o'er the prison: I am then Kissing the man they look for. Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen

An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd,
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence. Milton, P. L.
Wolves raise a hubbub at her,
And dogs howl when she shines in water. Hudibras.

2. A tumult; a riot.
They drove fast with him down the Strand, followed by a multitude of people:—all this was done of design for the lady's escape, which in that hubbub she made. Finell's Philox. (1656.) p. 239.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the drag, of the people. Clarendon.

HUBBUB-BOO.* n. s. A word formed from the preceding, and denoting the cry or howling of the lower sort of Irish at funerals.

His followers and kin,
Who far and near came crowding in,
With hubbub-boos. Irish Hudibras, (1689.)
Not the sweet harp that's claim'd by Jews,
Nor that which to the far more ancient Welsh belongs,
Nor that which the wild Irish use,
Frightening ev'n their own wolves with loud hubbubboos.

Sam. Wesley, Pindarick on a Hog.

TO HUCK.* v. n. [harceler, Fr. "to haggle, huck, dodge, or palter long in the buying of a commodity." Cotgrave. From hucker, or hoecker, Teut. a huckster.] To haggle in purchasing goods.

A neat, and hard, and hucking chapman shall never buy good flesh. Hales, Serm. at the end of his Rem. (1673.) p. 20.

HUCKABACK.* n. s. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised. Dr. Johnson.—Rather, a kind of coarse table-linen, having the web alternately crossed, to produce an uneven surface.

Perhaps from the Teut. huyke, a cloak, a covering;
Icel. huckl, a hood.

HUCKLE.* n. s. [perhaps from the Teut. hucken, to sit down. Serenius notices the Icel. hackell,
"tibia ablatis cruribus."] The hip.

Though beaten down and wounded sore,
I' the saddle, and a leg that bore
One side of him, not that of bone,
But much its better, th' wooden one;
Straight — getting up on stump and huckle,
He with the foe began to buckle. Hudibras, i. ii.

HUCKLEBACKED. adj. [hockher, German, a bunch, and back.] Crooked in the shoulders.

HUCKLEBONE. n. s. [huckle and bone. See HUCKLE.]
The hip-bone.

Nay, and that were the worst, we would not greatly care,
For bursting of her huckle-bone, or breaking of her chair,
But greater, greater is her grief.

Gamm. Guffon's Needle, (1551.)

HUCKSTER. n. s. [Teut. huckey, hockker, a pedlar, HUCKSTERER. n. s. an huckster. Y. Kilian.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

A merchant shall hardly keep himself from doing wrong, and an huckster shall not be freed from sin. Eccles. xxvi. 29.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandise. Gov. of the Tongue.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls; the very shame of religion.

South, Serm. ii. 395.

Should thy shoe wretch aside, down, down you fall,
And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,

The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,
But peace expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown. Gay.

There should be a confederacy of all servants, to drive
those China hucksters from the doors. Swift.

Those hucksters or money-jobbers will be found necessary,
if this brass money is made current. Swift.

2. A trickish mean fellow.

Now the ape wanted his huckster man. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Some such desperate huckster should devise

To rowze thine hare's heart from her cowardice.

Rp. Hall, Sat. iv. 4.

To HUCKSTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling for changing their piece into silver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade. Swift.

Despotism itself is obliged to truck and huckster. The sultan gets such obedience as he can. He governs with a loose rein, that he may govern at all.

Burke, Speech on Concil. with America.

HUCKSTERAGE.* n. s. [from huckster.] Dealing;
business.

The ignoble hucksterage of piddling tithes.

Milton, Of Ref. in Eng.

HUCKSTERESS.* n. s. [from huckster.] A she-pedlar.
Sherwood.

HUD.* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of hood, that which covers.] The husk of a nut or walnut.
To hud, to take off the husk. Gloucestershire.

Grosce.

To HUDDLE. v. a. [probably from hood, Dr.
Johnson says. — But it is the German hudehn, to huddle up.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to muddle.

2. To put off carelessly in a hurry.

At twelve she rose with much ado;

Her clothes were huddled on by two.

Now all in haste they huddle on

Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone.

Prior.

Swift.

3. To cover up in haste.

Young, fair, and good! ah, why should young, and fair,
And good be huddled in untimely grave? Edwards, Sonn. 37.

4. To perform in a hurry.

I have given much application to this poem: this is not a play huddled up in haste. Dryden.

When continu'd rain

The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,

Let him forecast his work with timely care,

Which else is huddled when the skies are fair. Dryden, Virg.

5. To throw together in confusion.

Our adversary, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

But here, thou say'st the miseries of life

Are huddled in a group. Young, Night. Th. 8.

7. HUDDLE. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,

That have of late so huddled on his back,

Enough to press a royal merchant down.

Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner.

Bacon.

Thyrsis, whose artful strains have oft delay'd

The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,

And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton, Comus.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and, huddling forwards, fall from high places. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HUDDLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult;
confusion; with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest.

Glanville.

Your carrying business in a huddle,

Has forc'd our rulers to new-model.

Hudibras.

Nature doth nothing in a huddle.

L' Estrange.

The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote,

and in a huddle.

Locke.

Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us till bed-time, and filled my mind with a huddle

of ideas. Addison.

HUDDLER.* n. s. [Germ. hudler.] One who throws things into confusion; a bungler.

A confused huddler of things.

Voltaire, and Sherwood.

HUE. n. s. [Sax. hy, hipe, and also hu; our old authors usually write our word hew. Serenius notices the Sueth. hy, the colour of the face, which in the Icelandick is the down of it, from hua, hya,
to cover.]

Colour; die.

For never in that land

Face of fair lady she before did view,

Or that dread lyon's look her cast in deadly hue.

Spenser, F. Q.

To add another hue unto the rainbow,

Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Shakspeare, K. John.

Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the rose.

Milton, P. L.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd

Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue,

Answer'd.

Milton, P. L.

Your's is much of the camelion hue,

To change the die with distant view.

Dryden.

2. [Huée, French; from huer, to shout after. Kelham deduces this from the old Fr. huchet, a huntsman's horn.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country. It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight, I am undone;
fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shakspeare.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L' Estrange.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;

And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry.

Addison.

H U F

The huc and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found. Arbutnot, J. Bull.
HU'ED. * adj. [from hue.] Coloured. Written hewed. See HUE.

Sackville, Indul. Mir. for Mag.

HU'ER. n. s. [huër, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a balker or huër, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

HUFF. n. s. [from hove, or hoven, swelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to hedge or ferment: huff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.

Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word

To swear by, only in a lord;

In others it is but a huff,

To vapour with instead of proof.

Hudibras.

His frowns kept multitudes in awe,

Before the bluster of whose huff?

All hats, as in a storm, flew off.

Hudibras.

We have the apprehensions, of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness.

L'Estrange.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the huff about his extraction.

L'Estrange.

No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present huff.

South.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

As for you, colonel huff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

Lewd shallow-brained huffs make Atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit.

South.

To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe.

Grew.

2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

The commissioner at Magdalen college said to Dr. Hough, You must not presume to huff us.

Echar.

To HUFF. † v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

Therefore the maids and Roman matrons all,

A shadowing veil before their face did wear;

Their heavenly hue did throw no man to thrall;

They were content with plaine and decent geare,

They hufft it not with painted frised heare

Mir. for Mag. p. 215.

A huffing, slining, flatt'ring, cringing coward, a cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him.

Otway.

A thief and justice, fool and knave,

A huffing officer and slave.

Hudibras.

Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,

To knaves a fool, to cred'ulous fools a knave.

Roscommon.

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them.

South.

Now what's his end? O charming glory, say!

What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play?

Dryden.

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with.

Locke.

When Peg received John's message, she huffed and stormed like the devil.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

To HUFFER. n. s. [from huff.] A blusterer; a bully.

Nor have I hazarded my art
 To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,
 By such a braggadocio huffer.

Hudibras.

H U G

HU'FFISH. adj. [from huff.] Arrogant; insolent; hectoring.

HU'FFISHLY. adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance; with bullying bluster.

HU'FFISHNESS. n. s. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.

To HUG. † v. a. [hegian, Saxon, to hedge, to enclose.]

1. To press close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,

And hugg'd me in his arms.

Shakespeare.

What would not he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a soprenade!

L'Estrange.

Ev'n ju that urn their brother they confess,

And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press.

Dryden.

King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak, which he would hug and kiss.

Harvey on Consumptions.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,

And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,

Baited with reasons not unpalatable,

Wind me into the easy-hearted man,

And hug him into snares.

Milton, Comus.

We hug deformities, if they bear our names.

Glanville.

Admire yourself,

And, without rival, hug your darling book.

Roscommon.

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love the impostor, and with both arms hug the abuse.

South.

Mark with what joy he hugs the dear discovery!

Rowe.

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly hug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them.

Atterbury.

4. To gripe in wrestling.

5. To applaud or congratulate one's self, on account of supposed advantage or superiority.

These shall be declared the rightful heirs of the kingdom, when the presumed sons of it, who hugged themselves as the only favourites of Heaven, and warmed their hands by their own fantastick fires, who flew aloft, on the wings of imagination, and proudly looked down upon the modest and humble believer:—these, we have reason to think, shall then be cast out.

Glanville, Serm. p. 315.

Not to mention the wonderful delight of libelling men in power, and hugging yourself in a corner with mighty satisfaction for what you have done.

Swift, Exam. No. 26.

HUG. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Close embrace.

Why these close hugs? I owe my shame to him.

Gay.

2. A particular gripe in wrestling, called a Cornish hug.

Knock down, was the word in the civil wars, and we generally added to this skill the knowledge of the Cornish hug, as well as the grapple, to play with hand and foot.

Tatler, No. 173.

HUGE. † adj. [hoogh, high, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.

— It is from the old Fr. ahugue, "enorme, grand." Roquefort.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them?

Hooker.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalleth in greatness, not only Asia, Europe, and Africa, but America.

Abbot.

2. Very great.

The mountain huge.

Milton, P. L.

Part, huge of bulk,

Wallowing unweildy, enormous in their gait,

Tempest the ocean; there leviathan,

Hugest of living creatures, in the deep

Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,

And seems a moving land.

Milton, P. L.

3. Great even to deformity or terribleness.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder. Shakespeare.

Through forests huge, and long unravell'd heaths,
With desolation brown, he wanders waste. Thomson.

4. Having any quality in a great or high degree.

The mercy, and the pardon, and the huge moderation of that court. Hammond, Works, iv. 305.

He received admonition always as huge kindness.
Fell, Life of Hammond.

HU'GELY.† adv. [from huge.]

1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?

Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea? Shakespeare.

2. Greatly; very much.

Some think it is enough, in all instances, if they pray hugely and fervently. Bp. Taylor, Sermon (1653), p. 134.

Their case is hugely suspicious, though they then repent and call for mercy. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 4. ch. 5.

A thing so hugely pleasurable. Hammond, Works, iv. 479.

It was hugely accidental, that Joash king of Israel, being commanded by the prophet to strike upon the ground, (2 Kings, xix.) should strike no oftener than just three times.

South, Sermon, i. 288.

I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good. Swift.

HU'GENESS.† n. s. [from huge.]

1. Enormous bulk; greatness.

For though, in hugeness, that blacke fleet of Spaine
Did farre surpass; yet was it farre more slow
In nimble stirrage waiting to and fro. Mir. for Mag. p. 820.

2. Utmost extent. Not in use.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakespeare.

HU'GEIOUS.* adj. [from huge.] A low word for vast or enormous.

HU'GGERMUGGER.† n. s. [corrupted perhaps from hug er morcker, or hug in the dark. Morcker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by Sir Thomas More, hoker moker. Hoker, in Chaucer, is peevish, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hooke is likewise in German a corner, and moky is in English dark. I know not how to determine. Dr. Johnson.

— This expression was also written hucker mucker, with the same meaning of in secret. "They should not have lurked all this while in hucker mucker."

Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, 1565. fol. 88. "The matter hushed up in hucker mucker."

Watson, Quodlibets of Rel. and State, 1602, p. 44. This directs us to the German mucken, to mutter, to speak low,

as the probable etymon of part of the word.
"They — in hugger mugger muttered what they durst."

Mir. for Mag. p. 457. Dr. Jamieson, under the similar Scottish expression hudge mudge, notices also the Icel. miugg, secretly, as the basis of it, which Ibre, he adds, inclines to deduce from the German mucken.

Of the alliance of the former part of the expression, viz. hugger, hudge, or hucker, to the Teut. hugghen, or huggen, and the Sax. hogan, to mind, to observe, which Skinner and Dr. Jamieson state, there may be doubt. To hugger appears to have been a cant term for to lurk about, in the sixteenth century; as Stevens remarks in a note on huggermugger, in Shakespeare.] Secrecy; bye-place.

The patrimony which a few
Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of goods and land. Spenser, Hub. Tale.

We have done but greenly,

In huggermugger to inter him.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

But if I can but find them out,

Where e'er th' in huggermugger lurk,

I'll make them rue their handy work.

Hudibras.

There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and barefaced, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment. L' Etrange.

HU'GUENOT.* n. s. [There have been many fanciful derivations of this word proposed. The most rational is that of Eignots, confederates, which Voltaire and others have given, from the German eidgnossen; of which it seems to be a corrupt pronunciation. The term of Huguenot had its rise in 1560; that of Eignot, at the beginning of that century. "Nouveau sujet de division dans Geneve.
Ce fut alors (1513) qu'on y vit naître les titres
d'Eignots, et de Mammelus; par lesquels les deux parties se distinguèrent. Les Eignots étoient ceux qui tenoient pour la liberté de la patrie. — On les appelloient ainsi, parce qu'ils aidoient la liberté, comme les Cantons Suisses, qui s'appellent en leur langue eidgnossen, c'est à dire, confédérés. De là est venu vraisemblablement le nom des Huguenots." Ruchat, Reform. de la Suisse. vol. i. p. 447.] One of the reformed religion in France; a French Cal-vinist.

Mezeray tells us, that the name of Huguenots, or Fidnos,
[so printed by Dryden, but evidently mistaken for Kidgnoss or Eidgnossen,] from whence it was corrupted, signifies league, or association, in the Swiss language; and was brought, together with the sect, from Geneva into France.

Dryden, Postscript to the Hist. of the League.

HU'GUENOTISM.* n. s. [from huguenot. Fr. huguenoterie.] The profession or principles of an Huguenot. Sherwood, and Bailey.

HU'GY.† adj. Vast; great; huge. Not in use.
Dr. Johnson says, citing only Carew. He had forgotten Dryden and others.

This hugy rock one finger's force apparently will move.

Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

The wide waste places, and the hugie plain.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

Scarce had he finish'd, when with speckled pride,

A serpent from the tomb began to glide;

His hugy bulk on seven high volumes roll'd,

Blue was his breadth of back, but streak'd with scaly gold.

Dryden, Æneid.

HU'ISHER.* n. s. [French, huissier.] An attendant;
a door-keeper. Now written usher. See USHER.

It makes huishers serviceable men.

B. Jonson, Forest.

HUKE.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson merely cites the Fr.
hugue; but that is from the Teut. huycke. Our old lexicography calls it "a Dutch attire, covering the head, face, and all the body." Bullokar, and Cockeram. Cotgrave describes it as a "Dutch "mantle, or a Dutch woman's mantle." The low Latin luca, as well as the French hugue, whether a mantle, hood, or robe, appears to have been worn by both sexes. See Du Cange and Lacombe.
Kilian says that the Teut. huycke is the same as hoedke, from hoeden, to cover. Our word has been written also hyke.] A cloak; a mantle.

As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger in a rich huke.

Baron, New Atlantis.

HULCH.* n. s. [from the Su. Goth. hulkig, convex.] A bunch; a bump; any round swelling; as a hulch in the back. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

H U L

HULCHBA'CKED.* adj. [hulch and back.] Crook-backed; having bent or crump shoulders.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HU'LED.* adj. [from hulch.] Swollen; puffed up.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HU'LCY.* adj. [from hulch.] Much swelling; gibbous.
Sherwood.

HULK.† n. s. [Sw. Goth. holka. Serenius and Ilre. From holka, to excavate; hol, hollow. Others, from the Gr. ὄλας. "Ships of burden, which the Roman authors call "naves onerariæ," and the Grecian φορτικοὶ and ὀλαῖδες; whence the name of our hulks may properly be derived, served for the conveyance of victuals, &c." Kennet, Rom. Antig. ii. iv. 20. Dr. Johnson, under hull, admits that hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky. Yet here, in its proper place, no notice is taken of it. The Sax. hulce is described as a light, swift ship; the Teut. hulke, as a large and heavy one, "navis oneraria, navigium latum vastumque." Kilian.]

1. A ship: a vessel of burden; "a broad ship."
Hulock.

The massy anchors wai'd,
One English ship, two hulks of Holland, aid
In such a pinch. Mir. for Mag. p. 414.

2. The body of a ship.
There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold.
Shakespeare.

The custom of giving the colour of the sea to the hulks, sails, and mariners of their fly-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti.

They Argo's hulk will tax,
And scrape her pitchy sides for wax. Swift.

The sooty hulk
Steer'd sluggish on. Thomson.

3. Any thing bulky and unweildy. This sense is still retained in Scotland; as, a hulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawls, the hulk Sir John,
Is prisoner to your son. Shakespeare.

The hulk of a tall Brabanter, behind whom I stood in the corner of a street, shadowed me from notice.

Ep. Hull, Spec. of his Life, p. 2.

To HULK. v. a. To exenterate: as, to hulk a hare.
Ainsworth.

HU'LY.* adj. [from hulk.] This is a colloquial term in many parts of England, for a heavy, large, or unweildy person.

HULL.† n. s. [huljan, Gothick, to cover. Dr. Johnson. — Germ. hullen, the same. See To HELE, and To HILL. "Hull of a nut, &c. That by which the nut is covered. Hull of a ship. That part which is covered in the water." Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 383. If the former assertion, Mr. Tooke is supported by preceding etymologists; to the latter difference of opinion may be safely objected, in following Thre's derivation of holk, i. e. hulk, from the verb signifying to hollow out; a term, he says, originally applied to the trunks of trees hollowed out, the first vessels of the Scythians.]

1. The husk or integument of any thing; the outer covering; as, the hull of a nut covers the shell.

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

H U M

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.
So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a thinking creature. Grew.

3. To lie a Hull. Spoken of a ship, either in a dead calm or a storm, when she cannot carry all her sails; or her masts are taken down or gone, and she is left at the direction of the waves.

We took in our sail, and lay a hull, tost sufficiently.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 398.

Like a ship at hull and becalmed. Hammond, Works, iv. 653.

To HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a sight full of pitcous strangeness; a ship, or rather the carcase of the ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned. Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, sir, here lies your way.

— No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer.

Shakespeare.

He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood. Milton, P. L.

People walking down upon the shore saw somewhat come hulling toward them. L' Estrange.

To HULL.* v. a.

1. To peel off the hull or husk of any seed.

The male will hull the seeds for his consort with his bill, and present them to her in this state. Latham, Synop. i. 310.

2. To fire cannon balls into the hull of a ship, within the point-plank range. Chambers.

HU'LLY. adj. [from hull.] Siliqueose; husky.

Ainsworth.

HU'IVER. n. s. Holly.

Save hulver and thorn, thereof flail for to make. Tusser.

To HUM.† v. n. [hommelen, Dutch.]

1. to make the noise of bees.

An airy nation flew,
Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew
In summer's heat. Dryden.

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound.

I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me. Shakespeare.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, You'll rue. Shakespeare.

3. To make a confused noise, like that of bustling crowds at a distance.

The city swarms intense: the publick haunt,
Full of each theme and warm with mix'd discourse, Hums indistinct. Thomson, Winter.

4. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And hum'd upon it, thus he writ.

Hudibras.

I still acquiesc'd,

And never hum'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor snuffed treason.

Hudibras.

The man lay humming and hawing a good while; but, in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L' Estrange.

5. To make a low dull noise; to murmur.

Humming rivers, by his cabin creeping,
Rock soft his slumbering thoughts in quiet ease.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Eccl. ii. 17.

Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep.

Pope.

6. To express applause. Approbation was commonly expressed in publick assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

Here the spectators hummed. —

Id. Ch. Baron. Gentlemen, this humming is not at all becoming the gravity of this court.

Trial of the Regicides, (1660.) fol. 49. b.

To HUM.* v. a.

1. To applaud. See the last sense of the verb reuter.

The better sort among them will confess it, a rare matter to hear a true edifying sermon in either of their great churches; and that such as are most hummed and applauded there, would be scarcely suffered the second hearing in a grave congregation of pious Christians. Milton, Apology for Smeatonius.

2. To sing low; to utter murmuringly or indistinctly.

Hum half a tune. Pope.

The wild wind hums the gullen song to night. Rev. G. Butt, Ode, (1780.)

3. To cause to hum or make a dull noise: as, to hum a gig or top.

4. To impose upon a person. See the eighth sense of the substantive HUM.

HUM.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecat's summons,
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hum,
Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who muses through the woods at noon. Thomson.

2. A low confused noise, as of bustling crouds at a distance.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army stilly sounds. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton, L'All.

One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilome of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis hight,
And full of hum and buz from noon till night. Dryden.

3. Any low dull noise.

Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast; the distant nodded to the hum. Pope.

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.

These shrugs, these hums and haws,
When you have said she's goodly, come between,
Ere you can say she's honest. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Your excuses want some grains to make them current: hum and ha will not do the business. Dryden, Span. Friar.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for hum, Dr. Johnson says; where, however, the word is not hum, but bum.

6. An expression of applause.

You hear a hum in the right place. Spectator.

7. Formerly a strong liquor drunk by the common people; whence, perhaps, the application of humming to ale. See HUMMING ALE.

Shew
The taking of tobacco, with which the devil
Is so delighted: — and calls for hum.
You takers of strong waters and tobacco,
Mark this. B. Jonson, Dev. is an Ass.

8. A jest; a low trick; a hoax. [It is also used in Scotland; and Dr. Jamieson notices, with Serenius, the Su. Goth. hum, an uncertain rumour, a slight suspicion; the origin of which is unknown.]

A landlord of Bath put upon me a queer hum. Epigr. Oxford Sausage.

HUM. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your ears despise the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.
— Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

See sir Robert — hum!
And never laugh for all thy life to come. Pope.

HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Lat. human, Fr.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will never be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature? Swift.

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.

Foreman to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton, P. L.

Thee, serpent, subtil'st beast of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice indu'd. Milton, P. L.

Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any,
this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke.

HUMANATE.* part. adj. [from human.] Invested with humanity.

Of your saying it followeth, that the bread is humanate or incarnate. Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 369.

HUMANE. adj. [humaine, Fr.] Kind; civil; benevolent; good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon.

Envy, malice, covetousness and revenge are abolished: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead. Sprat.

HUMANELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakespeare.

HUMANENESS.* n. s. [from humane.] Tenderness; humanity. Scott.

HUMANIST.† n. s. [humaniste, Fr.] A philologer; a grammarian: a term used in the schools of Scotland, Dr. Johnson says, without any example, and without noticing that it is well used by our own writers for one skilled in the knowledge of human nature.

Physicians use commonly to intend some other art or practice, which they fancy more than their profession; for you shall have of them antiquaries, poets, humanists, statesmen, merchants, divines; and in every of these better seen than in their professions. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. 2.

Of all sorts of men in the world, none repute themselves, or are reputed by others, wiser, than the profound humanist and cunning politician. Johannes, Sin Stigmat. p. 603.

HUMANITY.† n. s. [humanité; Fr. humanitas; Lat.]

1. The nature of man.

Look to thyself; reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.

A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shakespeare.

The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. Shakespeare.

To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his information. Glanville.

3. Benevolence; tenderness.

All men ought to maintain peace, and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.

How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?

Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Rowe.

4. Philology; grammatical studies. In Scotland, humaniores literæ. The French so use les humanités.

If then we may spend some of yong years in studies of humanity; what better and more sweet study is there for a yong man than Poetrie? Harrington, Apology of Poetry.

A man but young,
Yet old in judgement; theorick and practick.

In all humanity. Mausinger, Fatal Downy.

The most eminent scholars which England produced both in philosophy and humanity. Warton.

To HUMANIZE. t. a. [humaniser, Fr.] To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

H U M

Here will I paint the characters of woe, —
And here my faithful tears in showers shall flow,
To humanize the fints whereon I tread. Wotton.
Was it the business of magic to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison.

HU'MANKIND. n. s. [human and kind.] The race of man; mankind.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.

HU'MANLY. adv. [from human.]

1. After the notions of men; according to the power of men.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs, humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Atterbury.

2. Kindly; with good-nature. This is now written humanely.

Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere;
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.

HUMA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. humatio, from humus, the ground.] Interment. Chambers.

HU'MBIRD. n. s. [from hum and bird.] The humming bird.

All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our own plantations have shewed us one far less; that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

HUMBLE. adj. [humble, Fr. humilis, Lat.]

1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield. Spenser.

Now we have shewn our power,

Let us seem humbler after it is done,

Than when it was a-doing. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Thy humble servant vows obedience,

And faithful service, till the point of death. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Bp. Taylor. Rule of living holy.

You, if an humbler husband, may request,

Provide and order all things for the best. Dryden.

Ten thousand trifles light as these,

Nor can my rage nor anger move:

She should be humble, who would please;

And she must suffer, who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.

The example of the heavenly lark,

Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark!

Above the skies let thy proud music sound,

Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,

An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden.

Thy prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell

With humbler fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty! Rowe.

Far humbler titles suit my lost condition. Smith.

To HU'MBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make humble; to make submissive; to make to bow down with humility.

Take this curse, thou whom the heaven's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The executioner

Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,

But first begs pardon. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you. 1 Pet. v. 6.

Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 2 Chron.

Why do I humble thus myself, and sing

For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate? Milton, S. A.

Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings, and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance: let him return to

God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him. Rogers.

2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.

H U M

We are pleased, by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us. Addison.

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,

The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,

That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth. Addison, Cato.

Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the public tranquillity. Freeholder.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;

Though double tax'd, how little have I lost! Pope.

3. To make to condescend.

This would not be to condescend to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his design in speaking. Locke.

4. To bring down from an height.

In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest valleys exalted into mountains. Hakewill on Providence.

HU'MBLEBEE.* n. s. [humble and bee.] What may be the true etymology of this word, I am in doubt.

The humblebee is known to have no sting. The Scotch call a cow without horns an humble cow;

so that the word seems to signify inermis, wanting the natural weapons. Dr. Beattie, and Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Teut. hummelen, bombum edere.

Some think that the humblebee ought rather to be called bumblebee, from the Lat. bombus, on account of the deepness of its note. It is so called in many parts of England. See BUMBLEBEE. Chaucer, however, uses humbling in the sense of humming, murmuring, or muttering, which at once decides the etymon: "Like to the humblinge after the clappe of a thundringe." House of Fame, ii. 531.]

A buzzing wild bee.

The honeybags steal from the humblebees,

And for night tapers crop their waxen thighs. Shakspeare.

This puts us in mind once again of the humblebees and the tinderboxes. Atterbury.

HU'MBLEBEE. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

HU'MBLEBEE EATER. n. s. A fly that eats the humble-

bee. Ainsworth.

HU'MBLEMOUTHED. adj. [humble and mouth.] Mild;

meek.

You are meek and humblemouthed; but your heart

Is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen and pride. Shakspeare.

HU'MBLENESS. n. s. [from humble.] Humility; absence of pride.

With how true humbleness

They look'd down to triumph over pride! Sidney.

I am rather with all subjected humbleness to thank her excellencies, since the duty thereunto gave me rather heart to save myself, than to receive thanks. Sidney.

It was answered by us all, in all possible humbleness; but yet with a countenance, that we knew that he spoke it but merrily.

Bacon.

A grain of glory, mixt with humbleness,

Cures both a fever and lethargickness. Herbert.

HU'MBLEPLANT. n. s. A species of sensitive plant.

The humbleplant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, it prostrates itself on the ground, and in a short time elevates itself again: it is raised in hotbeds. Mortimer.

HU'MBLER.* n. s. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others. Sherwood.

HU'MBLES.* n. s. Entrails of a deer. See UMBLES.

HU'MBLESS.* n. s. [old Fr. humblesse.] Humble- ness; humility. Obsolete.

And with meek humbleness, and afflicted mood,

Pardon for thee, and grace for me intreat. Spenser.

HU'MBLING.* n. s. [from humble.] Humiliation;

abatement of pride.

HUM

Yearly enjoin'd some say, to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd. Milton, P. L.

HUMBLY. adv. [from humble.]

1. Without pride; with humility; modestly; with timorous modesty.

They were us'd to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come humbly as they us'd to creep to holy altars. Shakespeare.

Here the tam'd Euphrates humbly glides,
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides. Dryden.

Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore;
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more. Addison.

2. Without height; without elevation.

HUMBUG.* n. s. An imposition: a very low word.
Not used in any serious writings. See the eighth sense of HUM.

There is a word very much in vogue with the people of taste and fashion, which though it has not even the "penumbra" of a meaning, yet makes up the sum total of the wit, sense, and judgement of the aforesaid people of taste and fashion! — "This peace will prove a confounded humbug upon the nation. — These theatrical managers humbug the town damnably!" — Humbug is neither an English word, nor a derivative from any other language. It is indeed a blackguard sound, made use of by most people of distinction! It is a fine make-weight in conversation, and some great men deceive themselves so egregiously as to think they mean something by it!

Student, vol. 2. (1751,) p. 41.

HUMDRUM.* adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone. Dr. Johnson. — From hum, and the Ital. draums, dull, melancholy; or droma, to proceed slowly.] Dull; dronish; stupid.

Shall we, quoth she, stand still humdrum,
And see stout Bruin all alone,
By numbers basely overthrown? Hudibras.

I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business.

Addison, Whig-Exam. No. 3.

TO HUMECT. } v. a. [humecto, Lat. humectare, Fr.] To wet;
TO HUMECTATE. } to moisten.

The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate the earth by their annual inundations. Brown.

Her rivers are divided into sluices, to humectate the bordering soil. Howell, Voc. For.

The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much astringent. Wiseeman, Surgery.

HUMECTATION. n. s. [humectation, Fr. from humectate.] The act of wetting; moistening.

Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercussion, without humectation, or entrance of any body. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That which is concentered by exsiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay. Brown, Vulg. Err.

HUMECTIVE.* adj. [from To humect.] Having the power to wet or moisten.

These fountain-waters have a humective and vegetative virtue within them, to water and to make things prosper and grow up. Parthenia Sacra, (1633,) p. 218.

HUMERAL. adj. [humeral, Fr. from humcrus, Lat.] Belonging to the shoulder.

The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

HUMICUBATION. n. s. [humi and cubo, Lat.] The act of lying on the ground.

Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humicubation, used to be companions of repentance. Bp. Bramhall.

HUM

HUMID. adj. [humide, Fr. humidus, Lat.] Wet; moist; watery.

Iris there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of mote mingled hde
Than her purpled scarf can shew. Milton, Comus.

The queen, recover'd, opens her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies. Dryden.

If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton, Opticks.

HUMIDITY. n. s. [humidité, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to; but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing; for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages, and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl.

Quincy.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pum-pion. Shakespeare.

O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb Infect the air. Shakespeare, Tim. of Athens.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and relishing. Arbutnot on Diet.

TO HUMILE.* v. a. [old Fr. humilier.] To humiliate or humble. Obsolete.

Davyd ought to humile himselfe. Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 4.

HUMILIATION. n. s. [French.]

1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker.

Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milton, P. L.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.

John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown, Vulg. Err.

With tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton, P. L.

3. Abatement of pride.

It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMILITY. n. s. [humilité, Fr.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,

HUM

More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility.
of a Christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.
The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarendon.

There are some that use
Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their wish'd journey's end. De. Ham's Sophy.
It is an easy matter to extol humility in the midst of honours, or to begin a fast after dinner. South.

As high turrets, for their airy steep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden,

2. Act of submission.

With these humilitates they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Davies.
HUMMER. n. s. [from hum.] That which hums; an applauder. Ainsworth.

HUMMING.* n. s. [from To hum.]

1. The noise of bees or flies.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing. Bacon.
So wary bees in little cells repose;
But if night robbers lift the well-stored hive,
An humming through the waxen city grows. Dryden.
Horse *humming*s of unnumber'd flies. Dr. Walton, Ode to Evening.

2. An inarticulate sound.

Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me. Shakespeare.
3. A dull, unmeaning noise.

The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate
*humming*s; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Glanville.

HUMMING Ale.* Sprightly ale; probably from the spirituous liquor called hum, which ale perhaps displaced;
or from a mixture of hum with the malt liquor, as spirits are now sometimes mixed with it. See the seventh sense of HUM.

With humming ale encouraging his text.

Dryden, Wife of Bath's Tale.

Rum, brandy, gin with choicest smack,
From Holland brought, Batavia's rack;
All these will nought avail,
To cheer a truly British heart,
And lively spirits to impart,
Like humming nappy ale.

Song ascribed (perhaps inaccurately) to Gay.

HUMMING Bird.* See HUMBIRD.

HUMMOCK.* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of hump.]
A little hill; rising ground.

Point Possession bore N. N. E. about three miles distance, and some remarkable hummocks on the north. Hawkesworth's Voyages.

HUMMUMS.* n. s. pl. [Persian, humum, a hot-house. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 318.] Sweating-places, or baths. The word is used by us only in the plural.

Artificial grots, having also humums of stone paved with white marble. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 169.

The humums (or sweating-places) are many, [at Casbyn in Persia.] Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 211.

HUMORAL.† adj. [Fr. humoral. Cotgrave.] Proceeding from the humours.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.

HUMORIST.† n. s. [humorista, Italian; humoriste, Fr.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.

HUM

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts.

Many of the rest were as bad men as princes; humorists rather than of good humours. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

Extraordinary men of arts, in all ages, are generally observed to be the greatest humorists: they are so full of the sweetness of their own conceptions, that they become morose when they are drawn from them. Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 336.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison.

2. One who has odd conceits.

Do ye see a nice humorist, that will not dress a dish, nor lay a cloth, nor walk abroad on a Sunday, and yet make no conscience of cozening his neighbour on the workday? By. Hall, Sermon. The Hypocrite.

3. One who is fond of jesting; a wag; a droll.

An infectious collection of base vices and fashions of men and women—will be of use only among humorists for jests and table-talk. Sir T. Bodley, Lett. to Sir F. Bacon.

These poor gentlemen endeavour to gain themselves the reputation of wits, and humorists, by such monstrous conceits as almost qualify them for Bedlam. Addison, Spect. No. 35.

The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Spectator.
Shakespeare's heroes, and Johnson's humorists.

Tatler, No. 12.

4. One who has violent and peculiar passions.

By a wise and timous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off; mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.

HUMOROUS.† adj. [from humour.]

1. Moist; humid; damp; dewy.

The humorous fogs deprive us of his sight.

Drayton, Barons' Wars, C. 1.

Every lofty top, which late the humorous night

Bespangled had with pearl. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

He hath hid himself among those trees,

To be consorted with the humorous night.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

2. Full of grotesque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marsyas was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satyr Marsyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

3. Capricious: irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight

But when her humorous ladyship is by,

To teach thee safety.

Shakespeare, K. John.

He's humorous as winter, and as sudden

As flaws congealed in the spring of day. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

O, you awake then: come away,

Times be short, are made for play;

The humorous moon too will not stay:

What doth make you thus delay?

B. Johnson.

Vast is his courage, boundless is his mind,

Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Dryden.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts, Logic.

4. Pleasant; jocular.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,

Lies all neglected, all forgot:

And pensive, wav'ring, melancholy,

Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what.

Prior.

HUMOROUSLY. adv. [from humorous.]

1. Merrily; jocosely.

A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls very humorously, concisum, argentum in titulos faciesque minutus. Addison.

It has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

2. Capriciously; whimsically.

HUM

We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, sillily, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold. Calany.

HUMOROUSNESS. † n. s. [from humorous.]

1. Fickleness; capricious levity.
2. Jocularly; oddness of conceit.
3. Petulance; peevishness.

It must be extreme humorousness to deny a Providence in them. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

HUMORSOME. † adj. [from humour.]

1. Peevish; petulant.

I am glad that, though you are incredulous, you are not humorsome too. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

[This] seems to me very humorsome and unreasonable.

Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 17.

Odd; humorous. In this sense it is less used.

Our science cannot be much improved by masquerades, where the wit of both sexes is altogether taken up in continuing singular and humorsome disguises. Swift.

HUMORSOMELY. † adv. [from humorsome.] Peevishly; petulantly.

There is no time of the world, wherein there are not very plainly the prints of divinity, and evidences of a Providence continually presiding over the world, if a man do not humorsomely despise them. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

HUMOUR. n. s. [humour, Fr. humor, Lat.]

1. Moisture.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.

Believe not these suggestions, which proceed from anguish of the mind and humours black, That mingle with thy fancy. Milton, S. A.

3. General turn or temper of mind.

As there is no humour, to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there now of those of desperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney.

There came a young lord, led with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whose goodness he sees not. Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgement, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lusen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was; they said Lusen. He asked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They said still it was Lusen; then, said the king, I will be king of Lusen. Bacon, Apophthegms.

Examine how your humour is inclin'd, And which the ruling passion of your mind. Roscommon.

They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself. Dryden.

In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison.

Good humour only teaches charms to last, Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past. Pope.

4. Present disposition.

It is the curse of kings to be attended By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant To break into the blood-house of life. Shakespeare.

Another thought her nobler humour fed. Fairfax.

Their humours are not to be won, But when they are impos'd upon. Hudibras.

Equip not his heavy hand; But one submissive word which you let fall, Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

5. Grotesque imagery; jocularly; merriment.

In conversation humour is more than wit, easiness more than knowledge. Temple.

VOL. II.

HUN

6. Tendency to disease; morbid disposition.

He denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.

Th' excrescence of a man. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with saucy-eyes, a sharp nose, and hunchbacked.

Arbutnot, H. v. J. Bull.

HUNDRED.* adj. [honderd, Dutch; hund, hundred, Sax. from the Goth. hund. At first the Gothick expression for hund was taihun-taihund, or taihuntehund, i. e. ten times ten. This was abbreviated into the last syllable. See Lye, edit. Manning, in V. Goth. hund.] The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A hundred altar in her temple smoke,
A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke. Dryden, Æn.
Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses. Addison.

HUNDRED. n. s.

1. A company, body, or collection consisting of an hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whosoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate. Locke.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers. Arbutnot.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing an hundred manors. [hundredum, low
Lat. hundredede, old Fr.]

Imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire. Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited. Hayward.

HUNDREDER.* n. s. [hundredarius, low Lat.]

1. One of the jury upon a controversy, dwelling in the hundred where the land lies. Cowel.

Some of the jury were obliged to be returned from the hundred in which such vill lay; and, if none were returned, the array might be challenged for defect of hundredors. Blackstone.

2. One that hath the jurisdiction of a hundred, and holdeth the hundred court; the bailiff of an hundred. Cowel.

HUNDREDTH. adj. [hunteontezopa, Sax.] The ordinal of an hundred; the tenth ten times told.

"We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making invectives. Hooker.

As this medium is rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop. Newton.

HUNG. The preterite and part. pass. of hang.

A wife so hung with virtues, with a freight,
What mortal shoulders can support! Dryden, Jew.

A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once. Watts.

HUNGARY. *Water. A distilled water, so called from a queen of Hungary, for whose use it was first prepared. It is prepared from rosemary flowers.

HUNGER.* n. s. [hungern, Sax. the past participle of hynghan, to hunger, according to Mr.
H. Tooke. It is, however, the Su. Goth. hunger, whence also the Dutch honger. See also To HUNGER.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food.
When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up so close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach.

Quincy.

Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst.

Deut. xxviii. 48.

The sub-acid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger.

Grew.

Something viscous, fat, and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

For hunger of my gold I die.

Dryden.

To HUNGER.* v. n. [M. Gothick, huggerian, pronounced hungrian; Sax. hynghan.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

My more having, would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
As he returned into the city, he hungered.

St. Matt. xxi. 18.

Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To desire with great eagerness; to long.

Do'st thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!
Stay but a little. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

I content me,

And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed
Me hungering more to do my father's will. Milton, P. R.

To HUNGER.* v. a. To famish; as, to hunger a person, that is, not to allow sufficient food. Common in the north of England; and used, perhaps,
in other places.

HUNGERBIT.* adj. [hunger and bit; hungen- HUNGERBITTEN.] bitten, Sax. Chron.] Pained or weakened with hunger.

His strength shall be hungerbitten. Job, xviii. 12.
Thyself

Bred up in poverty and straits at home;
Lost in a desert here, and hungerbit. Milton, P. R.

HUNGERED.* See HUNGRED.

HUNGERLY.* adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nourishment.

Then came Covetis, can I hind no diserve,
So hungerly and hollowe, so sternely he looked.
Vic. of P. Plowman, (ed. 1550.) fol. xxiii.

His beard

Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to ask
His sops as he was drinking. Shakespeare.

HUNGERLY. adv. With keen appetite.

You have sav'd my longing, and I feed
Most hungerly on your sight. Shakespeare.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungrily, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakespeare.
TO HUNGERSTARVE. * v. a. [hunger and starve.] To famish. Hiltoet.

HUNGERSTARVED. † adj. [hunger and starved. Formerly, hunger-starven. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 6.
• Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 1. "Hunger-starven, trencher poetry."] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

• All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hungerstarved wolves. Shakespeare.
Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men. Shakespeare.
By extortion and oppression, by unconscionable racking of rents and wasting from them excessive fines, [they] make them naked and hunger-starved. Hakewill on Providence, p. 522.
Hunger-starved beggars, wandering rogues. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 157.

• As to some holy house th' afflicted came,
The hungerstarv'd, the naked, and the lame,
Want and diseases, fled before her name. Dryden.

HUNGRY. † adj. [from hunger. Usually with an prefixed, corresponding to athirst.] • Pinched by want of food.

When he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterwards an hungred. St. Matt. iv. 2.
Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we see men an hungred love to smell hot bread. Bacon.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suff'ring mortals long ago;
When on harsh acorns hungrily they fed,
And gave 'em niger palates, better bread. Dryden, Juv.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood.
Shakespeare.
By eating before he was hungry, and drinking before he was dry, he was sure never to eat or drink much at a time.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shakespeare.
The more fat water will bear soap best; for the hungry
water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon.
In rushy grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.
To the great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soil. Smalridge, Serm.

HUNKS. n. s. [hunskur, sordid, Icelandic.] A covetous sordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.

The old hunks was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his puddings. L'Estrange.
She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old hunks. Dryden.
Irus has given all the intimations of being a close hunks, worth money. Addison.

HUNS. * n. s. pl. [Lat. Hunni; Sax. punar.] A barbarous people of Scythia, who, after subduing Pannonia in the third century, gave to it the present name of Hungary, and settled there.

Theophylactus Simocatta, speaking of the Abares a Scythian nation dwelling near Ister, saith, that they were descended from the Hunnes. Punches, Pilgrim, (1617,) p. 409.

His countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their bums. Hudibras, l. ii.

TO HUNT. v. a. [huntian, Saxon, from hund, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shakespeare.
Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job, xxxviii. 39.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Ps. cxi.
The heart strikes five hundred sort of pulses in an hour,
and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that fain would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but, by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from principles: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison.

TO HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Esau went to the field to hunt for venison. Gen. xxvii. 5.
On the old pagan tombs masks, hunting matches, and Bac-chanals are very common. Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A huntsman. [Sax. huntia, a hunter.] This is the ancient usage of the substantive, which remained in our lexicography in Charles the First's time. "A hunt, or huntsman." Sherwood's Dic- tionary. Dr. Johnson has not noticed it.

Ready for to ride
With hunte and horne, and houndes him beside.
Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd
By sovereign pow'r, her company disdain'd.
Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryden, Hind and Panther.

3. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakespeare.

4. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

HUNTER. † n. s. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pastime or food.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, bogs, and woods within the limits of forests, chases, and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursued a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton, P. L.

Another's crimes the unhappy hunter bore,
Shutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden, Æn.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Me-lenger for their patron. Addison on Italy.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

H U R

2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.

Of dogs, the valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. A hunting-horse, as it was formerly call'd. The name of hunter, applied to the horse, is modern: as, he rides a good hunter.

HU'NTING.* n. s. [Sax. huntunz, venatio.] The diversion of the chase.

When we grow up to men, we have another succession of sanguinary sports; in particular, hunting. I dare not attack a diversion, which has such authority and custom to support it.

One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.

HU'NTINGHORN. n. s. [hunting and horn.] A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HU'NTINGHORSE.* n. s. [hunting and horse.] A horse to hunt on, what is now called, a hunter.

His hunting-horses were the finest and best managed in all these parts. Spectator, No. 116.

HU'NTINGSEAT.* n. s. [hunting and seat.] A temporary residence for the purpose of hunting.

Near it [is] a house built by one of the grand dukes for a hunting-seat, but now converted into an inn. Gray, Lett.

HU'NTRESS. n. s. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway. Shakespeare.
Shall I call

Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted qucen, for ever chaste. Milton, Comus.

Let old Afcadia boast her ample plain,
The immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
New envy Windsor. Pope.

Homer represent; Diana with her quiver at her shoulder;
but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broomie.

HU'NTSMAN. n. s. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a hunterman, after weary chase,
Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser, Sonn.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What hunterman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chase? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the hunterman, that managed the chase, than to the master. L'Estrange.

HU'NTSMANSHIP.* n. s. [from hunterman.] The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give the art of rhiming, huntermanship, or play. Donne.
To betoken his huntermanship, he holdeth in his hand the skin of a wild beast. Gregory, Posthum. (1650.) p. 228.

HUR'DEN.* n. s. [from being made of hurds, or coarse flax.] A coarse kind of linen. It is used adjectively, as linen, woollen, and words of that kind very frequently are. Mason.

It is, when he is reaping, making hay, or when he is hedging in his hurden frock. Shenstone.

HUR'DLE.* n. s. [hyndel, Sax.] The post principle of hyndan, to keep, according to Mr. H. Tooke. Serenius, long before, had thus deduced the Iscl. hurd, crates, from the verb hyrda, to keep. Hence the Germ. hurde, a hurdle; and the old Fr. houerde, which has also hordel, "hordelles, des claies pour les champs, crates." Lacombe.

H U R

1. A texture of sticks woven together; a crate.

The sled the tumbrel, hurdles and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden, George.

2. Crate on which criminals were dragged to execution.

Settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither. Shakespeare.

The blacksmith was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn; taking pleasure upon the hurdle, to think that he should be famous in after times. Bacon.

To HU'RDLE.* v. a. [from the noun: German, hurden.] To make up, hedge, covey, or close with hurdles. Sherwood. This old verb has lately been revived.

In hurled cotes the flocks are penn'd.
Seward, Sonnets, &c. p. 173.

HURDS.* n. s. [Sec HARDS.] The refuse of hemp or flax. Ainsworth.

HURDY-GURDY.* n. s. [I know not whence it is derived.] A stringed instrument, often heard in the streets of London; though, as Mr. Ritson has observed, not in the hands of the natives; the strings of which are agitated by the friction of a wheel. It is played by foreign mendicants, most frequently women.

Whom have we here? a sightly swain and sturdy!
Hum! plays, I see, upon the hurdy-gurdy. Foot's Midas.

To HU'RL.* v. a. [*from hurrl, to throw down, Icelandick; or, according to Skinner, from whirl. Dr. Johnson. — To whirl, and to hurl, are both derived from the Su. Goth. hurra, to turn round rapidly; Sax. hpeppan; and I should imagine hurl to be the elder of the two. Wicliffe uses it in the sense of beating vehemently, whirling round with violence. "The wyndis blewen, and the hurliden agen that hous, and it felde down." St. Matt. vii. 27. "The flood was hurlid to that house." St. Luke, vi. Hence our hurlwind. See also To HURTL.*]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.

If heavens have any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law. Shakespeare.

I with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Numb. xxxv. 20.

They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones. 1 Chron. xii. 2.

Hurl ink and wit,
As madmen stones. B. Jonson.

His darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their frail original and faded bliss. Milton, P. L.

She strikes the lute; but if it sound,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd,
Sin, death, and ignorance, o'er all the world. Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From east to north irregularly hurl'd,
First set himself on fire, and then the world. Dryden, Juv.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl'd them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope.

HUR

2. To utter with vehemence. [hurler, French, to make an howling or hideous noise.] This sense is not in use.

The glad merchant that does view
His ship far come from watry wilderness,
He hurls out vows.

Spenser.

Highly they rag'd against the Highest,
Hurling defiance toward the vault of heav'n.

Milton, P. 5.

3. To play at a kind of game.

Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts; to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away; every of which couple are to watch one another during this play.

Carew, Surr. of Cornwall.

To HURL. * v. n. To move rapidly; to whirl.

The very streams look languid from afar,
Or through the unshelter'd glade impatient seem
To hurl into the covert of the grove.

Thomson, Summer.

HURL. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of casting or throwing.

The gods with horror and amaze look'd down,
Beholding rocks from their firm basis torn,
Mountain on mountains thrown,
With threatening hurl that shook th' ethereal firmament.

Congreve, Ode on taking Namur.

2. Tumult; riot; commotion. [hurler, Fr.]

He in the same hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king.

Kneller.

After this hurl the King was faine to flee
Northward in post, for succour and relief!

Mir. for Mag. p. 358.

HURLBAT. n. s. [hurl and bat.] Whirlbat. Ainsworth.

HURLER. † n. s. [from hurl.]

1. One who throws, or hurls.

The stone that strikes the wall
Sometimes bounds back on th' hurler's head.

Harington, Br. View of the Church, p. 48.

This cursing Shimei, a hurler of stones, as well as a railer.
Milton, Apol. for Smeectymnus.

2. One that plays at hurling.

The hurlers must hurl man to man, and not two set upon one man at once.

Carew, Surr. of Cornwall.

HURLWIND. † n. s. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind;

a violent gust. A word not now in use.

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his mansion thrown.

Sandys, Job.

No sudden hurlwinds shall your bodies cast
On trembling earth.

Sandys, Christ's Passion, p. 13.

HURLY. † } n. s. [from the French, hurlubelu,

HURLYBURLY. } inconsiderately. Dr. Johnson. —

"Hurly-burly means, literally, much ado. It was a far more frequent expression of the English, than of the Scottish writers, during the age of Elizabeth and James. Burly signifies gross, great, Bullokar. Burly-brand, a great sword, or a great fury, Coles. Hurler, Fr. to do as others; to be wicked with the wicked, Dict. Comique. And see hurler, in Menage. Johnson is content to derive this expressive term, from the modern Fr. hurlu-burlu, not hurlubrelu; for it is not to be found in the old French word-books." Chalmers, Gloss. to Sir David Lyndsay's Works. — Mr. Chalmers and Dr. Johnson have overlooked a distinction of burly, in our language, for boisterous and loud; which I have illustrated in its place.

HUR

Hurly-burly, therefore, may fairly be deduced from the Fr. hurler, to howl, to make a great cry, and the Teut. horken, to make a noise; forming "a name which intimates the sound of that it signifyeth; as hurliburly for an uprore and tumultuous stirre." Peacham, Garden of Eloquence, 1577. Sign. C. iij.] Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurly death itself awakes.

Shakspeare.

Poor discontents,

Which gape and rub the elbow at the news

Of hurlyburly innovation.

Shakspeare.

Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot.

Shakspeare.

All places were filled with tumult and hurlyburly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities presently to be besieged.

Kneller, Hist.

When, I pray you, were these classical assemblies, and these seditious stirs and hurlyburlys of Martinists?

Sir G. Paul, Life of Abp. Whig, p. 63.

HURRAH. * interj. [probably from the Goth. hurra, to agitate, to move violently or rapidly.] A shout of joy, or triumph, or applause, or encouragement: at first, perhaps, the shout of soldiers at the onset.

HURRICANE. † ? n. s. [huracan, Spanish; ouragan,

HURRICANO. } French; originally from the Su. Goth. hurra, to move rapidly or violently. Our word was at first variously written herocane, and herricano, as well as hurricane, and hurricano.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;

Your cataracts and hurricanes spout.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

We believed a herocane was begun, a vast or unwonted tumor in the air.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 41.

The winds are not only wild in a storm, but even stark mad in an hurricane.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 122.

A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havoc where it comes.

Burnet, Theory.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too on his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end.

Dryden.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,

In corners with selected friends withdraw;

There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,

Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise.

Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,

Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,

Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play.

Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.

Addison.

HURRIER. n. s. [from hurry.] One that hurries; a disturber.

Mars, that horrid hurrier of men.

Chapman.

To HURRY. † v. a. [hepzigian, to plunder, Saxon:]

hurs was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed, but seems the imperative of the verb. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Goth. horra, hurra, or hyra, to agitate, to drive, to move violently.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone

To offer service to your enemy;

And wild amazement hurries up and down

The little number of your doubtful friends.

Shakspeare.

For whom all this haste

Of midnight march, and hurried meeting here?

Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy it.

South.

That hurried o'er

Such swarms of English to the neighbouring shore.

Dryden.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage.

Addison.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away.

If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination.

To HURRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end. Dryden.
HURRY. n. s. [from the verb.] Tumult; precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England, Ireland was then almost quiet. Hayward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the sedate reflection. South.

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Woodward.
Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addison.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry. Addison.
I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged.

The pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mixt hurry barricades the street. Gay, Trivia.

HURRY-SKURRY. * adv. [an expression noticed in Dr. Jamieson's Scottish Etym. Dict. for a tumult, an uproar; "from the Sax. Goth. hurra, cum impetu circumagi, & skorra, sonum stridulum edere, or skura, increpare, objurgare." We may look upon it, like hurly-burly, formed to signify its own meaning.] Confusedly; in a bustle; with noise and tumult.

Each hole and cupboard they explore,
Each creek and cranny of his chamber,
Run hurry-scurry round the floor,
And o'er the bed and tester clamber. Gray, Long Story.

HURST. † n. s. [Sax. hupst, silva; low Lat. hursta. Du Cange. Horscht, hurst, virgultum, silva humiles tantum frutices proferens, statotum. Kilian. Mr. H. Tooke derives it from the Sax. hupstan, to adorn; and says; that hurst is applied only to places ornamented by trees. It is true that hurst, or hurs, is used by our old writers for a wood; and many places in this country, that have this word for part of the name, were so called from being near woods; and in the margin of Drayton's Polyolbion, from which the example of the word is cited, hurst is explained a wood. In the north of England, it denotes a bank or sudden rising of the ground. The term, as Dr. Jamieson has observed on the Scottish usage of the word, may have been primarily used to denote the barrenness of ground, as shewn by its producing only twigs and brushwood, from the Icel. hrcys, hrys, in the pl. considered loci virgultis obsiti, et sterilia. Teut. horst. From this sense of it, an underwood might easily become the next, and then generally a wood; a rising ground, planted with trees.] A small wood; a knoll covered with trees.

To her neighboring chase the courteous forest show'd
Se just-conceived joy, that from each rising hurst,
Where many a goodlie Oak had carefullie been nurst,
The Sylvans in their songs their mirthfull meeting tell.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

To HURT. † v. a, preter. I hurt; part. pass. I have hurt. [hupst, wounded, Sax. heurtan, to strike, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — The past participle of hupstan, injuria afficere, vexare. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. To mischief; to harm.

He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. Revel. ii. 11.

Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt;
Surpris'd by unjust force, but not enthrall'd. Milton, Cimus.
The Adonis of the sea is so called because it is a loving and innocent fish, that hurts nothing that has life. Walton.

2. To wound; to pain by some bodily harm.

My heart is turn'd to stone: I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Shakespeare, Othello.

It breeds contempt

For herds to listen, or presume to pry,
When the hurt lion groans within his den. Dryden.

3. To damage; to impair.

See thou hurt not the oil and wine. Revel. vi. 6.

HURTS. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Harm; mischief.

The hurt thereby is greater than the good. Spenser.

I have slain a man to my hurt. Gen. iv. 23.

I found it stand there uncorrected, as if there had been no hurt done. Baker on Learning.

2. Wound or bruise.

Where is he wounded?

— There will be large cicatrices to shew the people: he received seven hurts in his body. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Carter adventured bravely, and received two great hurts in his body. Hayward.

The pains of sickness and hurts, hunger, thirst and cold, all men feel. Locke.

In arms and science, 'tis the same,
Our rival's hurts create our fame. Brior.

3. Injury; wrong.

Why should damage grow to the hurt of the King?
Ezra, iv. 22.

HURTER. † n. s. [from hurt.]

1. One that does harm.

2. A wounder. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

HURTFUL. adj. [hurt and full.] Mischievous; pernicious.

Secret neglect of our duty is but only our own hurt: one man's contempt of the common prayer of the church of God may be most hurtful unto many. Hooker.

The hurtful haze in the vineyard shun,
Nor plant it to receive the setting sun. Dryden, Georg.

HURTFULLY. † adv. [from hurtful.] Mischievously; perniciously. Sherwood.

HURTFULNESS. † n. s. [from hurtful.] Mischievousness; perniciousness. Sherwood.

To HURTLE. † v. n. [hurter, French; urtare, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Skinner considers hurtle as derived from hurl; or perhaps from the old Fr. heurteler for heurler, to push, or hit violently against. In the sense of encountering with violence, the word has been probably adopted from the Italian urtare, as it is a common phrase in that language for rushing on the enemy, "urtare contro i nemici." See Upton's note on Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 16.]

1. To clash; to skirmish; to run against any thing; to jostle; to meet in shock and encounter. Hammer.
"To stumble against a thing." Pr. Parv.

They drew out their swords, and hurtled together with violence. Hist. of Prince Arthur, P. i. ch. 28.

Kindness

Made him give battle to the lioness,
Who quickly fell before him; in which hurtling,
From miserable slumber I awak'd. Shakespeare, As you like it.

2. To clash; to rattle.

The noise of battle, hurtled in the air. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.
Iron sleet of arrowy shower
Hurles in the darken'd air. Gray, Ode viii.

3. To rush forward.

Sudden uprieth from her stately place
The roiall dame, and for her coche doth call:
All hurlien forth.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 16.

4. To wheel round; to turn about quickly.

His approved skill to ward,
Or strike, or hurtle round in warlike gyre.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. v. 8.

HURTLER. † v. a. [To move with violence or impetuosity. This is probably the original of hur-. Dr. Johnson. — See the etymology of the verb neuter, and the fourth sense of it. But the original meaning of hurtle seems to be to push, to thrust, in an active sense.]

↳ To push with violence.

• They hurtiliden the schip, [they thrust in the shippe, Transl. of 1578: They ran the ship aground, Pres. Translation.]

Wicliffe, Acts, xxvii. 41.

He joineth on his foe with a tronchoun,
And he him hurleth with his horse adoun.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

2. To move with violence, or rather with velocity; to whirl round; to brandish.

His harrafull club he gan to hurtle high,

• And threaten battle to the faery knight.

Spenser, F. Q.

To toss the speer, and in a warlike gyre

To hurtle my sharp sword about my head.

Selinus, Emp. of the Turkes, (1594.)

HURTLERBERRY. † n. s. [hyot-bar, Danish; heopor-beyr, Sax.] Bilberry; bacca vitis idæa.

• HURVLESS. adj. [from hurt.]

1. Innocent; harmless; innoxious; doing no harm.

Unto her home he oft would go,

Where bold and hurtless many a play he tries,

Her parents liking well it should be so;

For simple goodness shined in his eyes.

Sidney.

[She] joy'd to make proof of her cruelty

On gentle dame, so hurtless and so true.

Spenser, F. Q.

Shorter every gasp he takes,

And vain efforts and hurtless blows he makes.

Dryden, Æn.

2. Receiving no hurt.

HURTLESSLY. adv. [from hurtless.] Without harm.

Your neighbours have found you so hurtlessly strong, that they thought it better to rest in your friendship than make new trial of your enmity.

Sidney.

HURTLESSNESS. n. s. [from hurtless.] Freedom from any pernicious quality.

• HUSBAND. † n. s. [hossband, master, Danish; from house and bonda, Runick, a master; hur- bonda, the master of the house or family, and also a husband; hur-bunda, Sax. Chronicle; " husbonde, Su. Goth. from hus, domus, and bōnde, colonus, maritus, titulus olim honorificus." Sere-nius. "The Su. Goth. bonde denotes the head of a family, as opposed to a servant; a husband, as opposed to a wife; a citizen or private person, as opposed to a prince; an inhabitant of the country, as opposed to those who live in towns; and also one who possesses his own inheritance, as distinguished from those who cultivate the property of others." Dr. Jamieson. An allusion to the etymology, as Mr. Malone also has observed, occurs in Shakspeare: "You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house." Meas. for Measure.]

1. The correlative to wife; a man married to a woman.

Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,

Thy head, thy sovereign.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

• Why, woman, your husband is in his old luns again; he to takes on yonder with my husband, and so rails against all married mankind.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

This careful husband had been long away;

Whom his chaste wife and little children mourn.

Dryden.

• The contract and ceremony of marriage is the occasion of the denomination of relation of husband.

Locke.

2. The male of animals.

Ev'n though a snowy ram thou shalt behold,

Prefer him not in haste, for husband to thy fold.

Dryden.

3. An economist; a man that knows and practises the methods of frugality and profit. Its signification is always modified by some epithet implying bad or good.

Edward I. shewed himself a right good husband; owner of a lordship ill husbanded.

Davies on Ireland.

I was considering the shortness of life, and what ill husbands we are of so tender a fortune.

Collet on Fame.

4. A tiller of the ground; a farmer.

Husband's work is laborious and hard.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

I heard a great husband say, that it was a common error; to think that chalk helpeth arable grounds:

Bacon.

In those fields

The painful husband plowing up his ground,

Shall find all fret with rust, both plow and shoold.

Hakewill on Providence.

If continu'd rain

The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,

Let him forecast his work.

Dryden, Georg.

TO HUSBAND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with an husband.

Think you I am no stronger than my sex,

Being so father'd and so husbanded?

Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

If you shall prove

This ring was ever her's, you shall as easy

Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,

Where yet she never was.

Shakspeare.

In my right,

By me invested, he compeers the best.

— That were the most, if he should husband you.

Shakspeare.

2. To manage with frugality.

It will be pastime passing excellent,

If it be husbanded with modesty.

Shakspeare.

The French, wisely husbanding the possession of a victory, kept themselves within their trenches.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all

That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,

Herbert.

And give men turns of speech.

3. To till; to cultivate the ground with proper management.

A farmer cannot husband his ground, if he sits at a great

Bacon.

HUSBANDABLE. * adj. [from To husband.] Manageable with frugality.

Shertwood.

HUSBANDLESS. adj. [from husband.] Without an husband.

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;

A woman, naturally born to fears.

Shakspeare, K. John.

HUSBANDLY. adj. [from husband.] Frugal; thrifty.

Bare plots full of galls, if ye plow overthwart;

And compass it then, is a husbandly part.

Tusser

HUSBANDMAN. † n. s. [husband and man.]

1. A master of a family. See HUSBAND. Not now in use.

Sicke lay the husband-man, whose that the place is.

Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

2. One who works in tillage.

This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man, and your husbandman.

Shakspeare.

The mule being more swift in his labour than the ox, more ground was allowed to the mule by the husbandman.

Broome.

HUSBANDRY. n. s. [from husband.]

1. Tillage; manner of cultivating land.

He began with a wild method to run over all the art of husbandry, especially employing his tongue about well dunging of a field.

Sidney.

H U S

Ask'd if in husbandry he aught did know,
To plough, to plant, to reap, to sow. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
Husbandry supplieth all things necessary for food. Spekser.
Peace hath from France too long been chas'd;
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Her plenteous womb
Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakspeare.
The seeds of virtue may, by the husbandry of Christian counsel, produce better fruit than the strength of self-nature. Raleigh, Hist.

Husbandry the Spaniards wanting in the valleys of Mexico, could not make our wheat bear seed. Raleigh.

A family governed with order will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage and pasturage. Temple.

Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it, and he will find that the improvement of labour makes the value. Locke.

2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.

There's husbandry in heaven;
The candles are all out. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

You have already saved several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.

3. Care of domestick affairs.

Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house. Shakspeare.

HUSH. † interj. [Without etymology. Dr. Johnson. — Cotgrave partly points out the etymology in his translation of the French houische; "an interjection whereby silence is imposed; husht, whist, ist, not a word for your life." This leads us to hist and whist, from which we have also whish. See HIST, and TO WHIST. Chaucer uses husht for whist. To husht occurs in the old dictionary of Palsgrave, in the sense of still; and soon afterwards, in the dictionary of Huloet, the word became husht: "To husht, or to keep silence:

husht, hold thy peace." So Cotgrave, husht. It finally became hush.] Silence! be still! no noise!

The king hath done you wrong; but hush! 'tis so.
Shakspeare.

There's something else to do; hush and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakspeare, Tempest.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.] Still; silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heav'ns, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

TO HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.] To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame did blush;
Another seem'd envious or coy;
Another in her teeth did gnaw a rush;
But at these strangers presence every one did hush.
Spenser, F. Q.

TO HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence; to quiet; to appease.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be husht, and nought at all to say. Shakspeare.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn rage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blust'ring land. Shakspeare.

Speak softly;
All's husht as midnight yet. Shakspeare, Tempest.

My love would speak; my duty hushes me. Shakspeare.
When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,

H U S

Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then Hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love? Otway.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;
He will not have your exclamations now. Dryden.

Her sire at length is kind,
Calms ev'ry storm, and hushes ev'ry wind;
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.
The court was hush'd, and a whisper ran. Addison.

TO HUSH up. v. a. To suppress in silence; to forbid to be mentioned.

This matter is hush'd up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it. Pope.

HUSHMONEY. † n. s. [hush and mony.] A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

A dexterous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hushmoney sends to all the neighbours round;
His master, unsuspecting of his pranks,
Pays all the cost, and gives the villain thanks. Swift.

I expect hushmoney to be regularly sent for every folly or vice any one commits in this whole town; and I hope I may pretend to deserve it better than a chamber-maid or a valet de chambre. Tatler, Nov. 26.

HUSK. n. s. [huldsch, Dutch, or huyssken, from huys.] The outmost integument of fruits.

Do but behold yon poor and starved hand,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the skulls and husks of men. Shakspeare.

Most seeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Baron, Nat. Hist.

Thy food shall be

The fresh brook mussels, withered roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Fruits of all kinds, in coat
Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell
She gathers; tribute large! and on the board
Heaps with unparing hand. Milton, P. L.

Some steep their seeds, and some in cauldrons boil
O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
And swell the flatt'ring husks with fruitful grain. Dryden.

Some, when the press
Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse; thou, more wise, shalt steep
The husks in water, and again employ
The pond'rous engine. Philips.

Barley for ptisan was first steeped in water till it swelled;
afterwards dried in the sun, then beat till the husk was taken off, and ground. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest you feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts.

TO HUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off the outward integument.

HUSKED. † adj. [from husk.] Bearing an husk; covered with a husk. Sherwood.

HUSKINESS. * n. s. [from husky.] Hoarseness; the state of being husky.

HUSKY. † adj. [from husk.]

1. Abounding in husks; consisting of husks.

Most have found

A husky harvest from the grudging ground. Dryden, Virg.
Call all such husky and curious arts and studies, the recreations and entertainments of children, and the weak supports of the gainful trade of cheating and imposture. Spencer on Prod. p. 404.

With timely care

Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late
In vain should'st seek a strainer, to dispart
The husky terrene dregs from purer must. Philips.

2. Hoarse; having a rough or dismal sound; having a cough, formerly hesky, and hosty, "tuscicus," Orit. Vocab. See HAUSE.

Here the mouth of sad Melpomene
Is wholly bent to tragedy's discourse:—
Here means the wrathful muse, in seas of tears,
And loud laments, to tell a dismal tale;

H U S

A tale wherein she lately hath bestow'd
The husky humour of her bloody quill.

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

Proser was dead, and Sergeant Quirk
Grew husky, and had left the circuit. Antey, Pleader's Guide.

HUSSAR.* n. s. [Fr. houssart, hussart, hussard; low Lat. huzaro; Germ. husar.] Originally an Hungarian horse-soldier, light-armed. This name was given to some regiments of French cavalry at the close of the seventeenth century; and was soon afterwards introduced into our language.

They were a sort of tame husars, that were allowed in our cities, like the wild ones in our camp; who had all the privileges belonging to us, but at the same time were not tied to our discipline or laws. Taller, No. 56.

He made his breeches and his doublet of one continued piece of cloth, after the manner of the husars.

Spectator, No. 576.

HUSSITE.* n. s. One of the followers of John Huss of Prague, the reformer, and the contemporary of Wicliffe; whom Fox pithily describes as "a man of great knowledge, of a pregnant wit, and excellentie favoured for his worthie life."

Procopius despised the pope's excommunication, and the crusado he had published against the Hussites; and overcame the forces, which the emperor had sent against them.

Belletrieu, Ecc. Hist. 15. Cent.

HUSSY. n. s. [corrupted from housewife: taken in an ill sense.] A sorry or bad woman; a worthless wench. It is often used ludicrously in slight disapprobation.

Get you in, hussy, go: now will I personate this hopeful young jade. Southern, Innocent Adultery.

HUSTINGS.† n. s. [hurting, Sax. husthing, Goth. and Icel. From hus, domus, and thing, forum, conventus. Serenius. From huj, domus, and ding, res, causa, q. d. domus causarum. Lye. From hynjt and ding, q. d. supremum judicium. Somner.]

1. A council; a court held.

From the sheriff's court, in the city of London, a writ of error lies to the court of hustings before the mayor, recorder, and sheriff. Blackstone.

2. The place of meeting to choose a member of parliament.

I stood on the hustings (except when I gave my thanks to those who favoured me with their votes) less like a candidate, than an unconcerned spectator of a public meeting.

Burke, Speech at Bristol.

To HU'STLE.† v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hurtle. Dr. Johnson.—Not so, but from the Teut. hutsen, hutselen, to shake together.] To shake together in confusion.

HU'SWIFE.† n. s.

1. A bad manager; a sorry woman. It is common to use housewife in a good, and huswife or hussy in a bad sense, Dr. Johnson says. Huswife is the early form of writing housewife, and not a corruption of it, as he asserts; for if it be, by the same rule husband would be a corruption of houseband. It is the Sax. huj and wife. Our old writers use huswife, in a good sense, as the mistress of the house. See the second meaning.

Bianca

A huswife, that, by selling her desires,
Buys herself bread and cloths.

Shakespeare, Othello.

2. An economist; a thrifty woman.

Good huswife provides, ere a sickness do come,
Of sundry good things in her house to have some.

Tusser.

VOL. II.

H U T

To HU'SWIFE. v. a. [from the noun.] To manage with economy and frugality.

But huswifing the little Heaven had lent,
She duly paid a groat for quarter-rent;
And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two,
To bring the year about with much ado.

Dryden.

HU'SWIFELY.* adj. [from huswife.] Thrifty; frugal; becoming a housewife.

Good huswifely physick.

Tusser.

His [Tusser's] huswifely admonitions—are not particularly addressed to the farmer. Warton, Hist. E. P. li. 307.

HU'SWIFELY.* adv. Thriftily; like a good huswife or husband. Barret.

HU'SWIFERY.† n. s. [from huswife.]

1. Management good or bad.

Good huswifery trieth

To rise with the cock;

Ill huswifery lieth

Till nine of the clock.

Thy good lady—therein reap'd

The just reward of her high huswifery;

To have her linen, plate, and all things nigh,

When she was far.

B. Jonson, Forest.

2. Management of rural business committed to women.

If cheeses in dairie have Argus his eyes,

Tell Cissley the fault in her huswifery lies.

Tusser.

HUT.† n. s. [hutte, Saxon; hutte, German; hute, French.]

1. A poor cottage.

Our wandering saints, in woeful state,

To a small cottage came at last,

Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman,

Who kindly did these saints invite

In his poor hut to pass the night.

Swift.

Sore pierc'd by wintry wind,

How many shrink into the sordid hut

Of cheerless poverty!

Thomson.

2. A temporary building to lodge soldiers.

To HUT.* v. a. [Fr. huter.] A military expression: as, to hut troops, i. e. to lodge them in huts.

HUTCH.† n. s. [hpæcce, Sax. huche, Fr.]

1. Not simply a corn-chest, as given by Dr. Johnson, but also a chest of any kind; a coffer, called in the north country, (as Huloet also says under hutch), an ark. See ARK.

In their tabernacles, amperes, hutches; or as a mystery in their locked closets. Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1615.) p. 255.

The hutch and the boulder, the furnace and copper.

B. Jonson, Magus.

The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in hutches, or close casks.

Mortimer.

Archbishop Chichelê gave a borrowing chest to the university of Oxford, which was called Chichelê's hutch.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Comus.

2. Among farmers, a hollow trap for taking vermin alive; and also a kind of cage for keeping rabbits.

To HUTCH.* v. a. [from the noun.] To hoard; to lay up as in a chest.

In her own loins,

She hutch'd the all-washipt ore, and precious gems.

Milton, Comus.

HUTCHINSONIAN.* n. s. One of the followers, in this country, of the philosophical and religious opinions of Mr. John Hutchinson of Yorkshire, in the last century; whose notion was, that a plenum and the air are the principles of the Scripture philosophy, and whose scheme of reformation related to the original language of the Old Testament and the true sense of the Bible.

This gentleman—possibly may not call himself an Hutchinsonian, though I have presumed to introduce him here, from a similarity both in the letter and spirit of his sermon to those of that brotherhood.

Heathcote, A Word to the Hutchinsonians, (1756,) p. 15.

To Huzz. † v. n. [from the sound.] To huzz; to murmur. “Strident apes: the bees huzz.” Barret.

HUZZA.* interj. [from the Hungarian hussars, who loudly shout at the onset in battle, according to some; from hosanna, the acclamation of wishing well, according to others.] An exclamation of joy, or triumph.

Liberty, Property, and Old England, for ever, huzz!

Goldsmith, Ess. 24.

HUZZA. n. s. A shout; a cry of acclamation.

The huzzas of the rabble are the same to a bear that they are to a prince. L' Etrange.

You keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night; huzzas and hunting horns never let me cool. Arbutnot.

All fame is foreign, but of true desert;

Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:

One self-approving hour whole years outweighs

Of stupid stagers and of loud huzzas.

Pope.

To Huzz. † v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.

* A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale,

On the huzzing mob shall still prevail.

King, Cookery.

With that I huzzed, and took a jump across the table.

Tatler, No. 45.

To Huzz. † v. a. To receive or attend with acclamation.

He was huzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Addison.

HYACINTH. n. s. [ὑάκινθος, Gr. hyacinthe, Fr. hyacinthus, Lat.]

1. A flower.

It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Miller.

The silken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom,

Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. A gem.

The hyacinth is the same with the lapis hyacinthus of the ancients. It is a less shewy gem than any of the other red ones. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow; its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour. Hill on Fossils.

HYACINTHINE.† adj. [ὑακινθινός, Gr.] Made of hyacinths; resembling hyacinths.

[His] hyacinthine locks.

HYALINE. adj. [ὑάλινος, Gr.] Glassy; crystalline; made glass; resembling glass.

From heaven-gate not far, founded in view

On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea.

Milton, P. L.

HYBRID.* adj. [Gr. ὑβρις, ὑβριδος; Lat. hybrida; from ὑβρις, as it signifies a kind of adultery.] Mongrel; of different species: applied to plants, as well as animals.

We should by all means deal with our separatists, and dissenters, as St. Paul did with those judaizing, hybrid Christians.

South, Sermon. v. 318.

HYBRIDOUS. adj. [ὑβρις, Gr. hybrida, Lat.] Brought between animals of different species.

Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.

HYDATIDES. n. s. [from ὑδωρ, Gr.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropsical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lympheducts. Quincy.

All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides.

Wise man.

HYDRA. n. s. [hydra, Lat.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.

New rebellions raise

Their hydra heads, and the false North displays

Her broken league to imp her serpent wings.

Milton, Sonn.

More formidable hydra stands within,

Whose jaws with iron-teeth severely grin.

Dryden, Æn.

Subdue

The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew.

Dryden.

HYDRAGOGUES. n. s. [ὑδωρ and ἄγω, Gr. hydragogue, Fr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake most forcibly the bowels and their appendages. Quincy.

HYDRAULICAL.} adj. [from hydraulicks.] Relating to HYDRAULICK.} the conveyance of water through pipes.

Among the engines in which the air is used, pumps may be accounted, and other hydraulic engines. Derham.

We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulic engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels. Arbutnot and Pope.

HYDRAULICKS.† n. s. [ὑδωρ, water, and αὐλος, a pipe.] The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.

Hydraulics has for its object the motion of fluids. Adams.

HYDROCELE. n. s. [ὑδροκελή, Gr. hydrocele, Fr.] A watery rupture.

HYDROCEPHALUS. n. s. [ὑδωρ and κεφαλή.] A dropsy in the head.

A hydrocephalus, or dropsy of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extravasated into the ventricles of the brain. Arbutnot on Diet.

HYDROGEN.* n. s. [ὑδωρ, water, and γεννάω, to generate.] One of the principles of water; in chymical language, as it is found in the form of gas, and then called inflammable air.

HYD

Christopher Columbus, the first great discoverer of America was a man that earned his living by making and selling hydrographical maps. Chambers.

HYDROGRAPHY.† n. s. [ὕδωρ and γράφω; hydrographie, Fr.] Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.

To further the noble studie of navigation and hydrographic. Norman, New Attractive, &c. (1592), Dedic.

For the reception of which waters he had prepared a channel; how deep, or how great a part of the earth is filled with them, I suppose is beyond this man's skill in philosophy or hydrography to determine. Bp. Croft, Animadv. on Barne's Theory, p. 84.

HYDROLOGY.* n. s. [ὕδωρ and λόγος; Fr. hydrologie.] Description of the nature and properties of water in general.

HYDROMANCY. n. s. [ὕδωρ and μανία; hydromantie, Fr.] Prediction by water.

Divination was invented by the Persians: there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Ayliffe, Parergon.

HYDROMEL. n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέλι; hydromel, Fr.] Honey and water.

Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient. Mortimer.

In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were ptisans and cream of barley; hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arbuthnot.

HYDROMETER.† n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον, Gr.] An instrument to measure the extent or profundity, gravity or density, velocity or other properties, of water.

HYDROMETRY. n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον, Gr.] The act of measuring the extent of water.

HYDROPHOBIA. n. s. [ὕδρωφοβία, Gr. hydrophobie, Fr.] Dread of water.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia or dread of water is the most remarkable. Quincy.

HYDROPHOBY.* n. s. [Fr. hydrophobie.] Dread of water.

A letter from Dr. Lister to Mr. Aston, dated at York March 26. 1683, was produced, containing an account of an hydrophobia in a man bitten by a mad dog. Birch, Hist. R. S. iv. 197.

HYDRO'PICAL. } adj. [ὕδρωπικός, Gr. hydropique, Fr. from hydrops, Lat.]

HYDRO'PICK. } from hydrops, Lat.]

1. Dropsical; diseased with extravasated water.

Cantharides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydropical water. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The world's whole sap is sunk: The general balm th' hydropick earth hath drunk. Donne.

Hydropical swellings if they be pure, are pellucid. Wineman.

Hydropick wretches by degrees decay,

Growing the more, the more they waste away;

By their own ruins they augmented lye,

With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackmore.

One sort of remedy he uses in dropsies, the water of the hydropicks. Arbuthnot.

2. Resembling dropsy.

Some men's hydropick insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

Every lust is a kind of hydropick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson.

HYDROPSY.* n. s. [hydrops, Lat. ὕδρωψ, Gr. hydropisie, Fr.] Personified by Thomson for the dropsy.

Soft-swollen and pale, here lay the Hydropsy,

Unwieldy man, with belly monstrous round. Castle of Indolence.

HYDROSTATICAL. adj. [ὕδωρ and στατική, Gr.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.

HYL

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst. Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICALLY. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostatics.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: as for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically,—doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass. Bentley, Serm. vii.

HYDROSTA'TICKS.† n. s. [ὕδωρ and στατική, Gr. hydrostatique, Fr.] The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

His [Boyle's] incomparable treatises of the air and hydrostatics. Bentley, Serm. vii.

The lofty column of water issuing out of the trump of Fame, exceeded all our conceptions of the power of hydrostaticks. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 43.

HYDRO'TICK. n. s. [ὕδωρ, Greek; hydrotique, Fr.] Purger of water or phlegm.

He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydroticks and purgers of bile. Arbuthnot on Coins.

HY'DRUS.* n. s. [from ὕδωρ, Gr. water.]

1. A water-snake.

Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and elops dear. Milton, P. L.

2. In astronomy, the water-serpent; a southern constellation.

HY'EMAL.* adj. [Lat. hyemalis.] Belonging to winter: as, the hyemal solstice.

Beside vernal, estival, and autumnal made of flowers, the ancients had also hyemal garlands. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 92.

Astronomers have divided the whole face of heaven into four colures; the vernal, estival, autumnal, hyemal. Mozon, Astronom. Pl. Cards, p. 10.

To HY'EMATE. v. n. [Lat. hyemo.] To winter at a place. Cockeram.

HYEMATION.* n. s. [Lat. hyematio.] Shelter from the cold of winter.

Where we set them [exotic plants] in for hyemation. Evelyn.

HY'EN.† n. s. [hyen; Fr. hyena, Lat. ὕαινα, Gr.

HY'E'NA. } Supposed to be from the Gr. ὕς, a swine;

because the back of this animal is bristly like that of the swine.] An animal like a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep. Shakespeare.

A wonder more amazing would we find;

The hyena shews it, of a double kind:

Varying the sexes in alternate years,

In one begets, and in another bears. Dryden, Fables.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts, if thereby we understand the hy- odorata, or civet cat. Brown, Vulg. Error.

The keen hyena, fellest of the cell. Thomson.

HYGRO'METER. n. s. [ὕγρoς and μέτρον, Gr. hygrometre, Fr.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river. Arbuthnot on Air.

HY'GROSCOPE. n. s. [ὕγρoς and σκοπέω, Gr. hygroscope, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme. Quincy.

Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes. Arbuthnot.

HYGROSCO'PICK.* adj. [from hygroscope.] Having affinity to water.

Hygroscopic substances have their humidity always proportionable to the places they are in. Adams.

HYLA'ROHICAL.† adj. [ὕλη and ἀρχή, Gr.] Presiding over matter.

By this hylanthical principle, or plastick nature, so many of the vital motions of the body may be kept in play.

Hallywell, Melanpron. (1681,) p. 90.

H Y M

HYLOZOISM.* n. s. [Gr. ὕλη, matter, and ζῆν, life.] One of a sect of ancient s. heist. that held all matter to be animated and to have perception.

When they [Spinoza and his followers] speak of the intelligence and knowledge of God, they mean to attribute these powers to him in no other sense, than the ancient hylozoists attributed them to all matter; that is, that a stone, when it falls, has a sensation and consciousness; but that that consciousness is no cause at all, or power, of acting. Which kind of intelligence, in any tolerable propriety of speech, is no intelligence at all. And consequently the arguments, that proved the Supreme Cause to be properly an intelligent and active Being, do also undeniably prove that he is likewise indued with liberty and choice; which alone is the power of acting. Clarke in the Attributes, § 9.

HYM.† n. s. A species of dog; unless it is by mistake for lym, Dr. Johnson says; which it is, in the passage from Shakspeare's Lear which he cites. See LYM.

HYMEN.† n. s. [ὕμην, Gr.]

1. The god of marriage.

He wore a garland of roses and myrtles on his head, and on his shoulders a robe like an imperial mantle, white and unspotted all over, excepting only that, where it was clasped at his breast, there were two golden turtle-doves that buttoned it by their bills, which were wrought in rubies. He was called by the name of Hymen. Tatler, No. 120.

Hymen marched immediately after Love; and, seconding the good inclinations which he had inspired, joined the hands of both armies. Addison, Guard. No. 152.

2. The virginal membrane.

3. In botany, a fine delicate skin in which flowers are enclosed, while in the bud; spoken particularly of roses.

HYMENEAL.} n. s. [ὕμηναιος, Gr.] A marriage song.

And heavenly choirs the hymenean sung. Milton, P. L.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;

For her white virgins hymeneals sing. Pope.

HYMENEAL.} adj. Pertaining to marriage.

The suitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice
A signal of her hymeneal choice. Pope, Odys.

HYMN. n. s. [hymn, Fr. ὕμνος, Gr.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superior being.

As I eart, in praise of mine own dame,

So now in honour of thy mother dear,

An honourable hymn I eke should frame. Spenser.

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;

Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse. Shakspeare.

When steel grows

Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made

An overture for the wars. Shakspeare, Coriol.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.

Farewel, ye happy shades,

Where angels first should practise hymns, and string

Their tuneful harps, when they to Heav'n would sing. Dryden.

TO HYMN. v. a. [ὕμνῶ, Gr.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.

Whose easier business were to serve their Lord

High up in heaven, with songs to hymn his throne. Milton, P. L.

TO HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd

He had not left alive this patient saint,

This avvil of affronts, but sent him hence

To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryden, Span. Friar.

H Y M

HYMNICK.† adj. [ὕμνικος, Gr.] Relating to hymns.

Where she (faire Ladie) tuning her chaste lutes

Of England's Emprise to her hymnick string.

Mir. for Mag. p. 773.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes

In birds, heaven's choristers, organick throats;

Which, if they did not die, might seem to be

A tenth rank in the heaven's hierarchy. Donne.

HYMNOLOG.† n. s. [ὕμνος and λόγος, Gr. hymnologie, Fr.] A collection of hymns.

That hymnologie which the Primitive Church used at the offering of bread and wine for the Eucharist. Mede, Dia. v. 56.

TO HYM. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hyped since I saw you. Spectator.

HYPALLAG. n. s. [ὕπαλλαγή, Gr.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HYPER.* [Gr. ὑπερ, above, beyond.] A word often found in composition, in our language, usually signifying excess, or something beyond the meaning of the simple word to which it is joined.

HYPER. n. s. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,

And hypers upon them again. Prior.

HYPERASPIST.* n. s. [Lat. hyperaspistes, from the Gr. ὑπερασπιστῶν, to protect with a shield.] A defender.

I appeal to any indifferent reader, whether C. M. be not by his hyperaspist forsaken in the plain field.

Chillingworth, Works, (ed. 1704,) p. 26.

The hyperaspists of the ancients bestrode their fellows fallen in battle, and covered them with their shields.

Warburton, Note on Macbeth.

HYPERBATON.* n. s. [Latin; from the Gr. ὑπερβαίνω, to go beyond.] A figure in writing, when the words are transposed from the plain grammatical order.

If your meaning be with a violent hyperbaton to transpose the text.

Milton, Animadv. Rev. Defence.

The words are at times so transposed, as to create an hyperbaton.

Durell, Crit. Remarks on Job, Pref.

HYPERBOLA. n. s. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερ and βάλλω.]

In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolic section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentric. Bentley.

HYPERBOLE. n. s. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολή, Gr.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him. Shakspeare.

Terms unsquar'd,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakespeare

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects. Glennville

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight. Graville
The common people understand rallery, or at least rhetorick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense. Swift

HYPERBO' LICAL.† } adj. [hyperbolique, French; from HYPERBO' LICK. } hyperbola.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Calculated in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and beset with hyperbolick lines. Grew, Museum

The horny or pelucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray on the Creation

2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

An hyperbolical liar, a flatterer, a parasite. Burton, Anal. of Mel. To the Reader

Look upon vices and vicious objects with hyperbolical eyes, and rather enlarge their dimensions, that their unseen deformities may not escape thy sense. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 3.

There are always some fools that can commend nothing but with hyperbolick expressions. King Charles, Lett. to Henderson, p. 56.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense. Boyle

HYPERBO' LICALY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically. Brown
Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible. Broome, Notes on the Odyssey

HYPERBO' LIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBOLIST.* n. s. [from hyperbole.] One who hyperbolizes.

I cease to think the Psalmist an hyperbolist for comparing the transcendent sweetness of God's Word to that inferior one of honey, which is like it in nothing more, than in that of both their suavities experience gives much advantage to our notions than descriptions can. Boyle on the Style of Hol. Script. p. 253.

To HYPERBOLIZE.* v. n. [from hyperbole.] To speak or write with exaggeration or extenuation.

You have heard — how some of the ancientest fathers do speak, and how they hyperbolize sometimes, in some points, in their popular sermons. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625.) p. 260.

The Spanish traveller was so habituated to hyperbolize. Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 178.

Which if but a rhetorical flourish, doth yet hyperbolize into blasphemy. Fuller, Holy War, p. 244.

To HYPERBOLIZE.* v. a. To exaggerate or extenuate.

Vain people, hyperbolizing his fact, — he grew by their flattery into that madness of conceit. Folgerby, Atheom. (1622.) p. 203.
Come, Man,

Hyperbolized nothing! know thy span. Crashaw, Poems, p. 96.

HYPERBO' REAN.† n. s. [hyperboëen, French; hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern.

The body moulded by the clime endures
The Equator heats and Hyperborean frost. Armstrong
The Hyperborean ice he wander'd o'er
And solitary roam'd round Tanais's shore. J. Warton's Virgil

HYPERCATALECTICK.* adj. [ὑπερ, and catalectick.]

Exceeding the measure; applied to verses having a syllable or two too many at the end.

HYPERCRITICK.* n. s. [hypercritique, Fr. hyper and critique.] A critic exact or captious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages. Dryden

HYPERCRITICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punctilios, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to.

Evelyn

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner. Swift

HYPERDULIA.* } n. s. [ὑπερ and dulia.] A super-HYPERDULY. } rior kind of service; among the Romagists, to the Virgin Mary. See DULIA.

From whom our Romagists did first learn their hyperdulia, or transcendent kind of service, wherewith they worship the Virgin Mary. Abp. Usher, Answ. to the Jes. Malone, p. 356.

From all Romish dulia, and hyperdulia, Good Lord deliver us. Ibid. p. 369.

Call you this devotion, as you please, whether duly or hyperduly. Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, p. 352.

HYPERICON.* n. s. [Latin.] In botany, St. John's wort.

Hypericon, called "fuga demonum," reckoned among sacred magical plants, on account of the Druids using them. Stukeley, Palæogr. Sacr. p. 16.

HYPERMETER. n. s. [ὑπερ and μέτρον.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club. Addison

H Y P

HYPOCHONDRIA.* n. s. [from hypochondres.] Melancholy. Personified by Thomson. The proper substantive is hypochondriacism; though hypochondriasm has been used, but less properly. See HYPOCHONDRIACAL.

Moping here did Hypochondria set,
Mother of spleen, in robes of various dye,
Who vexed was full oft with ugly fit,
And some her frantick deem'd, and some her deem'd a wit.
Thomson, Cattle of Indolence.

HYPOCHONDRIACAL.† } adj. [from hypochondriaque, Fr.
HYPOCHONDRIACK. } from hypochondres.]

1. Of or belonging to the hypochondres; also melancholical. See the next sense. Bullockar.

2. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination. A straightness of breath, which I should be glad to know whether you observe in other hypochondriacal patients. Wotton, Rem. p. 366.

3. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Such is the hypochondriac, melancholy complexion of us islanders, that we seem made of butter, every accident makes such a deep impression upon us. Bp. Berkeley, Lett. 1746, Life, &c. p. 182.

HYPOCHONDRIACK.* n. s. One who is melancholy, or disordered in imagination.

How the humours of the body arrive at an ability thus to impregnate the mind with conceits wild and monstrous beyond the varieties of Africa, is an enquiry not pertinent here; but to question that so they can, is to speak ourselves strangers to all the stories of hypochondriacks [which] books and discourses abound withal. Spencer on Vulg. Prophecies, (1665,) p. 98.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of the most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Chr. Piety.

HYPOCHONDRIACISM.* n. s. [from hypochondriack.] Melancholy; disordered imagination.

In hypochondriacism the insanity not being formed, there is for the most part a capacity for action. Johnstone on Madness, p. 25.

HYPOCHONDRIASIS.* n. s. Hypochondriack affection or passion.

Mental affections produce hypochondriasis, by creating a disorder in the stomach and intestines, and in the nervous system. Chrichton on Mental Derangement, p. 200.

HYPOCHONDRIY.* n. s. [See HYPOCHONDRES.] One of the two regions called the hypochondres. This word has been overlooked, by our lexicographers, as a noun with the singular number.

If from the liver, there is usually a pain in the right hypochondry; if from the spleen, hardness and grief in the left hypochondry. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 200.

Envy swells the hypochondries, which, by drinking up the nourishment of the neighbouring parts, makes the whole body lean and meager. Scott, Christian Life, P. iii. ch. 3.

HYPOCRISY.† n. s. [from ὑπόκρισις, Fr. hypocrisis, Gr. hypocrisis, to feign.] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

H Y P

Laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies.

1 Pet. ii. 1.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden, Fab.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.

HYPOCRITE. n. s. [from hypocrite, Fr. ὑποκρίτης, Gr.]

1. A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shakespeare.

A wise man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Ecclesiastes, vi. 11.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain;
Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Dryden.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

2. A dissembler.

Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass

Suffices virtue: but may hypocrites,
Who slyly speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarn'd drink on,
And through intemperance grow a while sincere. Philips.

HYPOCRITICAL.† } adj. [from hypocrite.] Dissemb-

HYPOCRITICK. } ling; insincere; appearing differently from the reality. Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed in hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others skew their hypocritical face. Swift.

HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay, hypocritically, abusing at once their proselytes and their religion. Gov. of the Tongue.

HYPOGASTRICK. adj. [from hypogastrique, Fr. ὑπο and γαστήρ, Gr.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wiseman.

HYPOGEUM. n. s. [from ὑπο and γῆ, Gr.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPOSTASIS.† n. s. [from hypostase, Fr. ὑπόστασις, Gr.]

1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those comprised in the ancient simple article. Hammond.

3. In medicine, sediment of urine.

Here's an hypostasis argues a very bad stomach. Nabbes, Microcosm.

HYPOSTATICAL.† adj. [from hypostatique, Fr. from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carnades warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Personal; distinctly personal.

Beside that grounded upon the hypostatical union; beside that glorious condition upon his resurrection; there was yet another and that more proper ascension. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

HYP

HYPOSTATICALY. * adv. [from hypostatical.] Personally.

That they should see all things and transactions, hear all prayers and orations, "in speculo divinitatis," is alike incredible; a thing which the humanity of Christ himself, though hypothetically united to the divinity, did not pretend to.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

HYPOTENUSE. n. s. [hypotenuse, Fr. hypoténuse, Gr.]

The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

TO HYPOTHECATE. * v. a. [Lat. hypotheca, a pledge.]

- To pawn; to give in pledge.
- Whether they, to whom this new pledge is hypothecated, have redeemed their own; — I leave it to those, who recollect that memoranda debate, to determine.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

HYPOTHESIS. * n. s. [hypothese, Fr. hypothèse, Gr.]

Our word was pronounced by Hæylin, in 1656, new and uncouth.] A supposition; a system

- formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole intelligible. South.

With imagin'd sovereignty

- Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns:
He reigns: how long? till some usurper rise;
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns.

Prior.

HYPOTHE'TICAL. * adj. [hypothétique, Fr. from hypo-

- HYPOTHE'TICK. } pothesis.] Including a supposition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts.

HYPOTHE'TICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.

HYT

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically. Broome, Notes to Pope's Dunciad.

HYRSE. * n. s. [German, hirse.] In Botany, millet. Coles.

HYRST. } Are all from the Sax. hýrst, a wood or HURST. } grove. Gibson.
HERST. }

HYSSOP. n. s. [hyssope, Fr. hyssopus, Lat.] A verticillate plant.

It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture. Millet.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is now the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYSTERICAL. * adj. [hysterique, Fr. ύστερικος, Gr.]

1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike an astonishment into spectators. Harvey on Consumptions.

- Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floyer on the Humours.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who gave th' hysterick or poetick fit. Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbutnot and Pope.

HYSTERICKS. n. s. [ύστερικος, Gr.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

HYSTERON-PROTERON. * n. s. [ύστερον, πρότερον, Gr.] A rhetorical figure: when that is last said, which was first done. Peachment.

A reek term, sometimes used in derision of that which is spoken or done preposterously, or quite contrary. We call it in English, The cart before the horse. Bullockar.

HYTHE. * n. s. A port. See HITHE.
